New York cops threatened Buddy with arrest for blocking Broadway traffic when he appeared personally at the Paramount Theatre, New York. He's riding an amazing crest of popularity. Get aboard with him.

He proved in "Close Harmony" and "Safety in Numbers" that musical romance is his forte. He'll prove it more than ever in 1930-31.

Clean, wholesome, refreshingly young and exuberant, Buddy Rogers is truly America's Boy Friend. He comes to you straight from the biggest hit he ever made—"Safety in Numbers"—the musical love-drama ace of 1930. He gets the young folks—and they're 70% of theatre patronage.

The magnetic vagabond of "Innocents of Paris". The naughty, irresistible Prince of "The Love Parade". The exuberant American "beezness" man of "The Big Pond". The man who cornered all the legit theatre business of Broadway in two weeks of personal appearances at the Fulton Theatre. The one and only Chevalier!

MAURICE CHEVALIER

Coming in Specials

"You brought a new kind of love to me", Maurice sings jauntily in "The Big Pond"—and thousands of women motion picture fans sing it back to him!

Seldom has a new personality secured such a strangle-hold upon the affections of the American theatre-going public in such a short time as has Chevalier.

"Within a year he will be the Idol of the American Screen!" wrote a conservative critic on a New York daily of Maurice in "Innocents of Paris". Her prediction has come true.

Check the specials in this announcement in which Chevalier appears and mark "Surefire Record Smasher" after each!

THE VERSATILE CHARMER OF THE SCREEN

NANCY CARROLL

In Two Starring Dramas

We made the full length drawing of Nancy on the right before we saw "The Devil's Holiday" and the new Nancy Carroll. The drawing shows her as the alluring charmer of such hits as "Sweetie" and "Honey".

"The Devil's Holiday" will skyrocket Nancy Carroll into the front rank of the greatest dramatic actresses of our times! The revelation is amazing. It will be the talk of the business.

While you'll still get this star in pictures of the "Sweetie" type, her two starring vehicles will be confined to stories that give full rich rein to her remarkable dramatic ability. You can count on something surprisingly new, and box office to the core.

No actress on the screen today enjoys a greater or more loyal personal following than lovely, red-headed Nancy Carroll. Starting with "Abie's Irish Rose" she has come like a whirlwind. She's the Sweetheart of the Talkies—and no foolin'.

The past season has seen a meteoric rise to increased popularity of Gary Cooper. They talked about him in "The Shopworn Angel." They cheered him to the echo in "The Virginian" and "The Texan" and yelled for more. Now you can give them a greater Cooper than ever.

GARY COOPER

In Big Specials Only

The public demands big outdoor pictures. Paramount, especially the leader in this type of entertainment, is announcing elsewhere in these pages a number of spectacular action specials to be filmed in the open. In four of them the hero is that favorite he-man star—Gary Cooper.

A Montana cowboy in real life and a splendid type of tall, sinewy, wholesome American manhood, Gary is the ideal talking picture star that the public today demands.

Owing to his frequent appearances in specials, no Cooper starring pictures will be announced at this time. His name in a cast is box office insurance enough for the smart showman.

RICHARD ARLEN

Star in Four Westerns

The first: "SPANISH ACRES". With Harry Green, Eugene Pallette and Rosita Moreno. From Hal Evarts' all-action novel.

Headline favorites of today. Young money stars flashing to nation-wide fame. Therein lies the strength of Paramount's amazing roster of all-big names.

Dick Arlen is an example. Personification of stalwart, good looking, action-full Young America. Especially fine in strong Western roles. "Steve" of "The Virginian". Dashing hero of "The Light of Western Stars" and "The Border Legion".

The public clamors for Arlen in more Westerns. Here's a chance for you to cash in on this demand with a quartet of Arlen Western knockouts.

When Dick Arlen plays in St. Paul, his home town declares a holiday! He's hero also to the Royal Air Force, who remember him as a daredevil young pilot. And to the University of Pennsylvania, where he starred in athletics. And, most of all, to the movie millions, who know a great boy and a fine actor when they see one.

JACK OAKIE

In a Trio of Laff Riots

The current season goes down in m. p. history as the year of The Great Oakie Grin Invasion. "Fast Company," "Sweetie," "Hit the Deck," "Paramount on Parade" and other hits brought him stardom. "The Social Lion" and "The Sap from Syracuse" will clinch it. The public today pays big for real laughs. Jack's the boy to give them.

* The first: "TOPLITZKY OF NOTRE DAME." Oakie as "Ten Yard" Toplitsky, son of a Jewish father and Irish mother, makes the Fighting Irish grid team and laughs and bucks his way to fame.

The second: "MERTON OF THE TALKIES." Fresh from the tall timbers, Jack invades Hollywood to show the big stars how to do their stuff. With side-splitting results.

The third: To be announced. Typically Oakie.

The Oakie craze has swept the country from coast to coast. Jack's name in electrics means a box-office stampede. Cash in!

* Owing to a change in studio plans, made after the remainder of this page was printed, "TOPLITZKY OF NOTRE DAME" will not be produced. Another vehicle will be selected for the first Oakie.

RUTH CHATTERTON

The First Lady of the Screen — that's the title critics and public have awarded Miss Chatterton after her splendid work in "Madame X", "The Doctor's Secret", "The Laughing Lady" and "Sarah and Son". Paramount plans still greater Chatterton triumphs.

THREE STRONG CO-STARRING DRAMAS

THE FIRST

"THE BETTER WIFE"

From Gouverneur Morris' unusual story of a polished gentleman who, enraged by his wife's divorce, picks a nobody from the gutter and marries her.

THE SECOND

"NEW MORALS"

By Frederick Lonsdale. Ludwig Berger Production.

THE THIRD

CLIVE BROOK

No better starring mate could be chosen for the brilliant Ruth Chatterton than the splendid, distinguished Clive Brook. Their marvelous work together in "The Laughing Lady" will be remembered by film fans everywhere. Seeing them paired again will fill theatres.

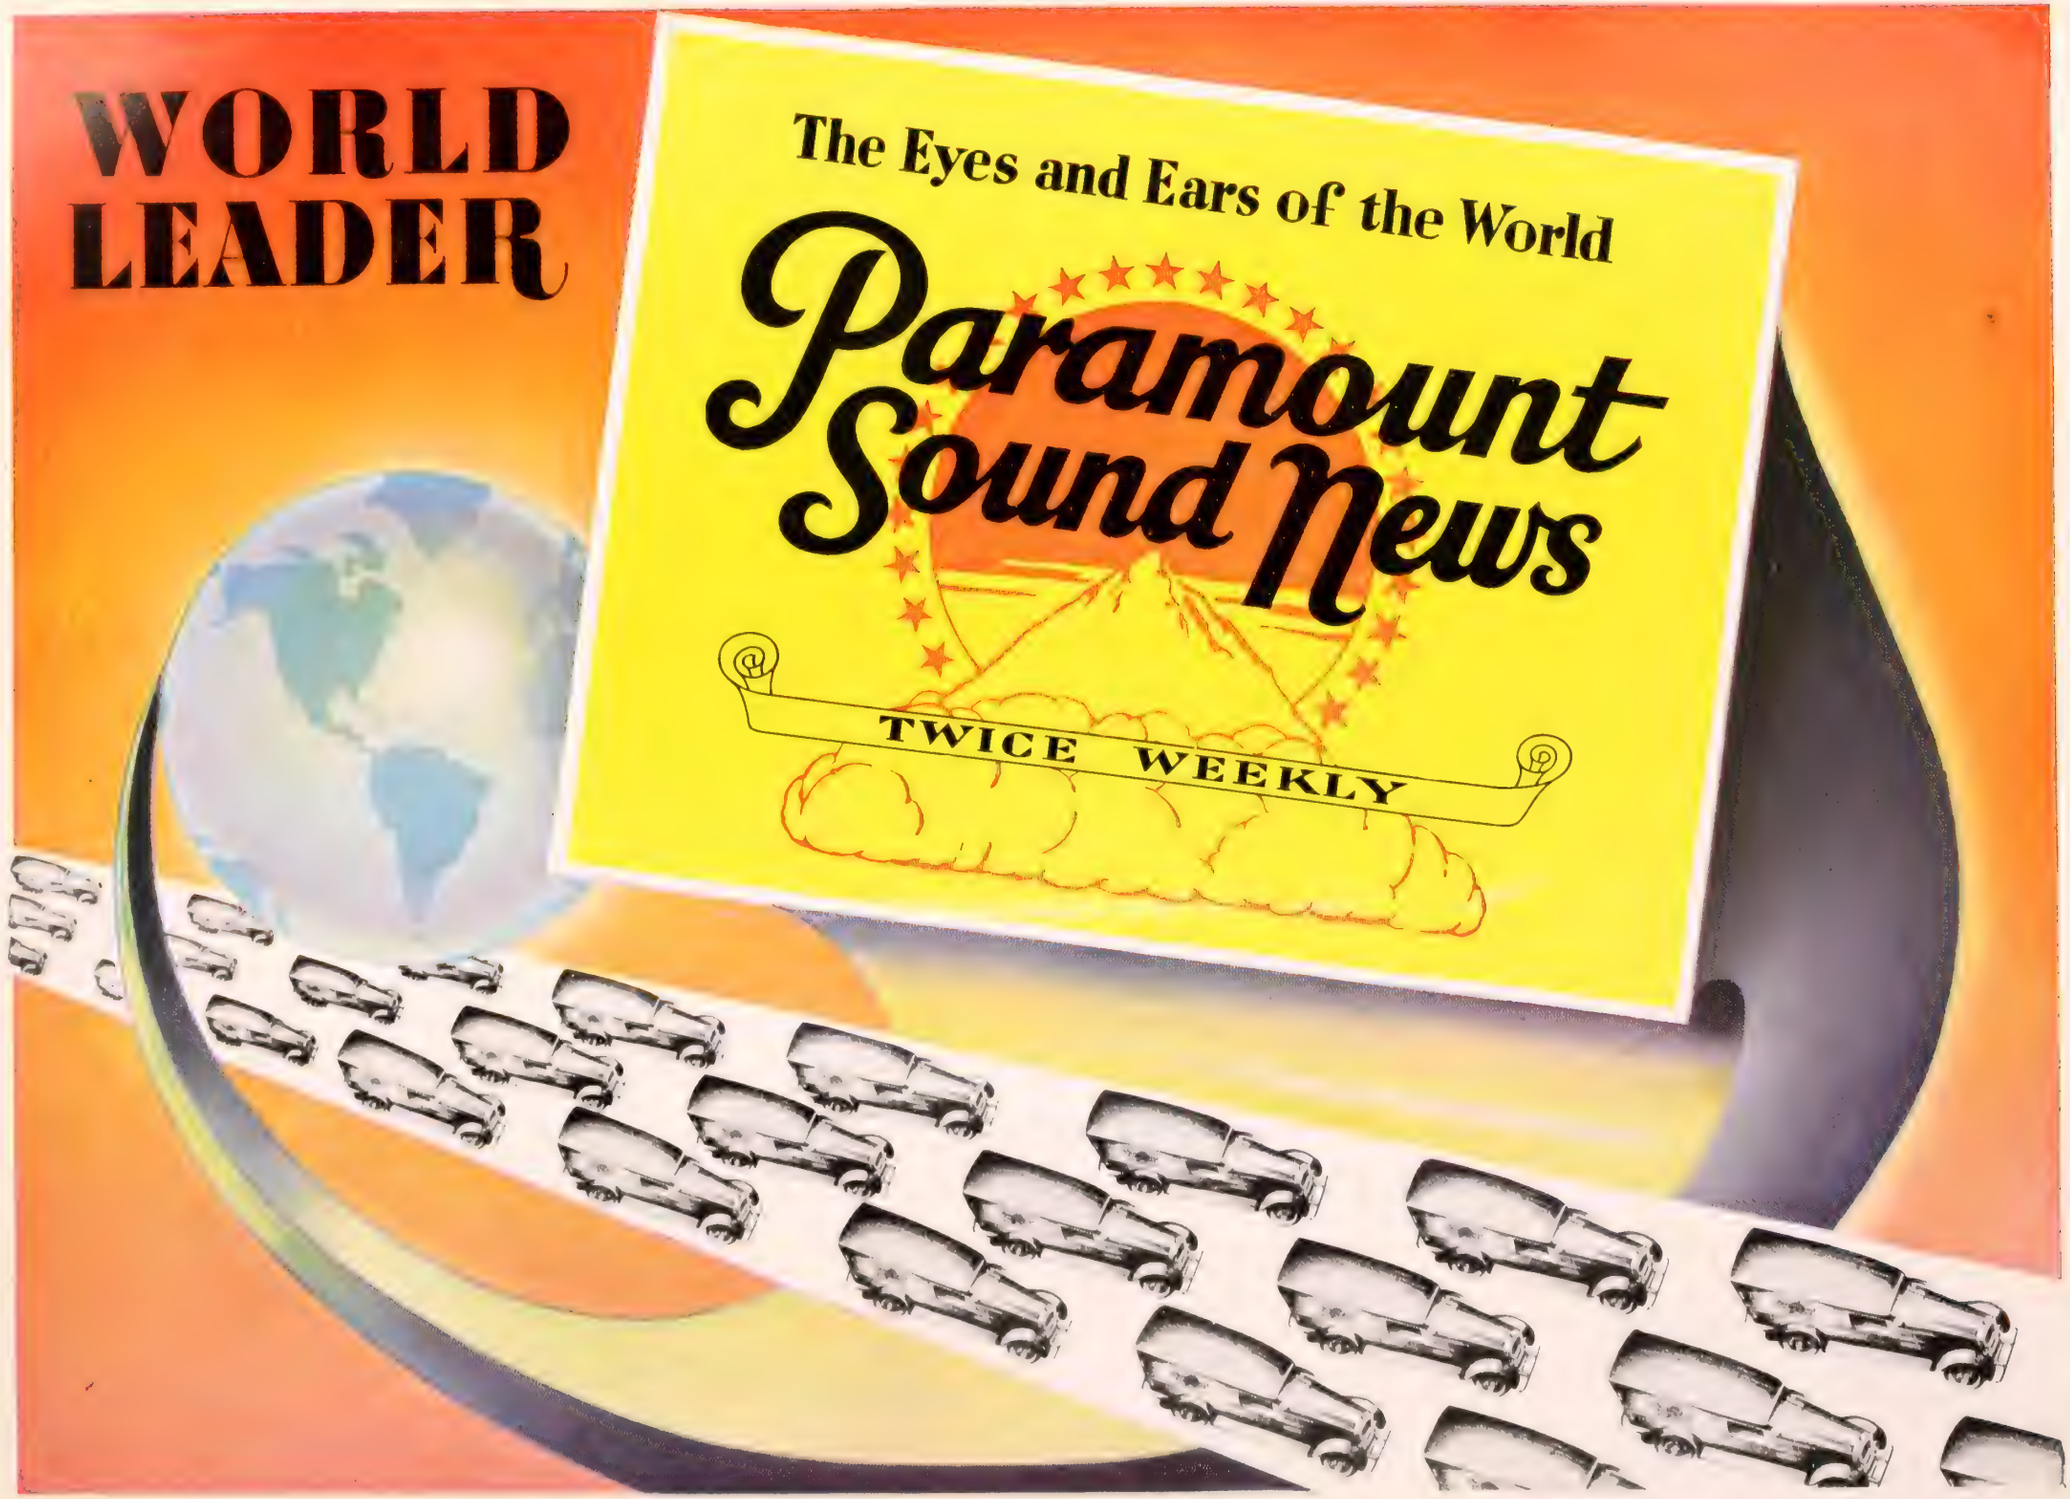
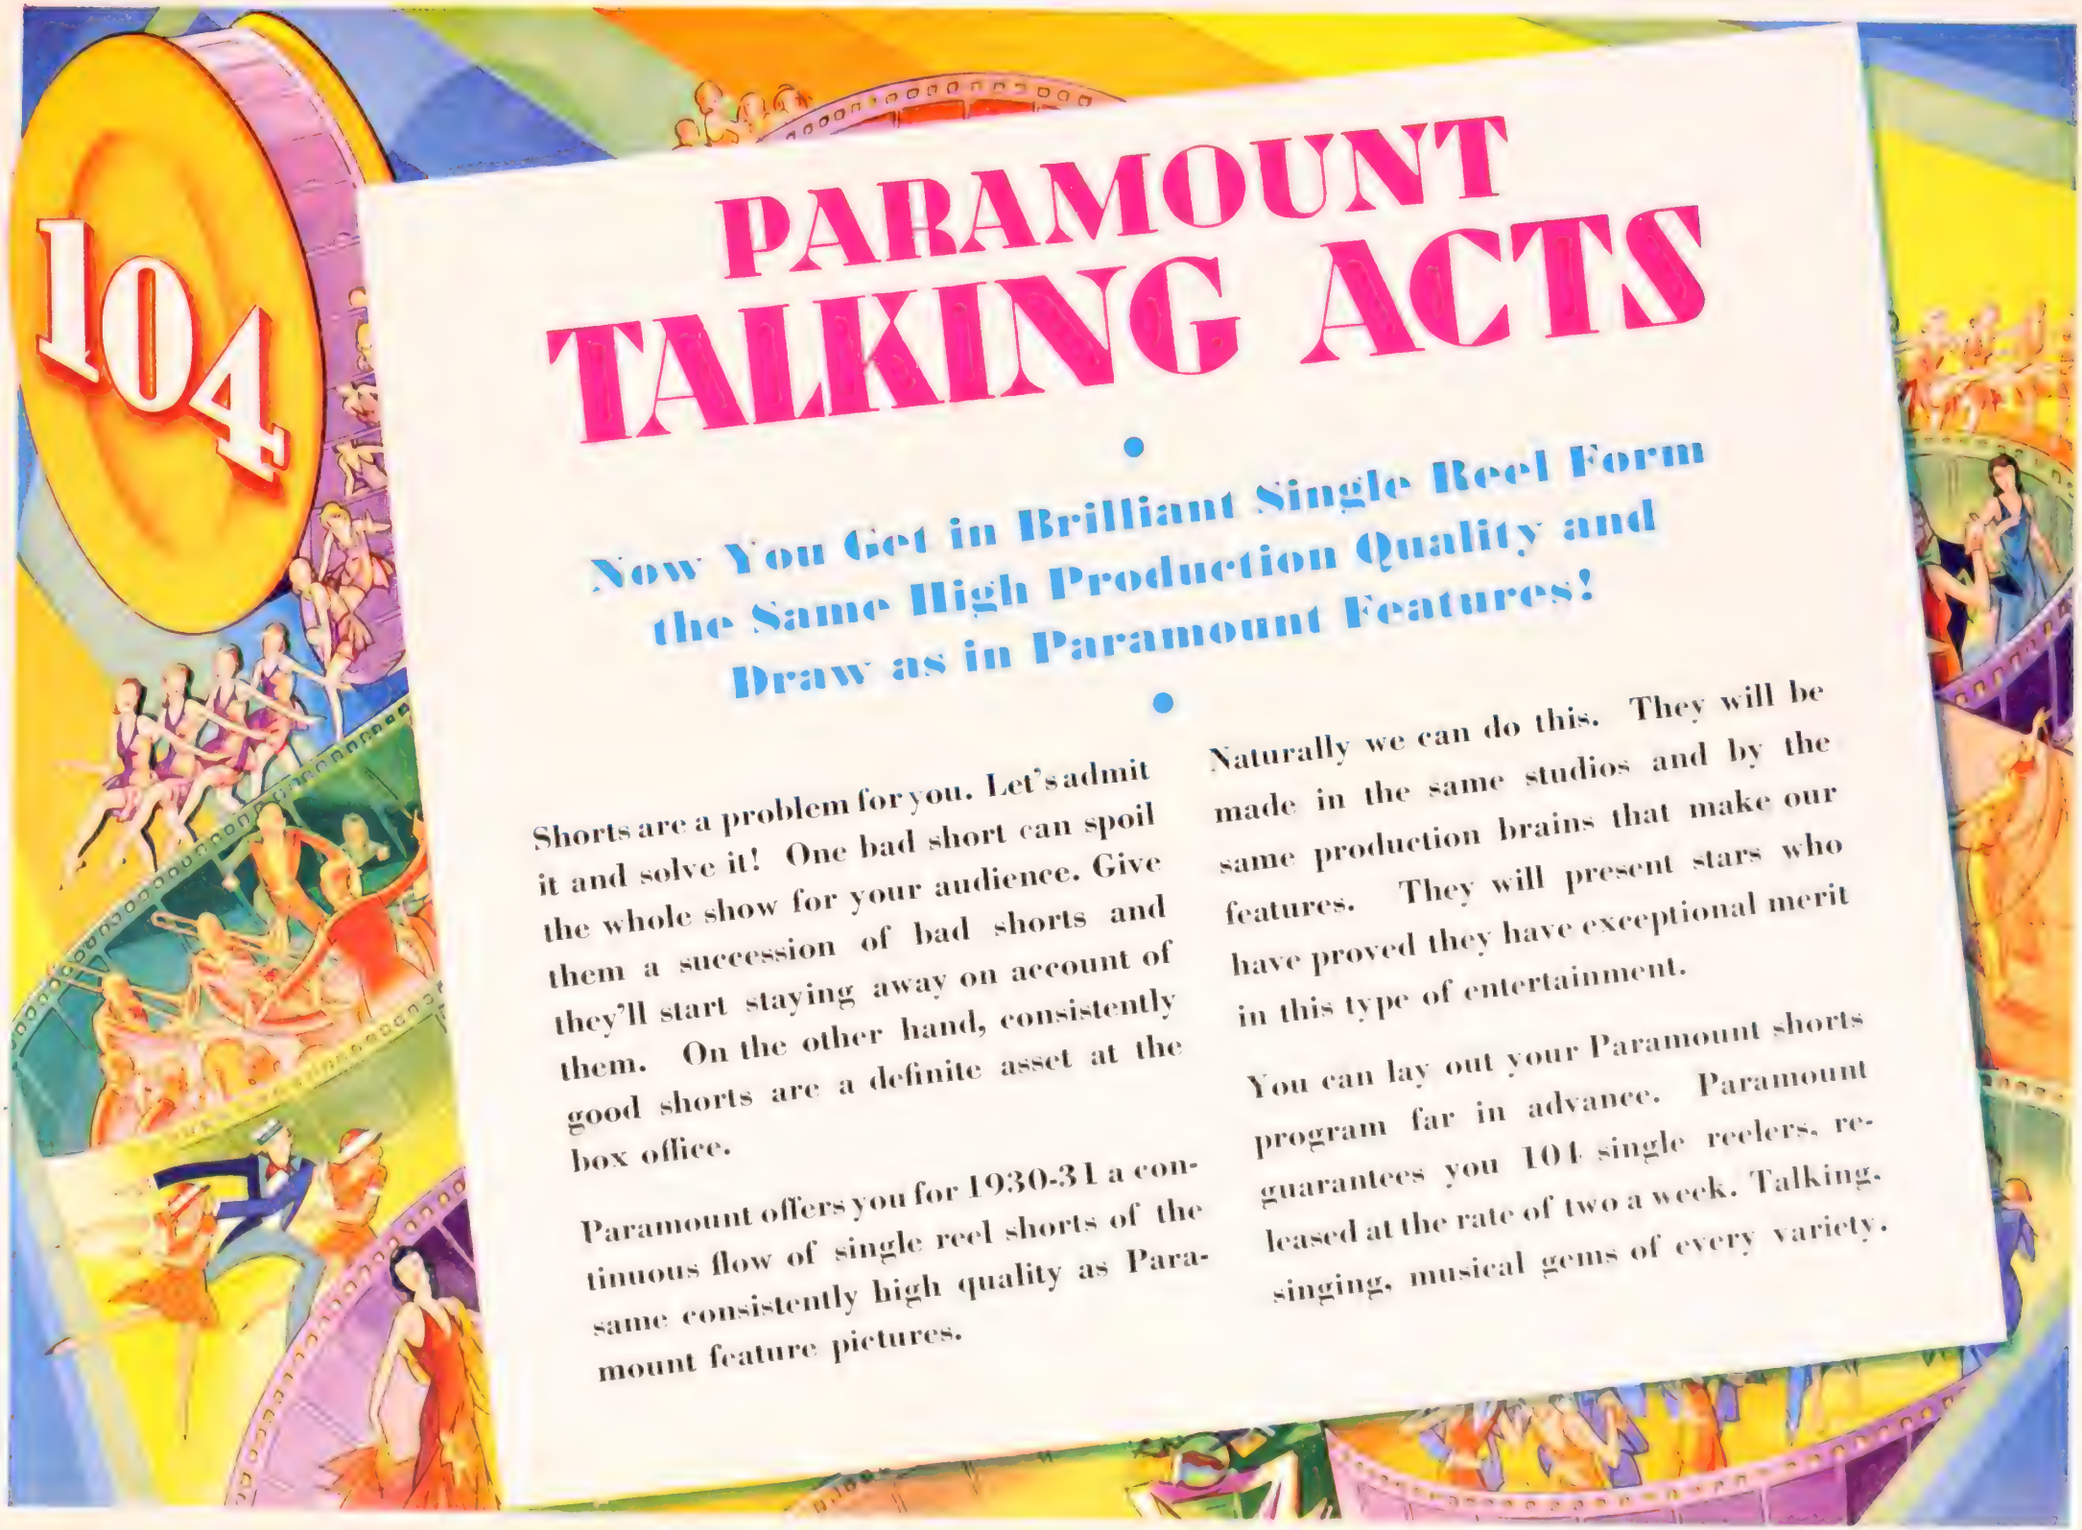
Changing Shorts from a Problem to a Pleasure!

THE COMPLETE IDEAL PROGRAM OF SHORTS FOR SHOWMEN

THE program of Paramount Short Features for 1930-31 outlined in the pages that follow was compiled only after a long and careful survey of the entire shorts situation today conducted through our own theatre organization.



We discovered at first hand what types of shorts were most popular with the public and in what numbers. We obtained accurate information as to what quality and quantity of shorts best balanced the shows in all kinds of theatres. On the basis of this investigation we compiled what we believe is the first complete, ideal, practical shorts program ever offered.



You demand quality. We promise you shorts of the same high standard as Paramount features.

You demand variety. Here it is: a truly brilliant Sound News, a new kind of ultra-modern magazine reel in Paramount Pictorial, two single-reel Acts each week comprising every species of class flash entertainment, two screamingly funny two-reel Comedies each month, eighteen releases each of the proven popular Screen Songs and Talkartoons.

You demand definite releases that can be dated in advance. We will deliver these shorts exactly when and as promised.

Book Paramount Shorts for the coming season and your shorts problem will become a pleasure.

PARAMOUNT TALKING ACTS

Now You Get in Brilliant Single Reel Form the Same High Production Quality and Draw as in Paramount Features!

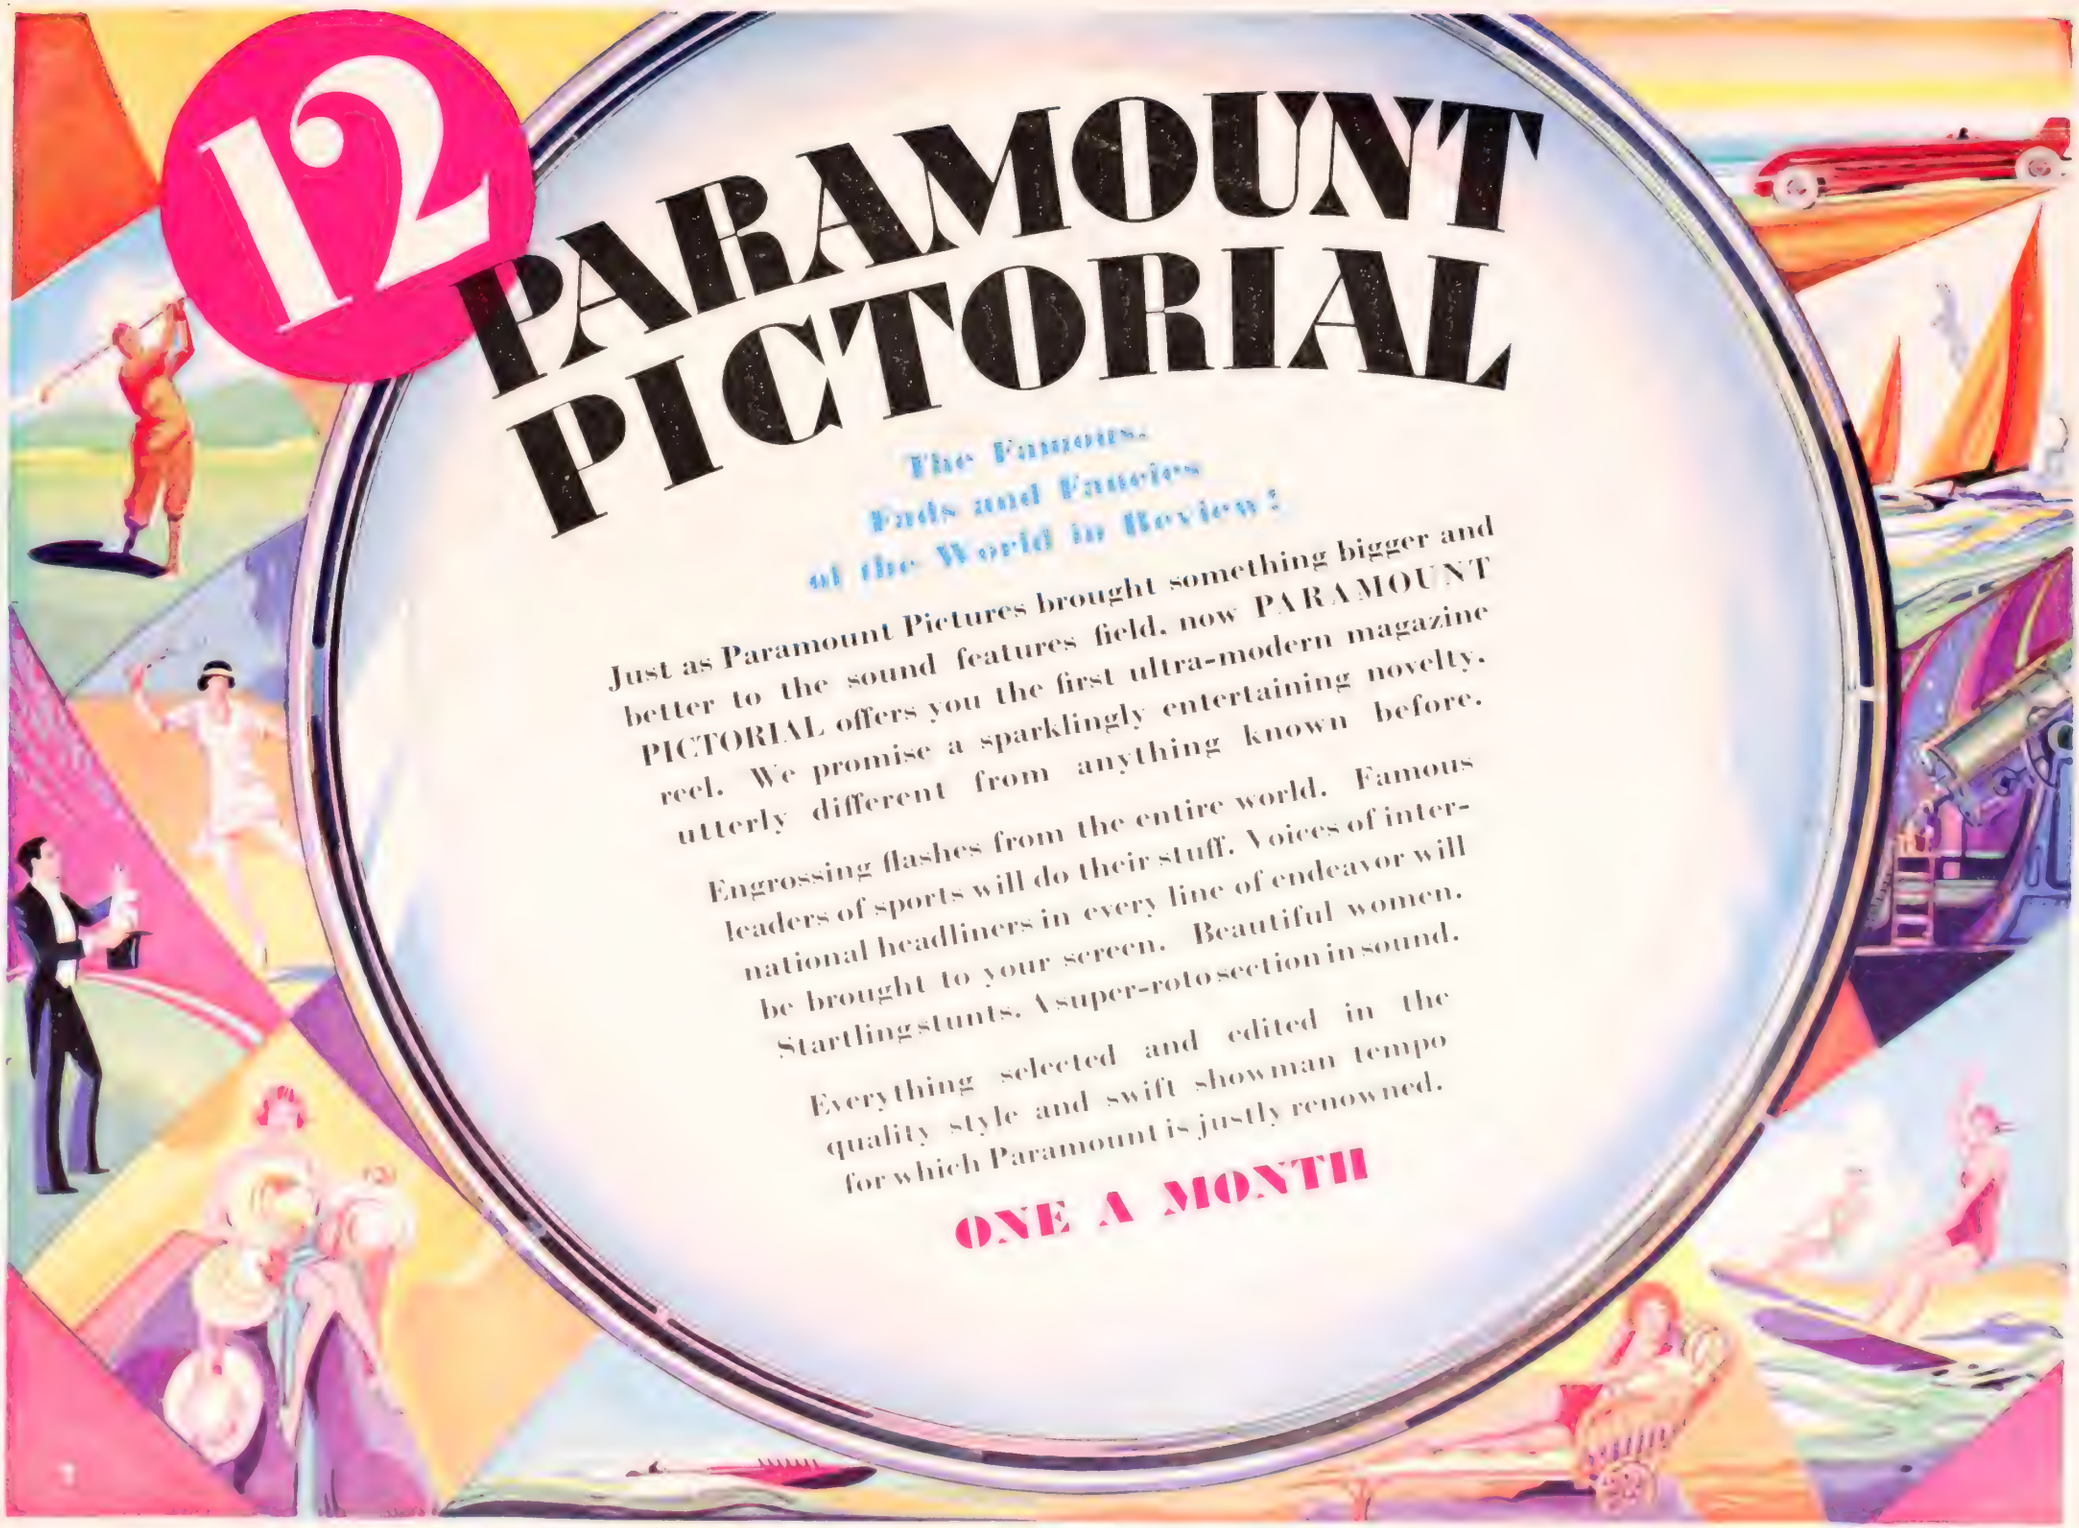
Shorts are a problem for you. Let's admit it and solve it! One bad short can spoil the whole show for your audience. Give them a succession of bad shorts and they'll start staying away on account of them. On the other hand, consistently good shorts are a definite asset at the box office.

Paramount offers you for 1930-31 a continuous flow of single reel shorts of the same consistently high quality as Paramount feature pictures.

Naturally we can do this. They will be made in the same studios and by the same production brains that make our features. They will present stars who have proved they have exceptional merit in this type of entertainment.

You can lay out your Paramount shorts program far in advance. Paramount guarantees you 104 single reelers, released at the rate of two a week. Talking, singing, musical gems of every variety.

PARAMOUNT SATISFIES DEMAND FOR GOOD 2-REEL LAUGHERS!



"Good comedy shorts are in big demand," says Variety in its April 16th issue. It's true. And here's the way to satisfy it—26 Paramount 2-Reel Comedies in 1930-31. Released at the rate of one every other week.

Paramount has always been famous for its success with comedy. Every year this company produces the outstanding comedy hits in the feature market. The greatest comedians of today are found in Paramount feature releases—Moran and Mack, Harold Lloyd, Marx Brothers, Oakie, Gallagher, Harry Green and many others.

Now Paramount is using the same surefire comedy production methods to make laugh gems in two reels. Big name comedians will be featured. Plenty of care and money will be spent. We promise a series of Paramount Comedies that will travel a smile a minute ahead of anything else in the field.

The first group in the series is now in production and will be ready for screening soon.

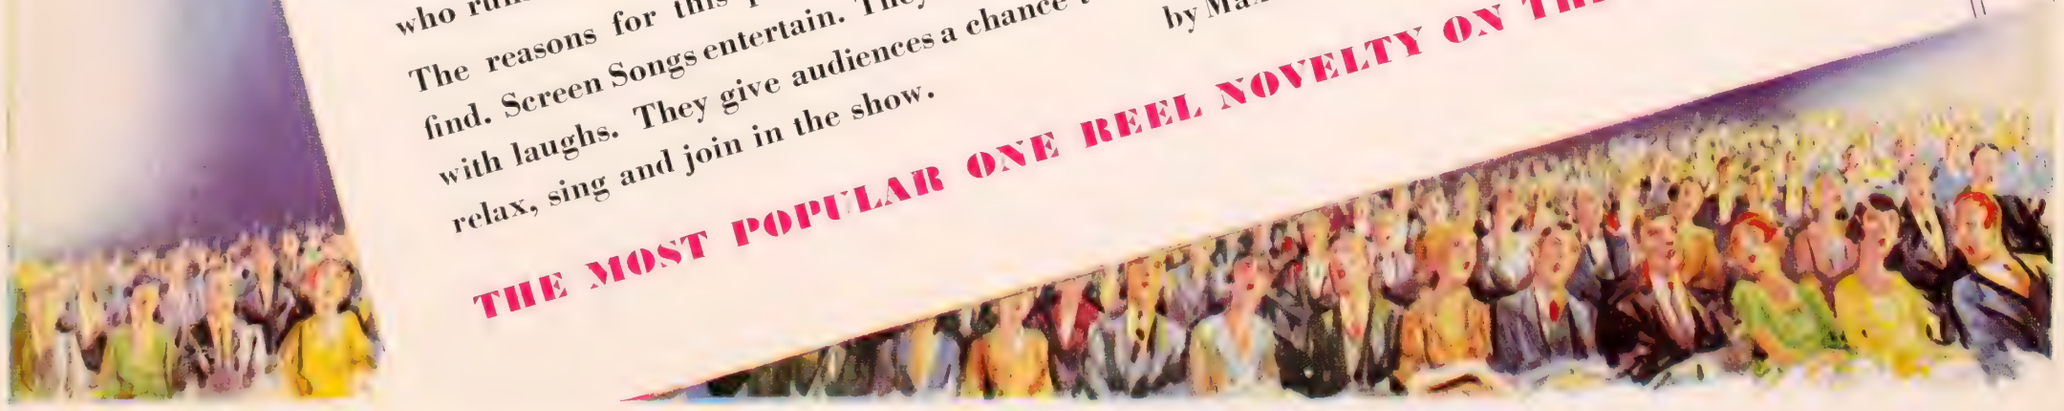
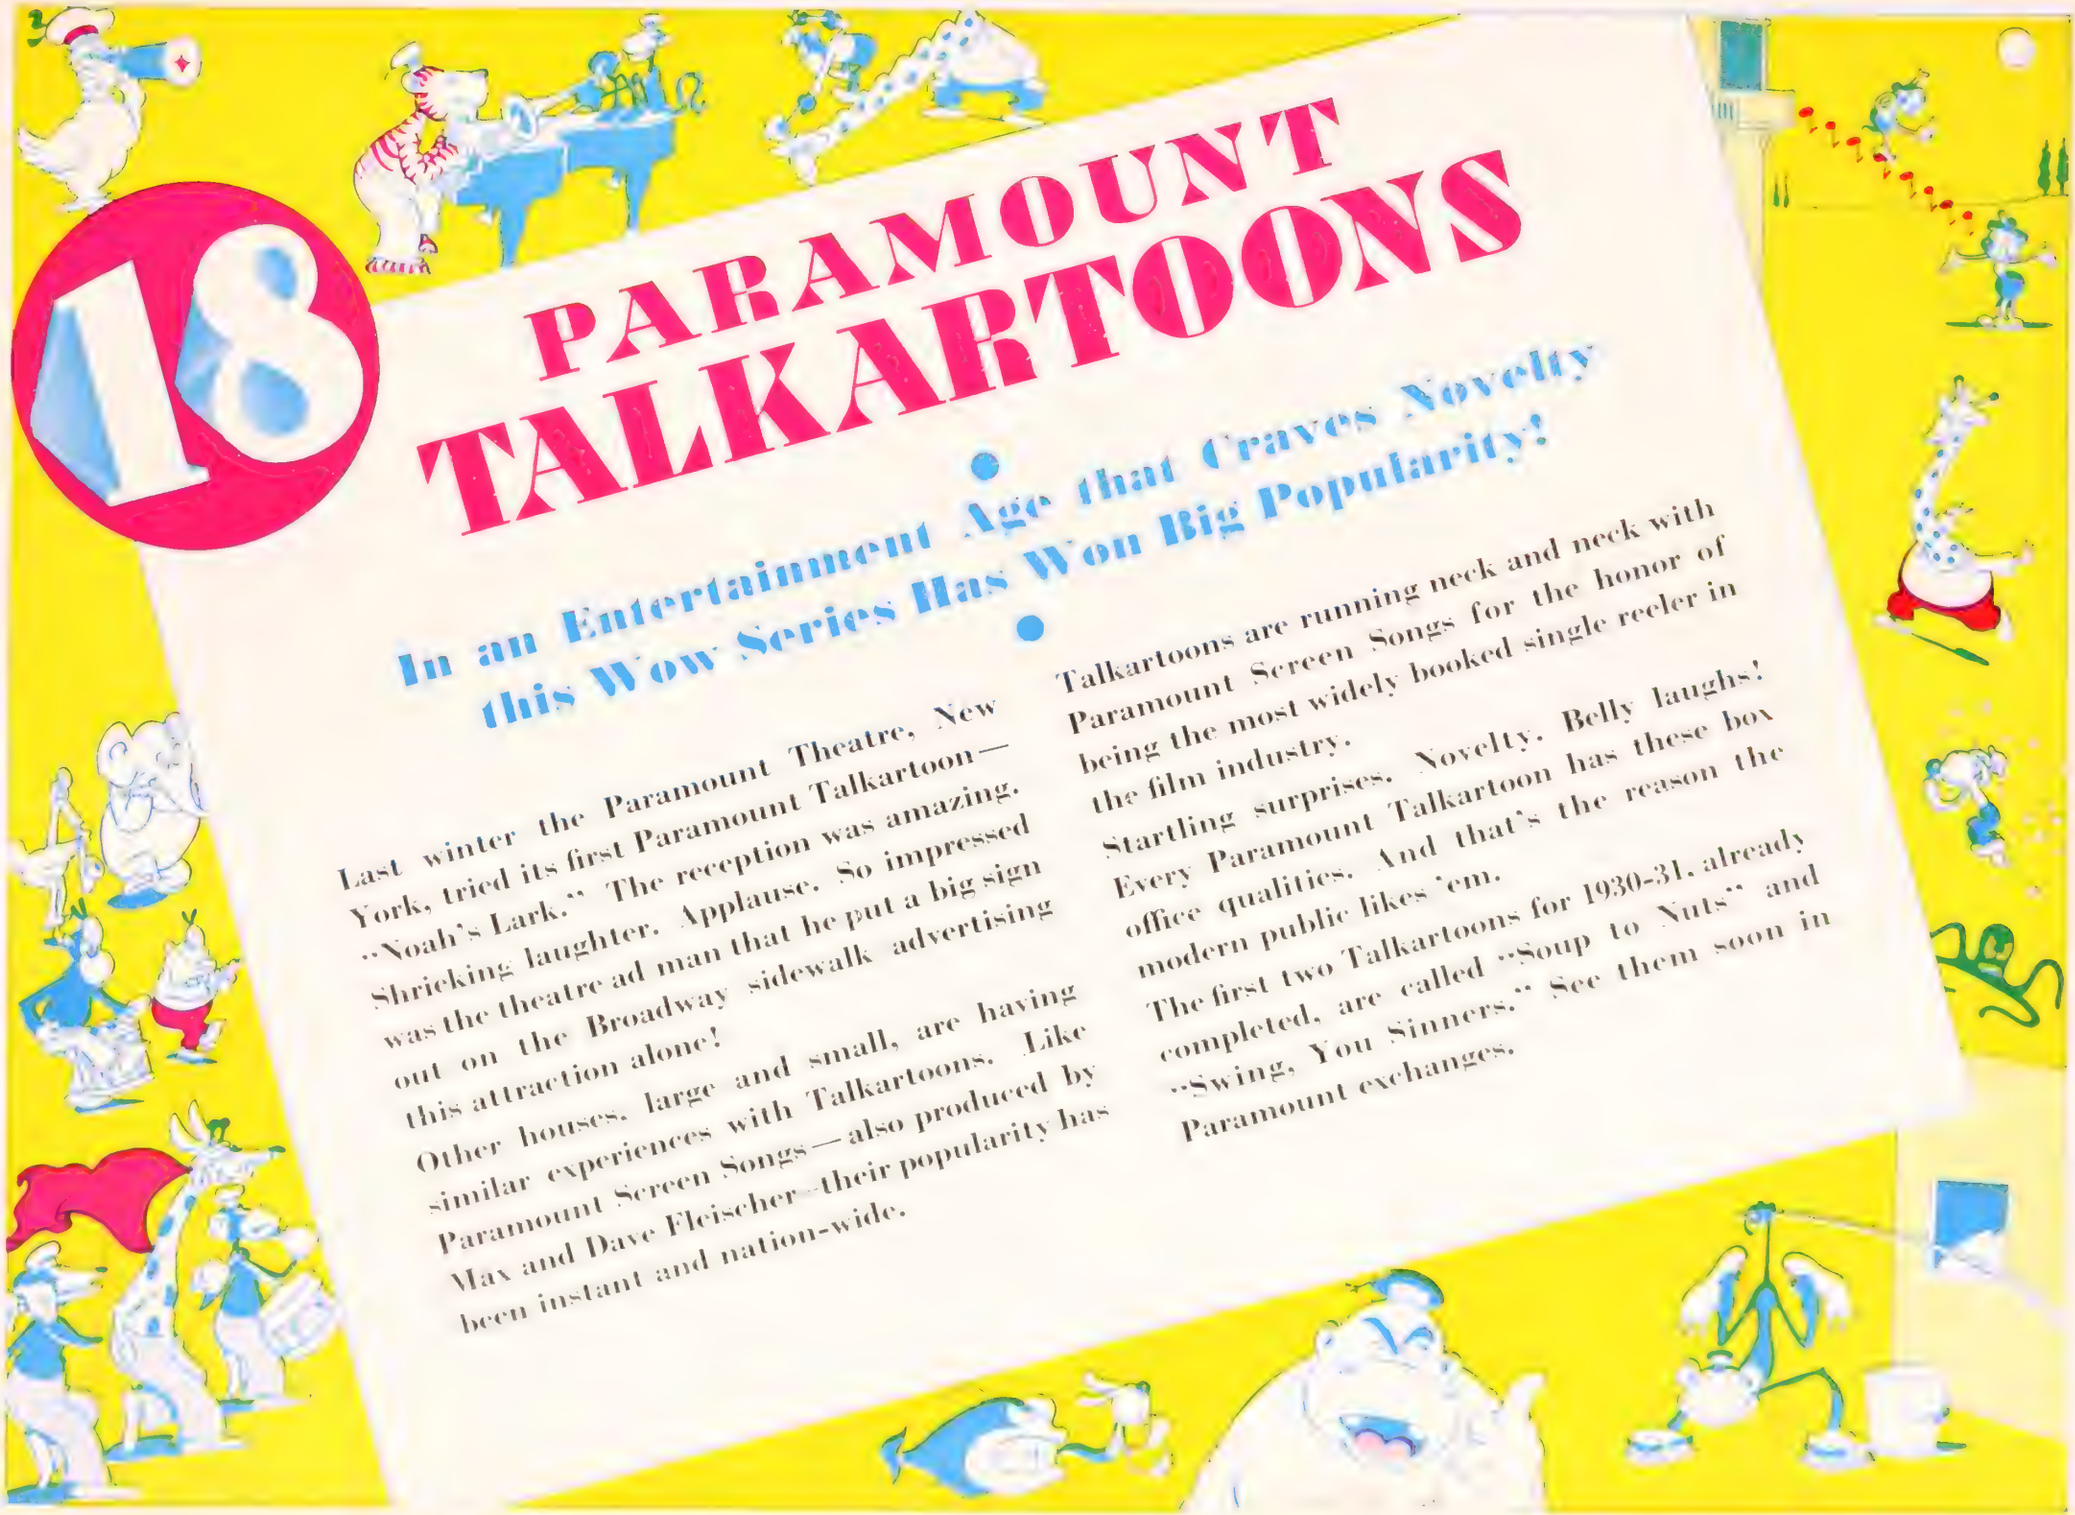
18 PARAMOUNT SCREEN SONGS

All America sings in time with this famous bouncing ball!

Actual records would undoubtedly show that more wired houses of every class are using this great single reel novelty than any other one series of short subjects on the market today.



The best salesmen for Paramount Screen Song are the thousands of exhibitors who are playing them regularly. If you want to know their real value as seat sellers, ask the man who runs them!



The reasons for this popularity are easy to find. Screen Songs entertain. They are packed with laughs. They give audiences a chance to relax, sing and join in the show.

This little giant of entertainment picks well known favorite songs and presents them as unique talking and musical pictures. Orchestras of exceptional quality furnish the music. Funny cartoon characters sing the lyrics amid hilarious antics. Then comes the famous bouncing ball, beating time. The words flash on the screen. And the whole audience joins in the choruses!

"There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight" and "My Gal Sal" are two Screen Songs set for early 1930-31 release. They're typical. See them at your exchange. Presented by Max Fleischer. Directed by Dave Fleischer.

THE MOST POPULAR ONE REEL NOVELTY ON THE MARKET!

18 PARAMOUNT TALKARTOONS

In an Entertainment Age that Craves Novelty this Wow Series Has Won Big Popularity!

Last winter the Paramount Theatre, New York, tried its first Paramount Talkartoon—"Noah's Lark." The reception was amazing. Shrieking laughter. Applause. So impressed was the theatre ad man that he put a big sign out on the Broadway sidewalk advertising this attraction alone!

Other houses, large and small, are having similar experiences with Talkartoons. Like Paramount Screen Songs—also produced by Max and Dave Fleischer—their popularity has been instant and nation-wide.

Talkartoons are running neck and neck with Paramount Screen Songs for the honor of being the most widely booked single reeler in the film industry.

Startling surprises. Novelty. Belly laughs! Every Paramount Talkartoon has these box office qualities. And that's the reason the modern public likes 'em.

The first two Talkartoons for 1930-31, already completed, are called "Soup to Nuts" and "Swing, You Sinners." See them soon in Paramount exchanges.

Selling the GREATER NEW SHOW WORLD to your public

20,000,000 Readers Sold Continually on Theatres Playing Paramount . . .

For 13 years Paramount advertising in national magazines has powerfully steered the public to theatres showing Paramount Pictures. "If it's a Paramount Picture, it's the Best Show in Town" is more than a slogan; it's a national entertainment-buying guide. In the Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Photoplay, Picture Play, Motion Picture, Motion Picture Classic, Screenland, Screen Book, and other widely read publications, this effective aid to the Paramount showman will be continued more vigorously than ever in 1930-31.

Radio Bombardment over 69 Columbia Stations is Mighty Seat Seller! . . .

Every Saturday night at 10 P. M. (Eastern Time) over the coast-to-coast network of the Columbia Broadcasting System, the Paramount-Publix Hour brings news of coming Paramount Pictures into the homes of millions of radio listeners. One of the most popular hours on the air, it builds patronage for theatres showing Paramount — and does it 52 weeks a year.

Over both of the great national radio chains and over every important local station as well, Paramount personalities and songs are continually broadcasted. The tremendous benefit which theatres reap from this exploitation barrage is without question!

HELD OVER

for a Second Big Week at the

ROXY

JOHN BOLES—JEANIE LANG

How the critics raved over Boles rendition of "Song of the Dawn" and "It Happened in Monterey." And how they raved over the screen's newest sensation, Jeanie Lang, who stops the show when she croons "I'd Like To Do Things For You" and "Ragamuffin Romeo." She's already clicked as AMERICA'S PERSONALITY GIRL. Read all about it in the reviews below.

. . . the new era in sound and color entertainment . . . the picture that does for the sound screen what sound did for the silent screen . . .

"Entertainment for which New York is accustomed to pay $16.50 is presented at the Roxy this week in 'King of Jazz.' A lavishly beautiful cinematic production . . . colorful entertainment tapestry of breath-taking beauty . . . music galore . . . plenty of spectacle . . . lots of humor . . . upon occasion art reaches a new high . . . John Boles throttles all competition in the singing cinema . . . The 'discovery' of the picture is a little girl named Jeanie Lang, who stops the show when she croons to Paul Whiteman, 'I'd Like To Do Things For You.'"

—REGINA CREWE, N. Y. American

"A marvel of camera wizardry . . . will appeal to all types of audiences . . . nothing imitative, all the various turns being blessed with originality . . . thoroughly diverting . . . sparkling piece of work . . . 'Rhapsody in Blue' is set forth with much artistry . . . picture aroused gales of laughter . . . There is no sequence that isn't worth witnessing and no performance that is not capable in this fast-paced picture."

—MORDAUNT HALL, N. Y. Times

"A magnificent spectacle. It cost Universal two million dollars. You can see it for one. You're getting a great break . . . surpasses everything done in Technicolor . . . most spectacular color picture ever made . . . Stunning!"

—BLAND JOHANESON, N. Y. Mirror

"An astonishing quantity and variety of visual beauty . . . musically, too, it is a superior production . . . and one will sit before it and come away convinced he has had his money's worth."

—QUINN MARTIN, N. Y. World

"An eye-filling spectacle done in Technicolor and in exceptionally good taste . . . performances are good throughout."

—MARGUERITE TAZELAAR, N. Y. Tribune

"A handsomely mounted, elaborately devised picture . . . lots of brief and pointed sketches . . . good entertainment . . . the audience seemed to like it a lot."

—THORNTON DELEHANTY, N. Y. Evening Post

"There is a high class jazz carnival at the Roxy this week and, boy, how it goes over! . . . The picture is as pretentious as anything Ziegfeld has done . . . the director manages to inject a fast-moving pace . . . John Boles walks off with most of the singing honors . . . There is a little girl named Jeanie Lang, who steals a few laurels for herself."

—GEORGE GERHARD, N. Y. World

"As a spectacle it is an eye-filler . . . spirited tempo . . . the music is exceptionally tuneful and there are at least three potential hits . . . John Boles sings more beautifully and photographs better than in any of his own starring vehicles."

—JULIA SHAWELL, N. Y. Evening Graphic

"Roxy is worth a visit this week . . . the film feature is unquestionably the most majestically mounted, the most plentifully, fulsomely costumed . . . John Murray Anderson displays high standards . . . most effective of all is the staging of Mr. Gershwin's 'Rhapsody in Blue!' . . . there are all sorts of kaledioscopic camera effects in this episode."

—JOHN S. COHEN, Jr., N. Y. Sun

"What a picture! . . . What . . . a . . . picture! It isn't often we get excited about a motion picture. But when we saw 'King of Jazz'—well, no praise is too great for it . . . Aside from Whiteman and his orchestra, the sole attraction in this film is entertainment. And that entertainment goes on for reel after reel" . . .

—DAN THOMAS, N. Y. Telegram

With Laura La Plante, John Boles, Glenn Tryon, Jeanette Loff, Merna Kennedy, Kathryn Crawford, Stanley Smith, Grace Hayes, William Kent Chisholm, Irwin, Twin Sisters G, Russell Markert Dancers, Lynn Holcomb, Tommy Atkins Spaniels, Neil O'Day, George Chiles, Jacques Cartier & Norman Frank Leslie, Jeanie Lang. Presented by CARL LAEMMLE. Entire production conceived and directed by JOHN MURRAY ANDERSON. Produced by CARL LAEMMLE, Jr. Including the first dramatization of George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

Kent, Myers Pouring Oil on Waters So 5-5-5 Meetings Can Be Resumed

The Actor Talks

A well known actor—name withheld because of the sensibilities of the studio head for whom he works—talking of his film career:

"I've played 22 parts in 14 months with that outfit and all of them combined wouldn't even make a good butler."

Sheehan Tact to Heal Breach of Gaynor with Fox

Hollywood—With Winfield Sheehan's return to the coast, the difficulties between Janet Gaynor and Fox are expected to be ironed out. Sheehan's diplomacy is expected to bring an end to the breach.

The trouble hinges around the type of roles Miss Gaynor has been playing. It is understood she is anxious to return to serious roles, such as Diane in "Seventh Heaven," as against continuance in musicals, despite the fact that "Sunnyside Up" ranks among the first three box-office cards of the season now drawing to a close.

Sol Wurtzel, who has been handling the Fox plant during Sheehan's protracted stay in New York, and Miss Gaynor have not been hitting off any too well. Sheehan, however, is expected to iron out the kinks.

Stop, Sinners! St. Louis Pastor Would Reform Ye

St. Louis—Boys in local film row, and those poor old souls 'way out in the sticks who fight hard to keep the wolves from the door of the theatre box-office, are on bended knees asking forgiveness for their multitude of sins. They can be seen almost any day along Olive Street with heads bowed deep in shame.

It all came about when the Rev. Dr. William B. Lampe, pastor of West Church, at Maple and Maryville Aves., the city's largest Presbyterian congregation, took as his regular weekly sermon: "What Are the Movies Doing to Us?" And when the Reverend terminated his spiel, his audience departed with the firm resolve to "bring back the sinners to the straight and narrow path."

New Contract Slated to Be Written, Kent Tells Staff

Atlantic City—There will be a resumption of the 5-5-5 conferences to complete the work of drafting a new contract. The present squabble over alleged statements directed at leaders of Allied States Ass'n., will be ironed out and the meetings probably resumed in June as originally scheduled.

This is learned exclusively by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, for negotiations toward a removal of the differences which have arisen already are under way between S. R. Kent, Paramount's vice president and general manager, and Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Ass'n.

Kent indicated a satisfactory settlement in addressing the company's convention here when he told the sales force that the new standard contract is to have an arbitration clause, because the industry cannot do business without arbitration.

Wunder, Alleged Hays Spotter in Academy, on Job

Hollywood—Clinton Wunder, newly appointed secretary of public relations for the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences and reputed agent of Will H. Hays in the inner councils of the organization, has lost little time in getting into action.

Although he took up his duties with the association less than a month ago, Wunder has already delivered lectures and addresses before five clubs and welfare organizations in southern California. In his discussions before the various bodies, he explains the purpose and accomplishments of the Academy besides the problems of the creative end of projection.

After getting his department organized, he is expected to make a trip East, at which time he will stop off at many points to appear as the Academy representative before various organizations.

Some Academy members still look upon Wunder's activities with some apprehension.

Roxy to Fulfill Fox Contract? One Year to Go

S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel may complete his contract with Fox, it is indicated. The agreement still has one year to run. Previously, it had been reported that the managing director of the Roxy's contract might be abrogated by mutual consent, following his signing of a contract with RCA. Under terms of this agreement, Roxy is to take charge of the theatre end of the amusement center which RCA will build between Fifth and Sixth Aves., from 48th to 51st Sts.

Maxwell Chain In England to Go to Warners?

Associated British Cinemas, the Maxwell chain of British theatres and second in importance in England, may go to Warners as the first step to acquire a foothold in exhibition in that country.

John Maxwell, head of British International Pictures and which controls A. B. C., has just completed a hurried trip to New York from London and is now en route home. Harry M. Warner could not be reached for a statement.

There are about 100 houses in the Maxwell chain, principal opposition of which is Gaumont British, in which Fox holds a substantial interest.

Vol. XLI NEW YORK CITY, MAY 24, 1930 No. 21

GIVE THE LITTLE CHAP A BREAK OR BREAK HIM!

IF the little exhibitor can be saved in the economic upheaval besetting this industry, far-sighted leaders of the trade are determined it shall be done.

Such is the essence of words percolating out from the privacy of convention halls where salesmen are being instructed in sales tactics and policies for the new season. Emphasis is being placed by executives on company intentions to give the little fellow the break wherever it is possible.

How much of such orations to "give the little fellow the break" is sincere remains for developments to prove. The record would incline those not politically minded to juggle words and wonder if the final reading will present the same words transposed to read: "break the little fellow."

Film Salesmen's Pay Check

Producers and distributors depend on the vast unorganized and unaffiliated exhibitor, who pays the moderate rentals, for their sustenance.

Film salesmen have a selfish interest in the small exhibitor. He is their bulwark and chief reason for continued association with distributor payrolls. Eliminate the little fellow through excessive rentals, indifference to his problems and limitations, and the film salesman passes with him.

Just how much the small theatre owner means to distributing companies in gross revenue is sufficient as a subject for any one luncheon. Estimates vary, from thirty percent to fifty percent, depending on the company and its circuit affiliations. Granting the minimum of thirty percent, the little fellow still is a factor.

Independent producers and the remaining states rights operators may find it extremely profitable to watch carefully the methods of the major distributors in selling product this season to the small exhibitor. There may be lapses of memory about intentions voiced at conventions.

Countering this brief for the small exhibitor is a word of counsel to him in his contacts with salesmen during the coming months. Production costs for sound pictures far exceed those for the old silent films. He will do well to start his negotiations for product on the theory that the distributor is disposed to "give him a break," and meet the rental schedules by conceding prices honestly and sensibly to the point where good business judgment obliges him to call a halt. If the willingness to give him a "break" isn't apparent when it gets down to whittling dollars, the exhibitor is well justified in mustering his most expert trading faculties and dubbing his immediate geography as "no man's land."

Arteries Without Nerves

The realization exists in several very high councils that an industry, to be successful, must prosper in all of its parts; that one branch is an appendage of the others, and that a sustaining life fluid must flow through all of the organs that make up the whole, or disintegration will set in.

If that opinion persists, instead of being merely transient, there is reason to hope that the rally 'round the small exhibitor is not entirely altruistic and political in character. The distributor has one important fact at his disposal in giving the "break" to the little chap. He knows from intimate contact through circuit ownerships what theatres of different classifications can gross as an average with the general run of product. This should be a valuable guiding influence in fixing rentals, and it should give the small exhibitor a decided advantage so long as he holds to the truth about his business.

The entire industry can endure a dose of real business acumen and a measure of sound economics in the relations between producer-distributors and independent exhibitors. It has been promised and promised again. Here and there it has materialized to mutual advantage. But it still is far from being an epidemic. Clear-headed sales leaders, with minds excellently tempered and balanced by experience, have voluntarily sounded a keynote that should perk up the ears of every independent theatre operator. If the creed is sincerely meant, the new season can be viewed with hope and, perhaps, at its end with gratification and mutual good-will between all concerned.

New Coast Zoning Plan Seen as Move To Forestall U. S. in Protection Trial

Can It Be?

Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. was chartered this week at Delaware. On the same day, the secretary of state issued incorporation papers to the Publix Oil Holding Co.

RKO, Paramount In Theatre War In Schenectady

Schenectady, N. Y.—There's a merry time in store for this city. With a population of 97,000, fourteen neighborhood theatres wired and what many consider to be plenty of first-runs downtown, R-K-O is set to build here and Paramount is threatening. R-K-O now operates the three-year-old Proctor's, but wants another house in town. On a site near its present theatre, the proposed house will go up.

Paramount has been trying to make a deal with Farash Theatres Corp. and doesn't seem to be getting anywhere. Its new house, however, has no bearing on that situation since Sam Dembow is endeavoring to work out a deal embracing the new theatre as well as those operated by Farash. Sitting comfortably on the sidelines is William M. Shirley, general manager of the Farash chain, which embraces the State, seating 2,000; the Strand, seating 1,200; and the Wedgway, seating 1,600. The joker in the situation revolves around bookings. Shirley is tied up with First National, Warners and Fox and is understood to be dickering with M-G-M. The R-K-O house will naturally exhibit Radio and Columbia Pictures, thereby leaving Paramount in a tough spot. At least, film men in Albany who visit here think so.

David Selznick Suing L. A. Bank for $250,000 on Loan

Los Angeles—David O. Selznick, assistant to Ben Schulberg at Paramount, is suing the Pacific-Southwest Trust and Savings Bank for $250,000. The action has been brought to recover stock, Selznick says, which he put up at the bank as collateral on a loan. He charges the bank refuses to return the stock.

The stock is that of United Studios, totals 1,000 shares valued at $150,000 by the plaintiff who maintains the dividends paid by it have been more than sufficient to pay off the loan.

Loew's Declares Dividend

The board of director of Loew's, Inc., has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents a share on outstanding common stock payable June 30 to stockholders of record June 14.

Distributors Worried Over Conspiracy Suit as June 17 Approaches

Distributors won't come into the open with what's on their chests, but from the inside it is learned that many of them are seriously worried over the Government's criminal conspiracy case against West Coast Theatres, which also involves a number of distributing organizations.

In the meantime and construed as a possible gesture toward the government, is the new zoning plan completed in Los Angeles late this week and worked out by Charles C. Pettijohn in conjunction with Fox West Coast, the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade and the M. P. T. O. of Southern California.

The plan, it is claimed, will give independent theater owners a better break than formerly prevailed and at the same time adequately protect Fox West Coast. The committee in charge has ratified the measure unanimously with the anticipated result that the situation is expected to be considerably relieved.

Notables to Testify

What influence this voluntary move on the part of distributors will bring to bear when the case is heard beginning June 17 is a question. When the trial opens in Los Angeles on June 17, following a long series of legal maneuvers to ward it off as along as possible, the courtroom will contain a lengthy list of well known film names whose testimony will be required.

The suit which is aimed at protection hinges largely on an alleged agreement among distributors not to serve theatres in that zone charging ten cent admissions. The government maintains broadly that this constitutes a conspiracy.

At a recent meeting of Hays members when other business was slated for discussion, conversation veered toward the forthcoming trial. At that time, there was considerable wagging of heads and a number of company executives then present openly declared thei rconcern over the outcome.

Sound News in Europe

Berlin—Development of a talker newsreel for all Europe is one of the plans of the Tobis-Svensk Film Industry alliance. The German firm recently made excursion into the talking newsreel field with an enthusiastic reception attending its efforts.

Tobis, Svensk in Alliance; Plan Arctic Venture

Berlin—Close co-operation has been established between the Svensk Film Industry and Tobis, and the two firms already have begun operations under the new partnership. Talking picture expeditions into the Arctic are planned. General Director Anderson of the Svensk firm and Herr Reuperswaerd of Tobis spent several days in completing the negotiations.

Pettijohn Tells Wampas Dirty Ad Copy Is Tabooed

Hollywood—The Wampas boys were handed a jolt this week when Charles C. Pettijohn, addressing the organization, used plenty of plain language in socking suggestiveness and vulgarity in advertising.

Drawing upon his own experience, the Hays' general counsel said it seemed to him advertising of pictures today cannot be accomplished without displaying "either dollar signs or women's legs." Reform is not only needed, but an immediate necessity, Pettijohn added.

Without making direct reference to the proposed code governing advertising with which advertising men in New York headquarters have been struggling for some weeks now, Pettijohn intimated that the plan will go through as per schedule when he declared the present tendency toward off-color copy must stop.

More Legal Trouble for Nacio Herb Brown in L. A.

Hollywood—Nacio Herb Brown, song writer, has his troubles. Recent difficulties involved home life and marital affairs. Now Rufus Lemaire is suing for $10,400 on breach of contract action.

Lemaire claims he and Brown entered into a contract whereby he was to obtain engagements for Brown to write music. The complaint stated Lemaire obtained a contract for Brown for $1,000 a week for 400 weeks and that he has not been paid the $10,400 alleged due him.

The Insiders' Outlook

GET a load of this:

On Thursday, in Schenectady, practical television was demonstrated by Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson, pioneer radio research expert of General Electric. This is what this modern miracle worker did:

He showed on a screen six feet square in a vaudeville theatre a mile away motion pictures combined with the voices of individuals standing in the laboratory.

The audience in the theatre saw on the screen and heard the voice of an orchestra leader directing his men from the laboratory. Then a vaudeville team demonstrated another possibility when a girl sang into a microphone on the theatre stage while her partner sang into a "mike" at the laboratory, their combined efforts merging harmoniously and for all the world as if both were on the same stage.

This significant and unheralded advance in the mechanical development of television came unannounced except to a limited number of guests and newspaper men. It proved a day of mystery for the audience. For instance, the orchestra in the pit of the theatre saw its leader on the screen. Also heard his voice. Then came directions, the baton tapped sharply and the uncanny circumstance of a celluloid leader conducting a flesh-and-blood orchestra became a fact.

Only the head and shoulders of the performers were shown on the screen. In gesture and voice inflection the effect is reported identical with talking pictures, but the images were not quite so clear. Now here's an amazing and, potentially, a most vital point. The actual images were reproduced on a screen six feet square whereas the best previous efforts in television broadcasting had been confined to a screen fourteen inches square. That should mean a lot to you.

As a matter of fact, so magical did the demonstration appear that predictions were made readily that a chain of television theatres would soon become a fact.

Whether or not the intricate mechanics involved would make such a step a commercial practicability is a serious question. The Schenectady episode, which may easily prove itself to be an historic landmark in the development of this new scientific wonder, takes on proportions worthy of deep consideration because it indicates the electrics are working quietly but diligently on the job.

The inclination in the picture business is to regard television as a visionary something far in the offing. Perhaps it is. For reasons of their own, experimenters seemingly have gone out of their way to discount the impression that any workable system is ready for the public. Yet, to belie that comes the Schenectady revelation.

What it will all lead to its problematical. When television is ready, it is safe to assume the big electrics will control it. Yet, it is important to bear in mind that these selfsame powers are heavily interested in the business already. How much more so in the next six months remains to be seen.

It isn't conceivable that they will throw on the market for public consumption any development when such a rash act might easily upset trade equilibrium.

Making the rounds on the inside again is a yarn heard before that television and the potential danger it offers to theatres unless carefully blended into the amusement structure might supply the whip cracked by the electrics to force those portions of the industry not now in their control into line. Sounds a bit fantastic, THE INSIDERS are ready to admit, but far from impossible, very far.

Space Grabbing?

In the flurry of speculation which followed the report that Raoul Walsh would desert Winnie Sheehan for Doug Fairbanks, several salient facts were overlooked. To begin with and, perhaps most important, is the strong friendship between the two men. So strong, in fact, that it is understood a clause prevails in Walsh's contract that he can walk off the Fox lot if anyone but Sheehan is in command.

Add to this the vagaries in decision which are peculiar to Fairbanks insofar as story selections and frequency of production are concerned. Doug is in England, golfing and vacationing. He doesn't even know what his next picture will be or when he will get busy on it. He always has three or four ideas on tap, but usually goes cold on one or all before reaching decisions. Hollywood guesses it will be five or six months before Fairbanks is ready to shoot.

While Walsh and Doug are good friends and there is reason to believe the latter would like the former to direct him, Raoul has a lovely berth at Fox on a deal that gives him a sweet salary check every week in the year.

That's the dope. The Walsh-Fairbanks yarn made the press wires because of name value, not fact value.

Who Gets the Fees?

It isn't always that lawyers straighten out the affairs of their clients. Occasionally, the legal fraternity engages in a professional fracas entirely its own.

A case in point is the tangled skein of circumstance surrounding fees for legal services in the recent Fox steeplechase. A statistically-minded individual, acquainted with the facts, estimates that $5,000,000 is involved and a lot of disagreement over how the money is to be split up.

One group of solons, eminent and noteworthy in the profession, represented the original trustees, Fox Film, and a banking group entangled in the maze. Another represented individuals and corporations. Just who's going to pay it to whom, when and how are the questions disturbing those at the receiving end.

Western Union Up

Western Union's balance sheets go heavily black this week and next. Salesmen are burning up wires and money assuring wives and girl friends from convention cities and trains that everything is jake and the jobs are still theirs.

One fellow sent his wife the following message the other day:

"All our worries are for naught. Everything set until October at least."

Ethics Code Faces First Test with Pictures Released From July 1 On

Big Audiences

Films still are miles ahead of radio, insofar as followers in the ranks of the public are concerned. Total radio audience now approximates 52,581,800, according to Frank Arnold, of NBC, while pictures play to about 120,000,000.

Clarke Order Halts Suspected Employee Graft

Suspicions of graft in the purchase of equipment reaching into ranks of employees of Fox theatres have resulted in a general order from Harley L. Clarke that all buys must be cleared through General Theatre Equipment, Inc., which, incidentally, is the company controlling Fox Film and Fox Theatres.

Charles Caballero, former Fox West Coast official, has been on the job as general purchasing agent of the Fox companies for several weeks. Every requisition from now on will clear through him all the way down the line to orders for coal.

Sheehan to Pass on "Connecticut Yankee"

Hollywood—Interest has been revived in the proposed talkie remake of "Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" by Fox. Picture was under consideration for Will Rogers several months ago, but finally abandoned at that time. Winfield Sheehan will look over the prepared adaptation for the talker remake next week and will make final decision.

"U" Road Shows "All Quiet" in Shubert Houses

Universal has completed plans to roadshow "All Quiet on the Western Front" in the big key cities at once, most of the bookings to be in Shubert houses, in accordance with an agreement whereby the Shuberts will wire their theatres. All will be at $2 top.

The first two engagements, slated for June 2, will be at the Majestic in Boston and the Pitt in Pittsburgh. Universal has organized a roadshow department for handling the picture, with Dave Werner in charge of bookings and Joe Weil of exploitation and advertising. "All Quiet" has been clicking big business in New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Detroit and Baltimore.

First Batch of "Lily Pure" Films Ready Then—Earlier Stuff a Problem

Hollywood—First pictures to be produced under the mandates of the code of ethics are expected to be ready for theaters about July 1. The Hays organization and its members will, therefore, face their first test on or about that date.

If any squawks develop between now and then, the answer will be that the code does not and was never intended to embrace pictures placed in work before March 31 or produced before that date. Whether better film movements and the various civic organizations with which the Hays group has been cooperating will understand this is something which several observers are beginning to question here.

Holdovers Troublesome

It is not uncommon for producers to release pictures anywhere from one month to a year after they are completed. For instance, "Song of the West" was produced by the Warners about a year back yet it made its debut on Broadway a few weeks ago. The Hays association declares pictures like this are not subject to code regulations. While this may be understood in the trade observers are asking how the line of demarcation can be made clear to the public. They argue further that, insofar as the public is concerned, pictures reaching theatres from now on will be scrutinized by those interested enough to do so with the code very much in mind. They see a messy situation shortly developing because of this condition.

The code has elicited considerable editorial comment from newspapers all over the nation. Some of this is favorable; the tenor of other comment is to await what the product itself reveals while others are frankly skeptical. Critics of the industry, it is felt in some production circles, will seize what appear to be violations with considerable alacrity and make capital thereof.

Progress made to date and a check-up on whether or not the letter of the code is being observed will comprise a substantial portion of Will Hays' time while here. He will discuss the matter with producers during the next two weeks.

Hays has just arrived from New York and on Thursday addressed the Foreign Trade Council, in convention here, on "The Relation of Motion Picture to Foreign Trade."

Kids and Talkers

Baltimore — Extent to which kids have been won away from picture houses was demonstrated when Hoot Gibson's new talker was shown here at the Ritz. Hoot has been a big draw at the house as a silent picture star, but found difficulty in drawing as a talker star.

"Library" in Work

Will Hays' library of historical films still is in the formulative stage. President Hoover and Hays, who will appoint a committee to supervise development of the celluloid records, have not as yet completed details for operation of the plan.

Pictures' Subtle Power Adds to Value, Says Hays

Los Angeles—"The commercial value of the film lies in the subtle power of suggestion emanating from it, even though the picture's primary purpose is to entertain," Will H. Hays told 2,000 delegates to the Seventeenth National Foreign Trade Council convention here Thursday.

"The film as a salesman" was Hays' topic, and he hailed pictures as an important factor in international trade because of the exchange of ideas they offer.

Chain of Yiddish Talker Houses Plan of Seiden

Three picture houses, the first of a chain devoted exclusively to the showing of Yiddish talking pictures, will be opened by Judea Films early in June, according to Joseph Seiden, president. The first will be the St. Marks at 2nd Ave. and 8th St., Manhattan, on June 4. The same day a theatre in Brighton Beach will start a run of Yiddish films. On June 11 the Prospect, the Bronx, will be dedicated to the same type of program.

Three Columbia Sales Meets; 20 Features Listed

Columbia's 20 features for the 1930-31 season, plus the 104 shorts on the company's program, are to be outlined at three sales conventions to be held by Joe Goldburg, general sales manager. The first will be at New York June 1 and 2, followed by a Chicago session beginning June 6 and a Hollywood session beginning June 12.

Multilingual Plans Cited By Zukor, Feted at London

London—Plans of Paramount-Publix to make talkers here and in other European countries were outlined by Adolph Zukor at a luncheon in his honor. The Paramount chieftain is embarking Friday for New York.

Hollywood Racketeers Chisel Foreign Actors for Own Lingo Talker Dough

He Ain't Seen Nothing Yet

Kansas City—C. M. Patee, who claims to be the first motion picture exhibitor in the United States, and who has been operating a theatre in Lawrence for more than 20 years, has never figured in an arbitration case.

"I have never been in the office of the Film Board," he declared. "Don't even know what it looks like."

That's a record of some kind or another.

Stomachache or Cold Feet, but "Feet First" Out

Hollywood—An official stomachache is responsible for dropping production on "Feet First." This is Harold Lloyd's new talker. Also his belly pain which the studio says is responsible for the act.

As a result, the troupe will not leave for Honolulu Saturday. Lloyd will rest for a few weeks and beyond that the organization says nothing. The comedian's representatives do add, however, that they first feared Harold's illness was appendicitis. That fear is now eliminated.

Nolan Temperament Fades in Face of "U" Pact

Mary Nolan has forgotten temperament and troubles with Universal. The result is a new five-year contract signed this week with Carl Laemmle, Jr., and assignment to "Outside the Law" as her first under the agreement. Tod Browning will direct.

For the last two months the blonde star has been at cross purposes with Universal. By way of bringing her into line, the company took the lead in "What Men Want" from her and gave it to Pauline Starke. At the time, the old Nolan contract had three years to run.

Skouras May Revamp St. Louis Stage Policy

ST. LOUIS—Grand Central theatre, St. Louis' first de luxe, has closed and probably will not open again until fall. In the meantime, Skouras Brothers are said to be casting about for a master of ceremonies to revive stage shows at their Missouri on Grand boulevard at Lucas, just across the street from the Grand Central.

Bert Frohman's success at the Fox, a block south of the Missouri, has indicated that the flappers still like that sort of show when they step out on the boulevard.

Nick Bankrolls for $50,000, Promising Million Dollar Profits

Hollywood—Agitation for production of talkers in foreign languages has developed racketeers in Hollywood who are searching for suckers to put up the dough to make foreign versions.

The wise promoters are disregarding the German, French and Spanish languages—too many of the large studios are figuring on covering these fields.

Naturally the racketeers are broke, or at least they have no inclination to put up their own bankroll. Method of operating selects a foreign actor who has been working as an extra or small bit player. He is called in and told that the racketeers have decided to produce a talker version in his native language and have decided to star him, providing they can agree on terms. Then they point out the alleged tremendous profits that can be derived from distribution of a talker in Rumania, Russia, Greece, Turkey, or Poland, depending on what country the victim is from.

The Old Army Game

After hopping up the player for a few days, they finally give him the "works." This is a sales talk that they want to let the victim's friends and countrymen into the huge profits they will make, and have decided that the player should canvass his friends in this country to put up $50,000, which is half of the production cost, and the promoters promise they will invest the other fifty grand. They paint rosy pictures of "million dollar profits" when the picture is released in the particular country.

Stunt of the racketeers is to have the sucker raise the $50,000 and get theirs out of this amount, chiseling from every angle. But, so far, they have met with plenty of listeners, but no enthusiasm from the foreign actors.

With the various foreign colonies in Hollywood closely knitted, all actors of the various groups have been wised-up to the racketeers and most of them are now ignoring calls to the promoters' offices entirely.

Meow, Meow

Hollywood—One of the week's best yarns going the rounds here is told by Mollie Merrick. It concerns two ladies, both stars, who are inclined to be a bit jealous, one of the other. It was a very hot day. Said one:

"Hello, darling; how are you?"

"Feeling languid, dear. This hot weather gets me."

"Really, you poor dear? I simply thrive on it—in fact, I always feel simply glorious. I'm so sorry you're so seedy. Wish I could do something about it—"

Said a bystander: "Marmalade—on a sword."

Nudes "Out" for Mary

Paris—Mary Lewis, Metropolitan opera warbler, is en route to New York in a huff, which developed when she discovered a clause in a film contract which specified that she appear in her birthday garb in "La Belle Helen," which was scheduled in English and French versions. Mary tore the agreement to bits when she spied the clause.

Hot Time in Old Town Over Time Saving

Baltimore—Discovered: A new excuse for theatre owners to fight. This new angle cropped up here when several exhibs walked about town with chips on their shoulders over daylight saving changes. At present only two houses, the Rivoli and Little, are carrying cudgels in behalf of time saving, with others "fightin' like hell" to continue on standard.

The Hip went daylight for two days and, because of conflicting opinions of company chiefs, gave back the extra hour for standard. Warner's Met was all set to switch, but home office execs instructed Manager C. S. Langue to forget it.

The M.P.T.O. of Maryland fought the issue in its ranks bitterly. The association disfavors daylight and told one member, it is understood, that his resignation would be in order if he made the changeover from standard time.

Although the Rivoli continues, despite much resentment generally, an M.P.T.O. director is said to have fought with J. H. Hoover, of the Wilson Amusement Co., Rivoli owners, against the new policy.

Williams Suing Fredman, Charging He Was Libeled

London—J. D. Williams doesn't like some of the things Ernest W. Fredman, editor of "The Daily Film Renter," has said about him in print and is, therefore, suing that publication under the British libel laws.

Williams charges Fredman published damaging statements in connection with the former's management of British National Pictures. A settlement out of court is reported in the offing.

Dan Fish to Produce

London—Dan Fish, well known in New York, has purchased picture rights to "French Leave" and will produce the farce in June.

Fear RCA Suit Is Prelude to Government Drive Against Big Business Untrue

Exhibs Paid $25,000,000 Excess to ERPI?

Washington—Exhibitors of the United States have had to pay Electrical Research Products, subsidiary of American Telephone & Telegraph Co., $25,000,000 more than they would have had to pay independent manufacturers of reproducing equipment, C. C. Colby, president of the Samson Electric Co., Canton, Mass., and chairman of the board of directors of the Audio Research Foundation, declared before the Senate patents committee.

Exhibitors have been "forced" to agree to pay an additional $50,000,000 for service during the next ten years, Colby said.

Fraud Charges Oust Ullman As 'Rudy' Executor

Hollywood—After listening to charges of fraud, mismanagement and misappropriation of funds of the estate of Rudolph Valentino, Judge Charles Crail has suspended the powers of F. George Ullman as executor, pending a complete investigation.

The sensational charges were brought against the former business manager of Valentino by the late star's brother and sister, Albert Guglielmi and Maria Guglielmi Strada. In their petition, they claim that Ullman loaned $50,000 of the estate's funds to a certain corporation known to be in financial difficulties and now is unable to repay the loan. It is also alleged that Ullman advanced sums totaling $40,000 to an individual without authority or security, and these loans have not been repaid. Another charge states that Ullman appropriated nearly $22,000 for his own personal use with neither interest nor principal paid on this loan.

Unable to Pay Mortgage?

According to the Valentino kin, the estate has been depleted to an extent that Ullman has been unable to pay a mortgage of $15,000 on real estate, besides government income taxes.

Ullman, who is now operating a casting agency in Hollywood, recently petitioned the court to allow him a salary of $750 weekly for his services as executor, besides $50,000 in cash. His request was filed.

The Bank of Italy was appointed special executor pending Ullman's hearing on May 29. George Greer, his attorney, denied the allegations against his client.

Took Estate Out of Red?

"When Valentino died in 1926," he said, "Valentino was $165,000 in debt. Ullman, through his management, has virtually created a $500,000 estate."

The attorney said that the executor has sold what he termed "junk" to eager admirers of the late star at huge prices. He said that the loans outstanding are still good.

Cycle of Prison Dramas in Vogue In W. C. Studios

Hollywood—With crowded prison conditions all over the country landing newspaper headline stories, a cycle of prison melodramas has already hit Hollywood producing circles. First National beats all other companies to the market with "Numbered Men," currently released; while M-G-M will have "The Big House" ready within a month. Fox is preparing a prison picture for direction by John Ford as a special for next year, and other companies are looking for prison stories.

Lola Lane in Squabble With Agent on Commish

Hollywood—Lola Lane and Arthur Lyon, New York theatrical agent, can't agree on business matters. Lyons alleges the actress owes him $1,075 commission on a contract and $755 for funds advanced.

Miss Lane said Lyons failed to fulfill the terms of the contract and that she notified him of her recision of the deal in April, 1929.

Deal of Gaumont British And United for 5 Years

London—Operating agreement, under which Gaumont British takes over the running of theatres of the United Picture Theatres chain, is to run for five years. Gaumont gets ten per cent of the profits under terms of the arrangement.

4,000 Patents

Washington—Four thousand patents will be brought together by the RCA, American Telephone & Telegraph, Westinghouse and General Electric deal, Leroy J. Williams of the Grigsby-Grunow Company, Chicago, told the Senate patents committee. The combination represents capital of $6,000,000, he said, and the firms brought hundreds of suits involving thousands of patents throughout the country.

Talk "Trust Busting" Move Is Planned Discounted by Justice Dept.

Washington—Announcement by the attorney general that the Dept. of Justice has no intention of engaging in a "trust busting" campaign is understood to have been issued in order to reassure business men throughout the country, who looked upon the filing of the RCA suit with considerable trepidation as the inception of a drive against "big business."

The department's statement, as a matter of fact, means merely that it will continue along the line it has been following for some time and will engage in no new activities.

Two influences are believed to be back of the filing of the RCA suit. On the one hand, there has been constant pressure on the department for action against the so-called radio trust from the Senate interstate commerce committee, headed by Senator "Jim" Couzens of Michigan, which for many months has been investigating the radio situation.

On the other hand, there was the decision in the so-called oil "cracking" case, similar in many respects to the RCA suit, involving the licensing and cross-licensing of patents, in which the government was upheld. That suit, however, is to go to the United States Supreme Court and the fate of the RCA proceeding, to a large extent, will depend upon the opinion rendered there.

Patent Licensing Not Unique

Patent licensing is not unique to the radio industry. It is practiced in the oil industry, as evidenced by the "cracking" case, in the automobile field and in many others. Accordingly, the filing of the RCA suit, close upon the heels of the oil suit decision, caused apprehension among men in other industries where patent pools or licensing arrangements have been adopted.

The suit caused considerable interest in film circles because of the inclusion among the defendants of RCA Photophone.

To reassure business men, generally, the department issued a formal statement promulgating its attitude as follows:

No Occasion for Campaign

"Reports that the Dept. of Justice is starting on a 'trust busting' campaign are erroneous as there is no occasion for any such campaign.

"It must be borne in mind that the courts during the last 20 years have greatly clarified the Sherman act so that the business world knows more precisely what the limitations upon its activities are. In addition, the business world as a whole in the large sense is endeavoring to keep within the act.

"There are developments in our economic life which bring forward new problems in relation to the Sherman act, that have to be further clarified by the courts. One of these situations arises out of the action of the last administration in raising the question as to the use of interlocking patents, in which a decision was reached in the oil-cracking case which created a new set of considerations and where the law needs to be further clarified.

"The department has before it at all times many cases of possible violation of law which are subject to rigid inquiry and in most of which it is found that the violation does not exist. There are other cases where there still remains a doubt, and generally in such the business world readily makes adjustments to remove such doubts.

"Where there are cases of actual and deliberate violation of the act, the department now, as always, proceeds to enforce the law. There is no change of policy in respect to any of these matters."

Stage Shows Back in Favor as Houses Change Policy; Units Formed on Coast

Falling For Titles

"The best paying racket out in the movie capital, where the majority of stars have a pedigree that began yesterday, is the nobility stunt. This venerable racket has gained a new lease on life in Hollywood. The Almanac de Gotha, at its palmiest, could hardly compete with filmdom's array of imposing titles. And although exposures occur nearly every day, still the movie folk fall and fall again."—Gardner in Talking Screen.

Presentations Fail as Box Office Draw; Publix Active in West

Return of stage shows to favor is being reflected in policy changes of theatres which had dropped them in favor of all-sound bills. Despite the element of overhead, de luxe houses in various sections are finding the stage program necessary to box office draw, and the number of all-sound houses is decreasing, so far as first runs are concerned.

Fanchon & Marco now have 48 weeks of time, routing its shows from Hollywood to New York, and Marco predicts the increase in use of stage shows will be greater this year than last.

At Seattle, Paramount Publix is planning to return stage shows to the Seattle Paramount, routing the shows from Los Angeles to San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Spokane (house now under construction) and probably Denver.

These will not be Publix units produced in the East, under the plan, but would be designed and produced particularly for Coast houses with principals chosen from stage and screen names in Hollywood.

Favors Stage Shows

Portland—So far as Fox West Coast is concerned, stage shows "are here to stay," Howard Sheehan, vice-president of the circuit, declared on a recent visit here. Los Angeles, he says, is the ideal place to produce the shows, because of the talent available.

Sheehan said that business in the Northwest is running about 25 per cent ahead of last year and that the circuit is grossing more than $1,000,000 weekly.

Ind'p'ts Vital to Trade's Success, Burkan Insists

If the big organizations in the industry adopt a wise business policy they will see to it that the independents are not squeezed out. So thinks Nathan Burkan, one of the speakers at the dinner given to Harry H. Buxbaum in New York this week, and the one speaker to strike a serious note at that function.

He told the audience, totaling almost 500, of a chain store bill now pending in Washington which seeks to protect the lone operator from aggressions of chain organizations, and remarked that, since it dealt with

Still Doddering On Plan to Form Advertising Code

Another week has slipped by and still no progress in shaping a code governing advertising has been made. At a meeting held early in the week at the Hays office, a general discussion was held. Beyond that, the situation remains unchanged.

The advertising fraternity isn't worrying much. Some are out of New York attending sales conventions. Others are busy to the hilt in preparation of annual product announcements. In general, the impression prevalent is that there is too much pressing business on hand to worry much about the code.

New York Film Row Turns Out for Harry Buxbaum

Five hundred exhibitors and competitive exchangemen attended a dinner to Harry H. Buxbaum, sales manager for Fox in the New York territory, at the Astor Monday night. Harry L. Reichenbach was toastmaster. Speakers included James R. Grainger, Saul Rogers, Nathan Burkan, Charles L. O'Reilly and Sam Trigger, old time exhibitor. The gang presented "Bux" with a diamond ring.

Paramount Facing Criminal Action if Buy of Canadian Chain Goes Through Minister Praises Films ! !

Tampa, Fla.—Dr. Willis G. Clark, rector of St Andrew's Episcopal Church, believes that good talking pictures "have a mission" and that ministers would do well to co-operate in all movements to improve them. He was one of the speakers at a meeting of the Tampa Ministers Ass'n, at which "The Effect of Sound Motion Pictures on Morals" was the general subject.

"I enjoy a high type motion picture and believe that Christians should support them to show producers that they should offer more of this type," he said. "I believe the class of pictures is improving."

Dr. Clark does not approve of the Saturday midnight shows, however, as he seems to think it works a hardship on workers.

'cause old man Satan had nothing on the gents who purvey celluloid fare for a livelihood, in the opinion of the pastor, who put it mildly (so he thinks) when he charged the industry with polluting the "inner life and hearts of our young people of America," purely for financial advantage. He further stated that the industry has failed to reform from within, advising parents to keep their children from shows that screen improper pictures.

The Source of Distortion

Rev. Lampe would at least have a "pure food law" for pictures, to prevent them from "poisoning the minds and bodies" of youngsters.

"One thing the movies are certainly doing is giving the young people a distorted idea of life," he continued. ."Our boys come to think that real life consists of getting wealthy, keeping a jazzed-up girl, and makink love promiscuously.

"Our girls come to think that the only way to be popular is through a distorted sex appeal. The song 'Get Hot,' from 'Sunny Side Up,' is but typical of what is expected from girls. All of this makes sin common and is to be expected. The statement of the movie producers that they make sin unattractive is not true.

"Another thing that the movies are most certainly doing is to make cheap and common the highest and most beautiful emotions of life. Illicit love, broken marriage vows, the constant suggestion of the impure is to be found in almost every show at some point. In this respect, the advertisements of pictures outdo the pictures themselves for rottenness."

Attend I.A.T.S.E. Meet

Jack Winick, chief projectionist, and Jim Sheehan, set electrician at the Paramount New York studio, leave next week to attend the I.A.T.S.E. convention at Los Angeles. Both will return next month.

FitzPatrick to Make 90 Shorts, Three Features

Ninety shorts and three feature productions will be produced and distributed by FitzPatrick Pictures, New York, for the 1930-31 season, states James A. FitzPatrick. These will consist of six series of shorts, as follows: 24 Traveltalks, 18 Music Masters, 12 Movie Horoscopes, 12 Secrets of Success, 12 American Holidays, 12 Novelties.

Each series will embody dialogue, music, and occasionally color. Nathaniel Shilkret of Radio-Victor will supervise recording. The first feature is Scott's "Lady of the Lake," synchronized, which FitzPatrick made in Scotland with Percy Marmont featured.

"Courage" for Women

This one is real audience for women. The humanness of the stage play, well-placed emphasis on the mother-love theme and more comedy relief than the stage version offered, combined with competent direction and good performances by the entire cast, put "Courage" in the rating as unusually good entertainment.

Its opening at the Winter Garden, New York, on a grind policy, brought tears and laughs from fully two hundred feminine early birds at the first morning show, despite the fur-coat temperature developed by an ambitious refrigerating system.

Archie Mayo handled action and dialogue intelligently. Belle Bennett gave the mother part plenty of realism and symbolized courage in the way that every woman best understands. Rex Bell troups the youngest son part so well that he races the cast for honors.

"Courage" is entertainment for any audience in any weather. For women particularly it's a natural.

Premier King Promises Probe If Deal Violates the Combines Act

Ottawa—Possible criminal action against Paramount Publix is in sight if its proposed purchase of the Famous Players Canadian Corp. is found to violate any provisions of the criminal code. An investigation into this phase of the proposed deal now is under way by the Department of Labor. If it is found that the proposed deal violates the combines act, action to prevent it will be taken in the courts. Promises to this effect have been made by Premier King.

Because of the national issues involved, the combines act should be amended to provide especially for picture corporations, Opposition Leader R. B. Bennett urged during discussion of the matter in the House of Commons. Such companies, he said, should be under the control of Canadians while operating in Canada.

Parliament should adopt a policy for the Dominion to pursue in view of the fact that Paramount Publix is a producer, distributor and exhibitor, and that control is in a foreign country. Action should be taken to safeguard what is a national business, he declared. The subject is to be discussed further in Commons.

Shareholders Rap Killam For Alliance with Zukor

Toronto—Considerable criticism of I. W. Killam, voting trustee, who has sided with Adolph Zukor during the various battles over proposed sale of Famous Players Canadian, featured a meeting of the Shareholders Protective Ass'n. The association was formed to block sale of the Canadian circuit to Paramount Publix. There is considerable agitation against the proposed sale.

Dailey and Barnett in Court on Theft Charges

Hollywood—With eleven counts of grand theft filed against them by Deputy District Attorney Cooper, U. M. Dailey and V. M. Barnett, charged with operating a movie school, are capturing some attention in film circles here.

The reason revolves around the fact that Colleen Moore, Mary Pickford, Betty Bronson, John Gilbert and Mary Carr have been subpoenaed to testify.

Biggest Year Forecast For Showmen by Zukor

Atlantic City—"Exhibitors who buy pictures intelligently, manage their theatres well and merchant their shows with enthusiasm, can look forward to the most prosperous season in their history," in the opinion of Adolph Zukor as expressed in a cablegram to the convention here.

Hays Members Sued for $2,744,250 On Arbitration Award Boycott Charges

L. A. Fourth Largest

Washington—Los Angeles, tenth city of the United States ten years ago, is expected to vie with Detroit for fourth place in census returns now being tabulated. New York and Chicago are sure bets for the leadoff positions and Philadelphia is expected to retain third place. Ten years ago, Los Angeles had a population of 576,673.

Growing Academy May Move Into Its Own Building

Hollywood—On account of the broadened scope of its activities, the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences is considering newer and larger quarters. At the present time the organization has offices and a meeting room in the Roosevelt Hotel. These were sufficient for the needs of the Academy during the first two years of its work, but the strides made in the past year necessitate larger quarters.

A special committee is looking over possible locations at the present time with a chance that a new building will be constructed for the Academy. According to present needs, the new quarters would have to provide a large amount of office space, together with a meeting room where sound pictures can be projected, besides sufficient space for the technical research department. The Academy will be moving just as soon as a new location has been definitely set, but officials expect to be out of the Roosevelt long before Sept. 1.

Hoxie Planning New Studio Plant in Texas

San Antonio, Tex.—A modern "picture city" will spring up on the site of the 75-year-old Fort Davis, if plans under way develop. Jack Hoxie, Western star and W. A. Wilson, his manager, have interested J. E. Pierce of New York, head of the Pacific Far West Pictures Corp., in the project.

The plans contemplate a $2,000,000 corporation for building on the site of the abandoned frontier-Indian-army post a modern production plant and a summer resort.

Film Guild Cinema Goes to Fliesler; Gould Out

Joseph R. Fliesler has taken over the Film Guild Cinema on West 8th St., New York, and will operate it as an art theatre under the new name of the 8th St. Playhouse. The 5th Ave. Playhouse, Fliesler's other theatre, will run American films. Martin C. Ansorge, former congressman, is interested with Friesler in the venture. The deal marks retirement of Symon Gould from the field.

Independents Forced Out of Business by Old Rule, Rembusch Alleges

Indianapolis—Triple damages of $2,744,250 are asked in two anti-trust suits against the Hays association and its members filed here by F. J. Rembusch Enterprises and the Capitol Amusement Co.

Conspiracy in restraint of trade in the compulsory arbitration system formerly employed in the industry is charged in the suits growing out of enforcement of arbitration awards. The boycott feature of the arbitration system forced independents to comply with arbitration awards or go out of business, it is alleged.

The Hays association and its members, it is stated, forced block and blind booking on independents, at higher rentals than paid by affiliated theatres, and dictated admission prices. Independents, it is alleged, are forced to pay from 40 to 60 per cent of grosses for pictures, while affiliated houses pay but 15 to 20 per cent.

This practice, it is asserted, has forced independents to go out of business, with their theatres acquired by Hays association members now said to own or control 4,000 first run houses.

Other defendants are: Will H. Hays, Paramount, M-G-M, First National, Universal, United Artists, Pathe, RKO, Vitagraph, Educational, Publix, Tiffany, Warners, Nicholas Schenck, Charles C. Pettijohn, Carl E. Milliken, Gabriel L. Hess and Fred L. Herron.

After Tallulah Bankhead?

London—Reports are current here Paramount Publix is dickering with Tallulah Bankhead, American actress, who has been appearing here in plays for several years, for talkers.

Originality (?)

A complete knowledge of geography seems necessary to become eligible for the studio job of picking main titles. This gentry will soon be in the same fix as the chap who names Pullman cars, judging from the line-up of geographical locations called upon for current attractions. A partial list includes the following:

"CHINA Express," "Storm Over ASIA," "PARIS Nights," "Hot TURKEY," "Show Girl in HOLLYWOOD," "ARIZONA Kid," "CONNECTICUT Yankee," "So This Is LONDON," "MONTANA Moon," "Ship From SHANGHAI," "Singer of SEVILLE," "Young Man of MANHATTAN," "The TEXAN," "Duke of DUBLIN," "So This Is PARIS Green," "SARATOGA," "GETTYSBURG Address," "In a RUSSIAN Cabaret," "A Night in MADRID," "Cohens and Kellys in SCOTLAND," "MONTANA Kid," "Hot For HOLLYWOOD," "Under a TEXAS Moon," "See NAPLES and Die," "HOLLAND," "JAPANESE Bowl," "RUSSIAN Rhapsody," "Off To PEORIA," "RENO," "Caught in BERLIN Underworld," "South of PANAMA," "GERMAN Underworld," "In Old MADRID," "Voices of HOLLYWOOD," and others.

Operators' Fight vs. Exhibs Echoes In Appeal Court

Cleveland—Operators here filed an appeal against the permanent injunction granted the exhibitors' association in September by Judge Kennedy, preventing operators from going on a sympathetic strike because theatre owners failed to renew the agreement of stage hands.

The papers filed in Court of Appeals are based on the plea that projectionists are working under an employment agreement, namely, that certain wage and working conditions exist in case of employment, whereas the exhibitors contended in their injunction that operators work under a contract agreeing to furnish services which exhibitors are bound to engage.

Luther Day, of exhibitor counsel, and Mark Patterson, representing the operators, were required by Appellate Judges Vickery, Levine and Sullivan to present briefs.

George Sweet Quits Legit For Films; Joins Warners

George Sweet, stage player, who was featured in the musical comedy, "My Girl," has been signed for Vitaphone shorts by Warners, working at the company's Eastern plant. Arthur Hurley will direct Sweet in his first, John Hobble's sketch, "The Bubble Party."

Schmeling-Sharkey Fight Films Go to New Company

Film rights to the Schmeling-Sharkey heavyweight championship were sold to Harry Eilpern and Cy Braunstein, who will form a new state rights company, with headquarters in the Film Center Bldg., New York. The event, set for June 12, will be shot in three reels, sound and silent. Columbia will distribute.

R-K-O Starts Invasion of South; Gets Hoblitzelle Chain Fox Lost in Crisis

Take This Tip!

Washington—"The science of modern advertising is the science of psychology, and psychology is the science of the human," Advertising Federation delegates were told at their convention here, in an address by Francis P. Sisson, vice-president of Guaranty Trust, New York.

"Any advertising man is truly successful only as he visualizes his audience, thinks and feels with them," Sisson stated, and, continuing, pointed out that the ad man's effort "is to supply a human want, known or unknown

"Often he has to create it, at least to arouse a desire for his goods to satisfy. He must educate the public as to what it needs, what it wants and show it where and how to get it. No institution can stand still. To stand still is to retreat. To hold the old customer you must seek the new."

Canadian Quota Move Is Denied; Rumors Blamed

Ottawa—Report that Canada was to place restrictions upon films from the United States on a quota basis is discredited here and attributed to the flood of rumors which have followed the fight over proposed sale of Famous Players Canadian Corp. to Paramount Publix.

There is only one semblance of a film quota system in Canada and that is maintained by the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors in the examination of news reels. Each topical release must have a majority of shots dealing with countries other than the United States. The government bureau also makes scenics for travel purposes.

C. J. Ross Goes Abroad to Study Sound Conditions

Study of the European situation and conferences with theatre owners is the purpose of the trip abroad of Charles J. Ross, president of RCA-Photophone. Accompanied by Mrs. Ross, he will visit England, France, Germany, Spain, Belgium, Italy and Switzerland.

Philadelphia Exhibitor Meeting Slated in June

Philadelphia—Annual convention of the eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey exhibitor unit is to be held in June. Previously, it had been planned to hold the event next week.

"Ingagi" Yanked Out in Omaha On N. Y. Orders

Omaha.—After playing two days, "Ingagi," gorilla film, was jerked from the R-K-O Orpheum here following long distance phone orders from the circuit's New York office to Ralph W. Thayer, manager.

"Ingagi" was set for a week and was drawing big. Joe Plunkett ordered the picture out.

Billie Dove in "The Notorious Affair" was the replacement for balance of week.

"Gross misrepresentation of the facts" coupled with alleged "filthiness" of the production are understood to be the reasons why Hays organization members have turned thumbs down on "Ingagi," which, as a result of the ban, cannot be screened in theatres operated by M.P.P.D.A. affiliations, thereby automatically slicing a large block of houses from the picture's possible booking list.

The attraction, according to weekly box-office reports compiled by Motion Picture News, has been a big money getter in the few key spots where it has been plugged, particularly in Chicago. Theatres controlled by producer-distributors, however, closed doors on the film when it was pointed out that its booking would hurt the respectability of the industry."

One very widely exploited highlight of the film concerns the alleged rape of a Congo woman by a gorilla. This sequence, along with the rest of the shots, is claimed to have been an actual happening, taken in the Congo.

Coast reports have it, however, that the woman probably had never left the borders of the good old U. S. A. and that the shots were made in usual studio fashion in Hollywood. The gorilla, these unconfirmed reports continue, was used by First National for "The Gorilla," which was released late in 1927. Other material is claimed to be stock library shots.

Spencer Tracy Signed

Fox has signed Spencer Tracy, lead in the stage play, "The Last Mile." The firm now has 75 contract players.

Arkansas, Alabama, Texas Key Cities Entered in Expansion

San Antonio—Radio Keith Orpheum has extended its expansion program to the South and acquired the Interstate Amusement Co. circuit in a deal with Karl Hoblitzelle. Previously, Hoblitzelle had arranged for sale of the chain to Fox, but the deal was held up by bankers at the time of the Fox financial crisis.

The Hoblitzelle houses are located in key cities of Texas, Alabama and Arkansas. They include the Lyric, Ritz and Trianon, Birmingham; and the Majestic theatres at Dallas, Little Rock, Fort Worth, San Antonio and Houston.

The acquisition augments R-K-O holdings in New Orleans, Memphis and other principal centers, and adds more than 10,000 seats to the circuit.

For the operation of these properties which are taken over at once, the R-K-O Southern Corp. has been organized. Karl Hoblitzelle will be the president of this subsidiary and general representative in the South and Southwest.

Another new theater acquired by R-K-O is the Virginia in Champaign, Ill., built by the Stoolman-Pyle Co.

"Floradora Girl" Opens Fox Pantages May 29

Hollywood—Marion Davies' recently completed filmusical, "The Floradora Girl," will open the new Fox Pantages with a gala premiere on May 29. Picture was apparently booked in to give the house the added break of widespread publicity and advertising campaign in the two local Hearst dailies.

Miller's California, due to reopen early next month, will have Tiffany's English production, "High Treason," as the initial attraction.

Wobber Resignation Held Ridiculous by S. R. Kent

San Francisco—Reports that Herman Wobber, one of the old reliables in the Paramount Publix organization, would resign are denied emphatically by S. R. Kent.

"As long as Herman Wobber lives and there is a Paramount, he will be with us," was Kent's manner of dismissing the report.

Loud Speakers Out

All quiet on the Broadway front is ordered in an ordinance passed by New York's board of aldermen in prohibiting the use of loud speakers outside any building or at any window looking on a street, or within 150 feet of a school, court house or church or 250 feet of a hospital. The new law will affect a number of Broadway houses.

Sound and Radio Patent Control Hit As "Evil" Trust in Senate Hearing

On Burkan

Guests at the Buxbaum dinner got a great kick out of Harry Reichenbach's introduction for Nathan Burkan. Emphasizing Burkan's high-rate fees as a lawyer, Reichenbach told this story:

"I met him on the street one day and asked him if he thought Hoover would be elected. Burkan said yes and the next day I got a bill for $200.

"A few weeks later, I bumped into Nate again and said:

"'I think it's going to rain today, don't you? And before we go any further, Nate, remember, I'm telling, not asking.'"

Harry L. Reichenbach, toastmaster of the evening, followed up Burkan's remarks by stating:

"Monopoly is weak. When the independent in any business goes, the business goes. It would be poor tactics to put the independent out of business, and I believe the important companies in this industry recognize the fact."

Independents Protest Against Combinations by Patent Custodians

Washington—There is a trust in the sound picture, radio and allied fields through control of patents, it was alleged before the Senate patents committee. Independents testified at the hearing before the committee.

The independents came before the committee to protest against alleged illegal combinations by custodians of patents.

Ernest R. Richman, counsel for the Radio Protective Ass'n., said that if the government is successful in its anti-trust suit against RCA and affiliated companies that "the radio industry and its allied arts will no longer be dominated by this combination."

"This is not a friendly suit or a test case," he said, "it is a militant attack against a great evil."

Gone Are the Good Ol' Days?

Hollywood — Constance Bennett declares since she has become a nomad emoter, trailing from studio to studio instead of parking on her contract lot (Pathe), she understands how the little lad felt whose divorced parents insisted he spend alternate week-ends at their homes, according to Dorothy Herzog.

One day he rushed to his mother with the following excited query:

"Mother, whose little boy am I this week? I'd like to know whether to study my Sunday school lesson or dig bait!"

High Court to Get General's Suit vs. Stanley

Wilmington, Del.—Suit of General Talking Pictures versus the Stanley Co., which is in reality an action against Electrical Research Products, is headed for the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals unless an out-of-court settlement is effected between the parties. The action involves an estimated $35,000,000 and covers three basic patents which are claimed to infringe the De Forest Phonofilm patents.

The case has been continued and is expected to be resumed next week. Star witness for the defense is Eugene A. Lauste, pioneer sound system inventor, while the plaintiff's ace is Dr. Lee De Forest.

Reports that a settlement might be brought about find little credence here.

Senator Dill Presses Action on Patent Bill

Washington—Senator Dill (Wash.) hopes to get final action at the present session on his bill to make patents unenforceable if use of them constitutes violation of the anti-trust laws. The bill, the senator says, results from complaints that combinations through agreement or cross-licensing are able to suppress the independent. The measure, he declared, would make any plaintiff in an infringement action come to court with "clean hands," so far as violation of anti-trust laws are concerned.

Klein Wins Judgment

Justice Aaron J. Levy, in Supreme Court, New York, has ordered judgment against American Cinema Ass'n. for $33,494, favoring Edward L. Klein Corp. Weinstein & Levinson represented Klein in its action based on contracts for foreign distribution of two series of 12 and 18 pictures per year, some of which the defendants were charged with failing to deliver.

"Best Possible" Break for "Little Fellow" Ordered of Paramount Force

PARAMOUNT PERSONALITIES

By CHARLES F. HYNES

S. R. KENT had everything well in hand, and surely was beaming throughout the four days of hard work.

Credit G. B. J. Dudley with handling the convention arrangements. The whole affair ran like clockwork.

Emanuel (Manny) Cohen, who heads the short subject department, said there would be no more silent newsreels. However, he added, there will be plenty of sound shorts to take their place.

Willard Vanderveer and Joe Rucker, Paramount News cameramen, got some cheers when they told about their adventures with the Byrd South Pole expedition.

"Bob" Gillham of Hanff-Metzger made the convention trip a honeymoon.

Ralph Kohn, veteran treasurer, didn't have any new deals to announce. A wonder for him.

Dr. E. Stern, company physician, did the early morning stuff for the boys.

George J. Schaeffer, eastern division manager, was chairman of the meetings, and made a big hit with his efficient treatment of company affairs.

Russ Holman of the advertising department got a big hand on the company's announcement. A real job, we call it.

John Hammell's wit was the occasion for several complimentary remarks.

J. A. Clark, ad sales chief, had a lot to say about the new accessories the company has to offer.

Larry Flinn, transportation manager, had things rolling along.

Walter Wanger took bows on the splendid manner in which the production end is functioning at the New York studio.

And B. P. Schulberg, in charge of Coast production, had plenty of enthusiasm over the new and old stars on the Paramount program.

Al Kaufman, production aide, insists that Yurrop agrees with him.

E. E. Shauer, foreign department chief, was convalescing, but that couldn't keep him away from the convention sessions.

And Mel Shauer, addressing the boys for the first time as a foreign production executive, made a real hit.

Charlie McCarthy's address on public relations was a highlight. The veteran executive is popular with the sales force.

Short product is to get real sales pressure, which doesn't make Miles Gibbons and Stanley Waite sore.

THE convention's most attractive souvenirs were the engraved cigar lighters, the gifts of Ufa. F. Wynne-Jones and Herr Malitz of Ufa were kept busy seeing to it that the proper lighters were given the proper delegates.

Paramount's publicity department functioned, and how! There were reams of material to be written, and the boys functioned in great shape. To see them up early Sunday pounding out material was a treat.

Les Whelan of the Harold Lloyd Corp. was plenty popular during the Paramount convention, one of the reasons being that he gave away bedroom slippers to advertise Harold Lloyd's new picture, "Feet First." This led to a crack that Lloyd should make a tailor picture, so Les can give away suits next year. And Les gets the break of a trip to Honolulu to appear in the Lloyd film.

W. R. Fraser and C. A. Neeper of the Lloyd firm were around making friends and renewing acquaintances. They promise a real laugh is in the new Lloyd film.

Vernon Gray of the New York Rialto probably was the most noticeable delegate by virtue of a loud tie which was a riot.

Ed Corcoran, former Paramounteer, had a glad hand for his host of friends. Ed. is handling the motion picture exhibit on the steel pier.

The boys that got a load of Phil De Angelis' billings in and around Atlantic City had congratulations for the veteran billposting firm head for turning out a real job.

J. E. D. Meador of Technicolor was on hand to convince all and sundry that color is the thing in present day and future pictures.

Hard work and nothing else but was the order of the day for delegates. Friday's long session is declared to be a convention record breaker.

The switch to pictures aimed directly at kid attendance surely made a hit with the Paramounters. Jackie Coogan certainly should get a big hand coming back to the screen under such favorable auspices.

Sam Katz's speech on theatre operation was a terse, straight from the shoulder talk by a man who knows and loves his subject.

His new title, by the way, under the combination of Paramount Publix is vice-president in charge of theatre operating activities.

Part of Contract

Atlantic City—Paramount considers its program announcement as part of an exhibition contract for the product, the firm officially states. However, only pictures definitely announced are included. Whether an announcement is part of the contract long has been a controversial subject in the industry.

Flexible Production Plan Is Outlined by Kent at Convention

Atlantic City—Play ball with the fellows who have played ball with Paramount was the substance of S. R. Kent's message to his sales force at the annual convention of the eastern and central division, which heard outlined the company's sales policy for 1930-31.

"The little fellow" is to be given the best break possible, Kent instructed his men in detailing the modified sales policy the company has adopted, under the new flexible production policy announced exclusively two weeks ago by Motion Picture News.

This policy calls for the listing of only the major portion of company product, with the remainder left open so that production can be shaped to meet possible change of public taste.

"Motion pictures," he said, "are today a style business and productions must be made to the current taste of theater patrons, tastes which change rapidly and often. It is therefore impossible for a producer in May to announce in every detail a group of pictures to be released during the entire year and hope to give theatres 100 per cent hits."

Minimum of 65

Paramount, under the new plan, oulined by Jesse L. Lasky, will have a minimum of 65 features. Of these 50 are announced as to title and cast, the remainder being left open. In addition, there will be 178 shorts and 104 issues of Paramount Sound News. No silents will be made by the company and the silent newsreel is being discontinued.

Kent pointed out that anybody who attempts in these changing times to hogtie a picture production department, force them to lay down the full details of a season's product months in advance and then stick to this program to the letter, is doing the worst possible service to theater box offices.

"Production must be left free to give exhibitors the advantage of changes in public tastes, new discoveries in sound, changes in star popularity" he explained. "New faces and voices are continually coming to the fore; production must not be forced to deny them to the screens because of casts announced months previously."

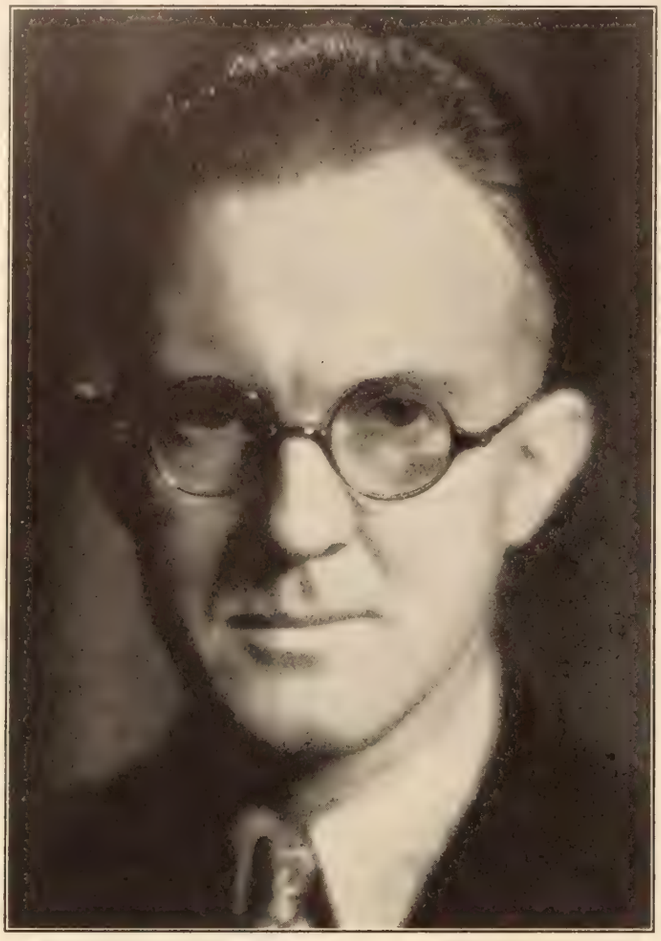
The Feature Line-Up

The line-up includes:

Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyer," starring Jackie Coogan and marking the youth's return to the screen; "Huckleberry Finn," starring Junior Durkin, who is to play that character in both pictures; and "Skippy," talker version of Percy Crosby's kid cartoons, featuring a juvenile not yet selected.

Clara Bow will be represented by four.

George Bancroft will be in two starring vehicles.



Richard Arlen will be in four, including "Spanish Acres."

Jack Oakie will have three, one of them being "Merton of the Talkies."

William Powell will be in two.

Nancy Carroll will have the same number.

"Feet First," Harold Lloyd's second talking comedy, under the direction of Clyde Bruckman. The story is by Bruckman, Lex Neal, John Grey and Paul Gerard Smith, and has scenes taken aboard a Pacific ocean liner, besides sequences in Hawaii. Lloyd's leading woman is Barbara Kent. Others in the cast are Robert McWade and Lillianne Leighton.

"Follow Thru," starring "Buddy" Rogers and Nancy Carroll in the screen musical adapted from the Schwab and Mandel Broadway play by Laurence Schwab and B. C. DeSylva, with musical numbers by DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart. Featured in the cast are Zelma O'Neal, Eugene Pallette and Jack Haley. This romance suggested by Glenna Collett, woman golfing champion, has Laurence Schwab and Lloyd Corrigan as directors, and is to be presented in Technicolor. The dances are under direction of David Bennett. George Ilsen and his band appear in the production. The supporting cast includes Thelma Todd, Don Tompkins, Margaret Lee, Claude King, Kathryn Givney and Albert Gran.

"Fighting Caravans," a western vehicle for Gary Cooper. Adapted from the novel by Keene Thompson and Edward E. Paramore, Jr. Ernest Torrence and Tully Marshall are in the cast.

"Monte Carlo," an Ernst Lubitsch musical production with Jeanette MacDonald, Jack Buchanan and Zasu Pitts. Written by Ernest Vajda, author of "Fata Morgana," based on the play by Hans Muller, "The Blue Coast," and adapted by Vincent Lawrence. Musical numbers by Richard Whiting of "Sweetie," W. Franke Harling of "Honey," and Leo Robin, lyric writer of "Louise."

"Rose of the Rancho," starring Gary Cooper, from the stage play; by David Belasco and Richard Walton Tully. Done in Technicolor, and directed by Victor Schertzinger. Musical numbers by W. Franke Harling and Leo Robin. Screen play by Zoe Akins, authoress of "Declassé," "Ladies Love Brutes," "Daddy Goes A-Hunting" and other hits.

"Heads Up," starring "Buddy" Rogers, with Victor Moore and Helen Kane featured. A screen musical directed by Victor Schertzinger and utilizing the Broadway play produced by Aarons and Freedley, with book by John McGowan and Paul Gerard Smith and musical numbers by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart.

German Player in "Morocco"

"Morocco," starring Gary Cooper, supported by Marlene Dietrich, German actress. This is an adaptation by Jules Furthman of the novel, "Amy Jolly," by Benny Vigny, directed by Josef von Sternberg.

"The Little Cafe," starring Maurice Chevalier. Directed by Ludwig Berger and based on the musical play by C. M. S. McLellan and Ivan Caryll, with adaptation by Percy Heath, and dialogue by Vincent Lawrence.

"The Scarab Murder Case," starring William Powell in S. S. Van Dine's latest story.

"Manslaughter," with Claudette Colbert and Fredric March in a version of Alice Duer Miller's story. Adapted and directed by George Abbott, co-author and director of "Broadway" and maker of "Why Bring That Up?"

Another picture, as yet untitled, starring Maurice Chevalier under direction of Ernst Lubitsch.

"The Sea God," starring Richard Arlen, supported by Fay Wray, under direction of George Abbott. This is being adapted by Abbott from John Russell's story.

"Dancing Mothers," to be directed by Edmund Goulding author of the stage pay.

"Let's Go Native," with the co-stars, Jack Oakie and Jeanette MacDonald, and these featured players, James Hall, Skeets Gallagher, Kay Francis and Eugene Pallette. Directed by Leo McCarey from an original by George Marion, Jr., and Percy Heath, with music by Richard Whiting and lyrics by Marion.

Huston in "The General"

"Honeymoon Lane," starring Eddie Dowling, in the screen version of his stage musical comedy.

"The Royal Family," with Fredric March in screen version of the Broadway stage comedy by Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman.

No Quota

Atlantic City—Because of the large number of percentage bookings, Paramount has dropped the sales quota plan. About 80 per cent of the firm's sales are on percentage, with the number increasing at a rapid rate.

178 Shorts on Paramount List; Double Previous

More than doubling its production output in the short subject division, Paramount Publix will offer 178 pictures of this type during 1930-31. Last year the total produced was 86. All of the pictures in this division are to be produced at the Paramount New York studio.

In addition to the short subjects, there will be 104 issues of Paramount sound news.

Included in the list are 18 screen songs, 18 talkartoons, 12 pictorials, 104 one-reel acts and 26 two-reel comedies. At the present time 35 pictures of the new group are completed and will be ready for early releases. Following is the list of those completed:

35 Shorts Completed

1,561 Houses in Paramount Chain; After Lots More

Atlantic City—There are 1,561 theatres in the Paramount Publix chain as a result of recently completed deals. The firm has pending an offer for purchase of the Famous Players Canadian chain, which totals about 22 houses.

The company long ago learned to place "complete faith in the inherent decency of the uninfluenced public," Sam Katz, vice-president in charge of theatres, told the eastern division convention here. Katz recently sounded a warning to the theatre organization against the use of any off-color advertising copy.

"Basically, public desire does not change. We have found very definitely, however, that there are cycles of changing expression which clearly indicate the increase or diminution of interest in certain directions, but this change merely alternates in direction for a brief period.

"The third year of increasing perfection of the talking screen brought a new appreciation of sectional differences, particularly in points of dialects. Furthermore, screen articulation seems to have intensified public interest in various affairs, mainly cultural and fundamental philosophy. As to any special kinds of entertainment, the public expects its entertainment to reflect idealized life as plausibly and clearly as does the grist of news and features in the modern daily newspaper.

"As a matter of fact, the modern showman finds that his problems are much the same as those of the modern newspaper editor. He reaches a logical and ethical solution to each problem in much the same manner.

Theatre Is Safeguarded

"The public does not expect or want to intrude upon the main function of the press, which fact automatically safeguards the theatre and opens the way for wider creative scope within the limitations of those boundry lines the public sets up for the theatre.

"As to physical operation of the theatre, our many years of experience has made courtesy, luxury, convenience and safety a matter to be taken for granted. The no-tipping policy that started in Publix theatres is another appreciated idea in theatre operation that vies in popularity with the thought that provided luxurious chairs and healthful ventilation."

The Buying Plan

Atlantic City—Exhibitors may contract for the entire 65 pictures planned by Paramount Publix for 1930-31, or may buy only the 50 pictures definitely set, under the new policy of the company.

Publix Stage Stars to Appear in Paramounts

Atlantic City—Stars of Publix stage shows are to appear in Paramount features and shorts and names like Eddie Cantor are to be starred in one and two reelers, Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president in charge of production, declared in outlining the company's product.

Paramount 6 Months' Net To Approach $10,000,000

San Francisco—Between $9,000,000 and $10,000,000 net for the first half of 1930 is expected to be reported in July by Paramount, when its second quarter earnings are announced. The figure to be announced for the quarter will be a record second quarter earnings, but considerably below the $4,800,000 reported for the first quarter of the year.

Paramount Will Get New Theatre On Site of Astor

A fifty-story theatre and office building will be erected on the present site of the Astor at Broadway and 45th St. by Walter Reade, who owns the property. The date is clouded in some doubt, in view of a lease which M-G-M holds on the house and which Loew officials state has about six years to run.

If and when the new theatre is erected, Reade is understood to have stated Paramount will get it. The operator is now allied with the Zukor organization, having leased his New Jersey string to Publix for 20 years.

Paramount Coast Meeting Under Way on Saturday

San Francisco—New production and sales policy of Paramount and its product for 1930-31 are to be outlined at the western division sales convention opening here Saturday. Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production, heads the group of executives here for the meeting.

In the group are S. R. Kent, vice-president and general manager; Walter Wanger, general manager of production; B. P. Schulberg, general manager of coast production; John D. Clark, western division sales manager; George Schaefer, eastern division sales manager; and Charles E. McCarthy, director of public relations.

Costello Off List

Hollywood—Dolores Costello is off the Warner list for next season, it is reported here. Miss Costello (Mrs. John Barrymore) has a new born baby at home engaging her attentions.

Terrific Campaign Staged to Combat Fox Chain and Paramount

Warners' terrific theatre acquisition campaign, which has been given added impetus in recent months, will be announced in detail at the company's annual sales convention, starting Tuesday at Atlantic City.

Deals closed in recent weeks have not been made public, in the hope of listing them all at once at the convention in an announcement designed "to rock the industry."

The acquisitions embrace a number of sections of the country, East, West, North and South. Twenty-five new theatres are under way or planned in Coast states, and 11 others under construction in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, New Jersey, Wisconsin and Ohio.

Fierce competition between the firm and Fox West Coast is in the offing on the Coast, and a tilt with Paramount in Virginia, where Warners has just acquired the National group of five houses at Roanoke. The Shenandoah chain recently was acquired in that state. Announcement also is expected to be made of acquisition of the Fourth Ave. Amusement Co., Louisville, chain of houses in Kentucky and Ohio. This deal was regarded as practically set Thursday night.

Active in Maryland

Warners is particularly active in Baltimore and in Maryland, where the Durkee circuit of several neighborhood houses and a house at Havre de Grace have been acquired, it is understood. Others at Baltimore acquired or being negotiated are understood to be the Ideal, Paterson and Astor, Edgewood, West Baltimore, and Arcadia, Salisbury, Md.

The theatres under construction, in addition to the Coast houses, are at Newark, Wilkinsburg, Pa., Perth Amboy, N. J., Tor-

First National Laying Off Star Series; Talent Must Fit Stories, New Decree

Top Billing for Barthelmess, Miller, Skinner—Others "Just in Cast"

Shaking the star complex out of its system for ever and a day—perhaps—First National has shaped production plans for next season on the basis of worthwhile stories regardless of whether or not such yarns fit a particular personality.

There will be three exceptions to the rule which the company has set up for itself and these are Richard Barthelmess, Marilyn Miller and Otis Skinner. This trio will appear in material suitable for their particular talents. All other players on the Burbank lot will be cast in pictures as they fit.

Thirty-five on New Schedule

This switch, coupled with definite decision to make 35 pictures for the new season, will constitute the principal message of Ned E. Depinet, general sales manager, to his sales force when it gathers at the Ambassador, Atlantic City, next Tuesday for a three-day meeting. The confab will be held in the same hotel as Warners', but the meetings will be essentially distinct and apart. The two companies, however, will combine forces at a banquet to be given Thursday evening as a climax to the deliberations.

First National's switch has been in the making for some months. This is evidenced by the inside deals made with Corinne Griffith, Billie Dove, Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackaill covering the unexpired portion of their contracts. In toto, the move has cost First National plenty of money to wash up the contracts involved, but the company feels that the policy of story first, star second, is the one that will count next during the season.

Announcement of titles is being withheld until Thursday. Of the 35 to be released, some are in work. These and others in the schedule are outlined elsewhere in this edition and were secured by Motion Picture News via Hollywood.

National advertising plugging the entire group of pictures will play a heavy part in new season's plans. As against an approximate $600,000 spent during 1929-1930 on this form of copy, $1,000,000 is being set aside for 1930-1931. A series of four page smashes will be used in magazines with heavy national circulations in the effort to sell the product directly to the public.

Four Regionals Later

Following the Atlantic City get-together, a series of four regional meetings will be held by Depinet. The first will be held June 1 in New York and the others in Chicago, New Orleans and San Francisco. Salesmen and bookers in each of surrounding exchange cities will be brought in to learn what is planned for the new year.

Flanking Depinet as convention kingpin next week will be A. W. Smith, Jr., and Gradwell L. Sears, who handle national sales between them. S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, will deliver a talk. In the home office group will be W. C. Boothby, Lynde Denig, J. M. Loeb, J. H. Cunniff, S. Shernow, A. Sachson, Charles Baily, Joe Kelly, Charles Kempke and A. W. Schwalberg.

Branch managers who will attend include: Benjamin Kalmenson, Albany; Fred M. Jack, Atlanta; Thomas B. Spry, Boston; F. J. A. McCarthy, Buffalo; F. P. Bryan, Charlotte; Paul Krieger, Cincinnati; W. J. Brandt, Cleveland; F. E. North, Detroit; Floyd Brown, Indianapolis; M. H. Keleher, New Haven; J. C. Vergesslich, manager, and G. Soiomon, H. Hummel, H. Levy, sales supervisors, New York; W. J. "Maybe It's Love?" Joe E. Brown, Evelyn Knapp and James Hall in the cast.

"Moby Dick," talker remake of "The Sea Beast," starring John Barrymore with Joan Bennett opposite. Lloyd Bacon is directing.

"Outward Bound," with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Helen Chandler.

"Penny Arcade," John Adolfi directing.

"See Naples or Die," based on stage play. Al Dubin and Joe Burke are writing original song numbers.

"Three Faces East," a talker re-make of a silent picture made some years ago.

"Viennese Nights," Alan Crosland directing.

Bulk of 1st Nat'l's 35 Finished or in Work

Hollywood—Major portion of the 35 pictures which are to comprise the 1930-31 First National program is completed, in work or determined upon. Official outline of the product is not available, pending the Atlantic City convention, but Motion Picture News has gathered sufficient data to give a fair outline of the schedule. The probable list will include:

Richard Barthelmas in "Adios," in which he will be supported by Fred Kohler and James Rennie under direction of Frank Lloyd, and in "Dawn Patrol."

Bernice Claire is to appear in two, "The Toast of the Legion," adapted from Victor Herbert's "Mademoiselle Modiste," with Walter Pidgeon opposite, and "The Call of the East," an original operetta by Otto Harbach and Jerome Kern.

Billie Dove in "The Devil's Playground," in which Sidney Blackmer plays opposite, under direction of William Beaudine.

Alice White in "Man Crazy," which Eddie Cline is directing with Myrna Loy in the cast; "The Widow from Chicago," in which she will be supported by Myrna Loy, Robert Armstrong and Paul Page; "College Mothers," an original by Earl Baldwin, which Cline will direct.

"The Right of Way," by Gilbert Parker, and directed by Frank Lloyd, with cast including Conrad Nagel, Loretta Young, Fred Kohler and William Janney.

"Little Caesar," by W. R. Burnett, with Edward G. Robinson in the title role.

"When We Were 21," with cast including Loretta Young, Myrna Loy, Roy Hallor and Dorothy Mathews under direction of William A. Seiter.

"Under Western Skies," with cast including Lila Lee, Sidney Blackmer, J. Farrell McDonald and Raymond Hatton.

Elsie Ferguson in "Scarlet Pages," Samuel Shipman-John B. Hymer play, supported by Marian Nixon and Grant Withers.

Marcus Asks Fair Play For Exhibs

Hollywood—RKO will not countenance conspiracy for deposits, so far as its employes are concerned, Lee Marcus told the sales convention at its session here. He warned his managers that they must not be a party to any conspiracy with other exchanges on exhibitor credits, demanding advance deposits because the exhibitor is having difficulty with some other company. If the exhibitor's dealings with RKO are okeh, the company wants his business, Marcus declared.

RKO Won't Road Show Next Year; 'Dead,' Exec Says

Chicago—"The road show is dead," said Lee Marcus, RKO vice-president in charge of distribution, in connection with the company's new production schedule, which calls for 34 features at an average cost of 50% more than last year's product. This is an increase of four and, despite the fact that, in addition, the new schedule calls for ten more productions of "special" classification than were listed last year, not one will be a road show picture, Marcus said.

The RKO party stopped here en route to the annual convention at Los Angeles. It comprised, in addition to Marcus, Joseph I. Schnitzer, president; Jerry Safron, eastern sales manager; Clive Adams, western sales manager; Frank O'Heron, treasurer; Charles Rosenzweig, general sales manager, and S. Langenscheidt, Berlin representative.

Schnitzer stated that the company's plans for wide film production were still "indefinite," and that, contrary to reports, neither a definite feature nor a starting production date to introduce the 70 mm. film had been decided upon.

The RKO party, while in Chicago, visited the company's theatre offices in the State-Lake building. They returned to the Blackstone hotel in the evening for dinner, leaving for the Coast on the California Limited that night.

Amos 'n' Andy, the radio team recently signed by RKO for one picture, were guests at the Blackstone dinner. They were introduced to their new "bosses" and advised that production would be begun on their picture early in July.

District and branch managers joined the RKO caravan at "stop-over" points all along the route from New York to the Coast.

Lee Marcus, while here, enthused over a "find" whom he had just signed up on a five-year contract before leaving New York. Her name is Roberta Robinson, described as a 19-year-old college girl, a "looker," personality and a voice. Her sole film experience to date has been in a minor part in "Dangerous Nan McGrew."

Shaw Plays for RKO; Deal Made By Basil Deane

Hollywood—Through Basil Deane, its producer in England, RKO has the privilege of buying for filming any of the works of George Bernard Shaw for the next ten years. If any are selected, they will be produced in England by Deane, who is a personal friend of the playwright.

Says Canadian Grosses Topped by "Rio Rita"

Hollywood—"Rio Rita" has chalked up a higher gross in Canada than any other picture ever made, Lee Marcus told the RKO sales convention here.

RKO Ramblings

HOLLYWOOD—Harry Tierney played several of his newly composed tunes for the boys on Tuesday to give them an idea of what they can expect in song numbers in next year's productions.

The Chicago Daily News "four star" review on "The Cuckoos" made all the boys feel good. Sales were immediately increased another half million.

Charles Rosenzweig claims he only held four grand slams in his life. One of them came in the bridge game with Jerry Safron and his partner listed as the victims.

Branches to Get Account Quotas; Aim to Help Small Exhib

Hollywood—Percentage only, to be operated in a manner which will help keep the small exhibitor in business, is the new selling policy of RKO, the sales force was told at its meeting here on Friday. The company will continue sale of its five-year franchises.

No specific money quotas on pictures will be set, Lee Marcus, vice-president in charge of distribution, stated in announcing the firm's policy. Instead, he said, each office will have a quota of accounts to reach.

"When you find a small exhibitor cannot pay beyond a certain price," he said, "don't oversell him. The small exhibitor must be fostered and helped to remain in business at a profit."

Small exhibitors were better taken care of by RKO this year than by any other company, and this policy will continue, he added.

Plan 25 New Theatres

Evidence of the intention of the company to expand its theatre holdings was given in the announcement that plans have been made for 25 new theatres next year.

Brass bands, film stars, and studio executives welcomed the sales convention to Southern California Sunday morning. After photography by still and motion picture cameras at the station, the gang was escorted via police sirens to the Roosevelt Hotel, which were headquarters during the week. Monday's session included a meeting at the studio with addresses by Charles Rosenweig, general sales manager, and Lee Marcus, vice-president.

Following the noon luncheon at the studio restaurant, the visitors then saw "Dixiana" and were later escorted around the studio to get an insight into the ramifications of sound production.

Tuesday morning's sessions were in charge of William LeBaron, production head, at which time he and other studio executives outlined in detail production activities for the coming year. In the afternoon all of the stars, players and directors under contract to the company were introduced to the individual sales managers. At this time outside producers of short product, including Frank Newman, Larry Darmour and George Winkler, became acquainted with the delegates.

Wednesday saw an intensive discussion of the sales plans for the coming season, with both morning and afternoon sessions devoted exclusively to the sales angle under the direction of Rosenzweig.

The sales discussions were carried over into Thursday morning's sessions, while the afternoon was devoted to various talks on advertising and sound, with a closing address by Joseph I. Schnitzer.

The convention closed Thursday afternoon, with every one forgetting the selling problems that evening when a "Titanic" dinner dance was staged in the Blossom Room of the Roosevelt.

Educational Planning Sound Newsreel; 114 Short Subjects on '30-'31 Schedule

Sennett and Christie Units Combine with Company's Production Forces

Chicago—With plans set for 64 two-reel comedies and 50 one-reel subjects, to be made by the combined Christie and Educational studios and Mack Sennett, Educational is discussing plans for a sound newsreel.

Kinograms, which the company has released for several years, will continue to be released by the company, Motion Picture News learns, and plans now are being considered for its production as a sound newsreel.

Company heads and middle-west, central and southern managers meet here Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. This is the second regional meeting, the first having been held Monday at New York. Another will convene at Denver May 26 and 27.

Because of the late closing of the deal for merger of the Educational, Christie and Metropolitan studios, details of the new line-up are not available as yet for outlining to the conventions. However, with the company set on the number of pictures which will comprise its new line-up, details are to be completed at an early date.

Mack Sennett is to supply 26 two-reel comedies for the new program. Marjorie Beebe and Andy Clyde have been signed for next season, and the balance of the production and writing staff remains intact. Sennett will personally direct the comedies.

Hamilton To Make Six

Lloyd Hamilton, whose contract has been renewed by Educational, will make six two-reelers. The Mermaids are being continued with eight scheduled in this group. The Tuxedo series will consist of eight. The Ideal, Vanity and Gayety series will have six two-reel comedies each.

The Terry-Toons, animated cartoons made by Paul Terry and Frank Moser, will number 26. The series is being made at the Audio-Cinema Studios in Long Island City. Of this series, "Caviar," "Pretzels," "Spanish Onions," "Indian Pudding," "Roman Punch" and "Hot Turkey" have already been released.

Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge will be issued once a month.

Work is to start at once on the coast at both the Educational and Metropolitan studios, which have been merged under terms of the Educational-Christie deal, first announced by Motion Picture News. Both studios will contribute a considerable part of the Educational program for 1930-31. Renting activities at Metropolitan will be continued.

A new operating company is being established with E. W. Hammons, Educational chief, as president, and Charles Christie as vice-president and business manager of the studios. In addition, a new producing corporation will be formed. Hammons also will be president of this corporation. Al Christie will be vice-president, and will assume general direction of the comedy producing activities. He will direct or supervise a number of the two-reel talking comedies to be made for Educational.

EDUCATIONAL ECHOES

By ROBERT HAGE

EDUCATIONAL'S eastern gang got a big thrill when they read in Motion Picture News that the Christie merger was set. The deal was announced at the Monday session.

It was a homecoming for Charlie Christie after an absence of three years from company conventions. He was nearly out-smiled, however, by his eastern representative "Bill" Frank.

President Earle W. Hammons was all business as he addressed the 12 managers and special representatives from ten eastern offices and told them what was in store for the new year.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager, also discussed the new product.

It was so close between closing of the deal and the start of the convention, that details could not be announced. However, the firm is set on the number which is 64 two-reel talking comedies and 50 one-reel subjects for the new year.

Stanley W. Hatch addressed the men for the first time as sales manager, but he already was well known to the gang, who have been shooting strong for him during the ten months he has been with the company.

It's getting to be a habit, this prize winning by Art Greenblatt, New York; Lou Klar, Cincinnati; J. A. Bachman, Philadelphia, and H. D. Noble, New Haven. They accept their awards these days with a nonchalance that would make a good cigarette advertisement.

Although he is celebrating his first year as g.m. in Canada, Jim Travis already has chalked up a record that preceded him to the convention.

Gordon White, advertising and publicity chieftain, had a lot of good suggestions to offer in the way of putting over the company's comedies. And he certainly had a right to take a few bows on the work he has done on "Match Play."

"Bob" Doidge, recently in publicity, and since elevated to the production department, a private office and a secretary, didn't even try to put on the high hat. He got a kick out of chats with Lou Klar as both are ex-marines.

Educational always has been known as a happy family, and only two new managers were present at the New York sessions. They are: F. J. Sliter, Boston, and J. H. Beaver, Washington.

Of course, they were envious of those old time Educational veterans, J. H. Morgan, Albany; H. F. Brink, Buffalo; H. R. Skirboll, Cleveland; and Joseph Kaliski, Pittsburgh. Few managers can match their continuous service with one company.

M. H. Starr, of Detroit, probably will have a lot to say about the popularity of one reelers this season.

Russ Borg, of Kansas City, has a good gag to offer about the traveling salesman.

PROBABLY Jimmie Winn, who now does his stuff at St. Louis, will have a lot to say about those Omaha days.

And W. O. Galloway, Des Moines, probably will have something to offer about conditions in the Iowa City.

They'll be paging J. A. Reynolds, of Charlotte, on the business he's been doing during the last year.

Leo Blank, Omaha, brings a famous name to the picture business. But Leo has plenty in the way of sales ability to offer in addition.

There'll be a German element when H. C. Dressendorfer, of Indianapolis, gets in his say.

W. J. Cammer, of Oklahoma City, probably will knock 'em dead as a sheik.

N. P. (New Orleans) Eberly may give the boys a lesson in rolling the bones.

However, L. L. (Louisville) Goldberg may have something to offer in this regard.

J. A. Reynolds, of Charlotte, also is said to be pretty adept.

Watch Arthur Luscas, southern division sales chief, take his boys in tow.

J. H. Butner, of Atlanta, can talk about his record on "Match Play," which is said to top the nation.

F. A. Tomes, of Dallas, is convinced that two reel comedies are the thing.

At the closing session E. W. Hammons was presented with a handsome tripod telescope by the branch managers. The presentation talk was made by Jack Skirboll, special representative.

The home office gang is now in Chicago, led by their chief, E. W. Hammons: A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant manager S. W. Hatch, general sales manager J. R. Wilson, sales promotion department; F. X. Carroll, contract department; G. S. White, director of advertising and publicity.

At the Congress Hotel the home office executives are to meet the managers from Educational's Mid-West, Central and Southern States offices.

Max Stahl, that veteran and popular Educationalite, will be a host, and what a host Max can be. He's made a great record with the company.

Max will do the welcoming act for Harold Johnson, who hails from Swedetown and succeeded Max at the Minneapolis post. H. B. undoubtedly will be called on for some of his famous Swede stories.

Blackmer in New York

Sidney Blackmer is in New York from Hollywood to visit his wife, Lenore Ulric. He has just completed a role in "The Bad Man" for First National.

U. K. and Other Lands in Plans —10-Car Train Carries Men to L. A.

Production in England and extension to other countries abroad in a move to protect foreign revenue may be launched shortly by Fox.

Plans are still in a nebulous form, but it is quite likely that announcement of the step will be formally made before the annual sales convention terminates in Los Angeles late next week.

The company domestically is set for the 1930-1931 season. As noted, there will be 48 features released and two issues a week of Movietone News. The big shot of the line-up is scheduled to be "The Big Trail," which Raoul Walsh is now directing on a budget of $1,250,000. Fox declares this is more money than the company has ever spent before on a single negative.

Convention Train Off

With a special train at its disposal, the conventioneers left New York Thursday for Los Angeles. When the special pulls out of Chicago Friday night, it will be a ten-car train running as a section of the California Limited. Harley L. Clarke, who spent several days in New York this week, left for Chicago on Wednesday to join James R. Grainger and the convention group there for the trek to the Pacific Coast.

When the train reaches Pasadena, exploitation forces marshalled by Glen Allvine, Roger Ferri and Victor M. Shapiro will swing into line in the form of a dirigible and 'planes which will usher the group into Los Angeles proper.

The Fanchon and Marco girls and the studio personnel, headed by Winfield Sheehan, will be at the Santa Fe station with

Stress Value of Theatres In W. C. Local Tie-Up

Hollywood—In conjunction with Fox West Coast Theatres celebration of Harold B. Franklin Month, various civic organizations in Los Angeles and vicinity are having Franklin and other West Coast officials as luncheon guests. At all of the gatherings, the executives from the circuit detail the importance of motion pictures to the life of the community, together with the importance of the theatre in building up the business zone in which it is located.

The luncheons in conjunction with Franklin Month include the Breakfast Club, West Adams Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles Advertising Club, Vermont-Manchester Business Ass'n, Grand Avenue Merchants Ass'n, Los Angeles City Club, Pasadena Chamber of Commerce, Better Business Commission Ass'n, Wilshire Council, Ladies Breakfast Club, Western Avenue Chamber of Commerce, Lions Club, Shriners and the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce.

Various luncheons are scheduled during the current month.

Cleveland—The local Fox exchange has outgrown its quarters and plans are now being prepared both for a possible new building on Payne Ave., just opposite the present location, and also for a second story to the present building.

Talkers Increase M-G-M Income 30%; Build Up Box Office Draw of Stars

Percentage Rating of Players Revealed at Chicago Sales Meet

Chicago—Advent of dialogue has had a varying effect on drawing power of M-G-M stars, with the draw of one, Lon Chaney, soon to be tested, the M-G-M sales force was told here during its convention where the firm's 50 features, 60 shorts and 104 issues of Hearst Metrotone News were outlined.

The bulk of company stars, according to Thomas J. Connors, southern sales manager, have increased their draw with advent of sound.

Figures cited by Connors revealed that M-G-M stars have the following revised box office values since their appearance in dialogue productions: William Haines, 33 per cent increased value; Norma Shearer, 50 per cent increased value; Greta Garbo, 33 per cent increased value; John Gilbert (with only one production, described as an "unsatisfactory" starring vehicle,) grossed approximately the same amount as did his silent features; Ramon Novarro, about 12 per cent increased value; Joan Crawford, 25 per cent increase, and Marion Davies, about 14 per cent increase.

Sound Boosts Gross 30%

The figures were based on box office grosses of the individual stars' silent and talking pictures at ten large circuit theaters outside of New York. In a smaller circuit which holds a percentage contract, Connors said the company's increase since talking pictures was 30 per cent.

Handicaps which confronted the M-G-M producing organization at the beginning of the 1929-30 season through the company's late arrival on the market with all-talking products, its limited knowledge of the respective values of its stars in this field where most of them were as yet untried, and other handicaps to effective selling were outlined to the convention delegates by Connors. He drew an effective picture of how these handicaps were met and overcome in the brief period of one year, making a comparison of the present box office value of the M-G-M stars with those of their competitors.

Today, he said, the only unknown quantity from a box office viewpoint among the company's players is Lon Chaney. He, too, will be tested in his forthcoming production, "The Unholy Three," in the near future.

Thirty of the new season pictures will be star vehicles. They are: Marion Davies, Greta Garbo, Lon Chaney, John Gilbert, Norma Shearer, Lawrence Tibbett, Ramon Novarro, William Haines, Joan Crawford, Marie Dressler and Polly Moran. New star personalities will be presented. Among them will be Grace Moore of the Metropolitan Opera and concert stage. Jack Buchanan, star of Charlot's Revue and "Wake Up and Dream," will also be featured.

All M-G-M productions will be in dialogue form with some silent versions. Many will be produced in several languages.

Several of the new season productions are

Unplayed Pictures Decrease

Chicago—Despite the Thacher decision outlawing compulsory arbitration in the industry, M-G-M has 3,000 fewer unplayed or undated pictures than it had last August, T. J. Connors, southern sales manager, told delegates to the company convention. Only seven exchanges, he said, have not contributed to this decrease of unplayed business. Shorts, he said, have not fared as well as features in this respect, having $200,000 more undated business than features.

M-G-M Close-Ups and Cut-Ups

By SHERWIN S. KANE

CHICAGO—Felix Feist was one of the busiest men at a busy man's convention for the full period of the meeting. His Sunday was spent with committees and various convention officers and visitors. On Monday, he opened the business sessions in the gold room of the Drake and was on the job from then on. His first words at the introductory session were a tribute to the memory of Marcus Loew. Thereafter, he launched into the exacting business of conducting what was described as "the company's most significant sales meeting." And that job wasn't over until a few minutes before train time back east.

Advertising and exploitation men come in, too, for their share of tribute when the laurels for convention work are being awarded. Howard Dietz, in addition to supervising a great part of the convention routine, found himself placed on the convention program, as well. In an entertaining and informative address, he revealed facts about M-G-M that might have surprised many of the executives present, for all we know. His enthusiasm over the company's forthcoming product was visibly transmitted to his audience. "We can't be licked, boys!" was his parting shot. And if they all feel about it as Howard Dietz does, they can't.

"Fergy" Ferguson was responsible, among other things, for the colorful decorations provided for the convention room. He provided the delegates with plenty to look at. It takes a showman to help make a showmen's convention a success.

Si Seadler, W. C. Bishop and John S. MacLeod were on hand all the time to help news on its way into print—and to help create it. Every exploitation stunt—of which there were plenty at the four-day meeting—owed something to one or another of them.

Morris Alin, editor of "The Distributor," did a noteworthy job of getting his paper into print between dusk of one night and dawn of the next, every day of the convention. Morrie had plenty of work covering all meetings and addresses, keeping track of program changes, social calendars, entertainment stunts and gossip, but you could have written all that he missed of it on the back of a postage stamp. Some catalogue compiler is missing a good bet by letting this man stay where he is.

Arthur Loew arrived on Tuesday, and the sun shone for the first time since the opening of the convention. The sun came out and the birds sang. He addressed the convention Wednesday on problems and prospects of foreign markets.

Hal Roach was a runner-up against all comers for the distinction of being "the busiest man at the convention." Personally, we chased him for three days with some foolish questions in mind, which we intended building into an interview, without catching up to him.

M-G-M's trade mark lion, that is, a rubber inflated version of the celebrated Leo, did less work and attracted more attention than any other convention attache. He was parked in his prominent circus bungalow on the site of the Drake's Tom Thumb golf course, facing Michigan avenue, where three-quarters of the city's population could inspect him. The other one-quarter were not Lon Chaney fans and wouldn't go near it.

A copy of the current issue of Motion Picture News was in the mail box of every convention delegate at the Drake by early Monday afternoon.

Plenty of social events were on the program during the four-day meeting. They started pleasantly enough on Sunday night with a theatre party, "The Little Show," at the Selwyn Theatre. On Monday—the busiest day of the convention—only luncheons and dinners interrupted work, with the inevitable exception, of course, of those delightfully informal gatherings in any room that boasts a deck of cards, a

M-G-M Aces

Chicago—"Ace" men who received pins and awards of the M-G-M Legion of Honor from Felix Feist, general sales manager, at Monday's convention sessions were John Allen, Doc Banford, Eddie Brauer, L. B. Butler, Jack Byrne, Clat Clatworthy, Walt Dolin, Tom Donaldson, Abe Eskin, Jack Goldberg, Eddie Green, Pete Higgins, Jimmy Hommel, Clyde Houston, Ralph Maw, Felix Mendelssohn, Harry Miller, Joe Morrow, L. C. O'Connor, Grover Parsons, Clarence Pippin, Maurice Rabanus, Jack Re Ville, Maurice Saffle, Bob Smith, George Turner, Butch Wingham and Lou Amacher.

Awards and pins were also presented for delivery to Office Managers A. V. Philbin, Dallas; R. W. Carmichael, Los Angeles, and H. W. Genter, Pittsburgh, and to Auditors Parke D. Agnew, J. M. Cummings and Sidney Schwartz.

Picture Is Only Draw, Says Schiller; Presentations and Vaudeville Flopping

Schiller Suggests "Deadlines"

Chicago—E. A Schiller of Loew's, Inc., endorsed the proposal of an M-G-M sales executive that "deadline" pictures be designated as a means of expediting the securing of playdates from lax exhibitors.

He expressed the opinion that keeping the exhibitor right up to the line on his play dates was strictly up to the exchange.

"We (Loew's) use the product of most of the bigger companies," he said. "When they force us to play their pictures, we play them."

It had been previously suggested at the convention that Laurel-Hardy and Chase comedies be used as "deadline" pictures to get playdates from exhibitors who were negligent about their contracts for the company's other short subject product. The same procedure was considered for feature picture application, but this situation was admittedly less serious than that presented by the shorts.

pair of dice, a cheese sandwich, or what have you? At the end of the day, of course.

Maurice Wolf, the story guy, purposely missed the train which was to pick him up on the way to Chicago, in order to miss a certain card game which made him a pauper but more cautious man en route to last year's convention.

"I don't think I could interest myself in distribution. It's too tough."—E. A Schiller of Loew's, Inc.

Jai-Alai games at the Kamiso Fronton were Monday night's diversion for some of the delegates. Not satisfied with being merely part of an audience, Alan Cummings, Eddie Aaron and Bill Marsh organized a book or, as one might say, made a handbook on a handball game. The corporation declared a three-way dividend on $15.20 at the end of the evening.

Jimmy Hommel, the Denver manager, received so many invitations to this and that on the strength of his winning smile by the second day of the convention that he had to spend the last two days dodging tooth paste manufacturers who wanted him to smile for their ads.

Charlie Kessnich, Atlanta district manager, turned in the ace exploitation returns—two pages, first and second, of the Atlanta Journal and inside spots in addition, devoted to M-G-M. And all because they like him down there.

Greeting telegrams addressed to the convention were read from Norma Shearer, Laurence Tibbett, Grace Moore, Cecil B. DeMille, William Haines, Joan Crawford, Lon Chaney, Marion Davies, Greta Garbo, Ramon Novarro, John Gilbert, Polly Moran and Marie Dressler.

And then that swarm of Western Union messenger boys who burst in on the convention bearing telegrams from Nick Schenck to every delegate in the room. And not "collect," either.

The Chicago exchange boys, Frank Ishmael, Max Schwartz, Felix Mendelssohn and others, were kept on the go continually pointing out those interesting products of Chicago's civilization—the business offices and battle scenes of the city's better known gangsters. No sale of the stockyards to visitors here, any more. Nor the Art Institute, alas.

An unidentified lad in the cast of "The Little Show" rose splendidly to the occasion when the gang attended the Sunday night performance.

"I like your Fred Quimbys," he remarked to a chorus gal.

"Meaning what?" queries she, blushingly.

"Simply that your shorts intrigue me," he niftied.

Frank Hensler and Harry Shumow had to argue to keep their seats in the convention room at the opening session. Everyone thought they were usurping someone else's place, but Hensler proved that he is now manager of the Kansas City office and had a right to his seat. Shumow eventually convinced his interrogators that he was no longer in the Milwaukee office, but is now the new manager at Omaha.

Ralph Pielow, Albany manager, was perhaps more pleased than any one else at the convention that Chicago had been chosen for the occasion. His son is in school here, and visits with him added much to his enjoyment of the four-day convention.

Ted O'Shea characterized as the "most popular exchange man I've ever known" by one of the Buffalo lads.

John Allen, the Cincinnati "Legionnaire?" broke down and confessed to his hold-out pals at the convention that he was no longer one of them. Married three weeks ago.

Henry Nathanson, Regal chief, claims a record for the Tom Thumb golf course at the Drake, with a neat 53 for the eighteen. "Didn't use a wooden club all the way around, either," he boasts.

John Willingham put his famous Memphis "ya-hoooo" into circulation when his name was called for the Legion of Honor roll. It started something.

Eddie Aaron couldn't figure out why somebody always started to pass those boxes of good cigars at just that point where the box would be empty when it finally reached him. He has lots of customers back home who like good cigars, too.

Tom Connor's wardrobe lasted through the convention without duplication at any event. He even possessed a specially-made bridge suit, according to Col. Ed Schiller, who denied that it aided in bettering his game a bit.

The Salt Lake City delegation, Clarence Severson, Ed Mix, Ernie Gibson and Maurice Saffle, insisted that their home town pond has it all over on Lake Michigan and that the boys back thar know more about a "cannon" than a Chicagoan can learn in a life-time. Just the same, you don't get in the newspapers as often as we do.

Screenings all day Tuesday at the Parkside Theatre on North Clark. Two features just completed on the coast, high lights from other features now in production, a variety of shorts, including comedies, novelties, a Colortone Revue and a test subject, comprised the product shown.

"Cy" Bivings from [illegible] was awarded a pair of high heeled slippers for the distinction of being the lankiest man at the convention. There was no contest, as "Cy" was picked out by the judges the minute they spotted him. He was sitting down at the time.

There is no truth to the rumor that Hal Roach tried to sign up Clat Clatworthy of Minneapolis on a long-term contract, we are told.

Some Silents

Chicago—M-G-M plans a number of silent versions of the 50 talkers on its 1930-31 product. An undetermined number of foreign language versions also are slated.

Loew's Banking on Films; Shorts to be Played Up on Circuit

Chicago—"The picture's the thing." This is the conclusion drawn by Loew's [illegible] on its theatre experience, according to Col. E. A. Schiller, general manager of the circuit. The company, he told theatre men at the M-G-M convention here, has made the costly mistake in the past of hoping to boost grosses with big name acts.

"It is the picture that brings them in and not the presentation, high-priced act or anything else," Schiller asserted.

The short feature, declared Schiller, "is going to be a very important factor in the success or failure of the theatre in the future," and he intends to call a meeting in New York to determine how it can be made a more prominent and important part of Loew programs than in the past.

"My associates and I," he said, "are convinced that we have made a mistake in the past in hoping to build theatre business by the presentation of big-name stage acts. We have learned (and have paid for our experience) that unless the feature picture was really worthwhile, regardless of the strength of the stage presentation, business at its best was merely normal. It is the picture that brings them in, and not the presentation, high priced act or anything else," he concluded.

Win Stardom

Chicago—Their work in "Caught Short" has won stardom for Marie Dressler and Polly Moran, who are to be co-starred in "Razzle-Dazzle" by M-G-M.

Nine Stars, Five Talker Serials on Pathe Schedule for 1930-31 Season

Sales Forces Get Production Plans at Four Regional Conventions

Chicago—Nine stars are to be offered by Pathe in its 20 features for the 1930-31 season, in addition to a number of featured players, Phil Reisman, general sales manager, will tell the central division sales force at its meeting here Saturday and Sunday. Harry Lorch, Middle West division manager, will preside at the sessions. The company is returning to the serial field, scheduling five on its new year's program.

The meeting here is the second regional gathering, the first having been held Monday and Tuesday at New York. A third meeting is scheduled May 23 and 24 at St. Louis, and a fourth May 28 and 29 at San Francisco.

Pathe's line-up will include 20 features and 52 two-reel comedies in eight series, 52 issues of Pathe Audio Review, 104 issues each of Pathe Sound News and Pathe News, six Knute Rockne sports pictures, 26 Grantland Rice Sportlights, 26 issues each of sound and silent Aesop's Fables and 26 Vagabond Adventure Pictures.

The Star Roster

The Pathe stars this season are Ann Harding, Constance Bennett, Mary Lewis, William Boyd, Eddie Quillan, Helen Twelvetrees, Fred Scott, Robert Armstrong and James Gleason. These personalities will appear in individual starring productions and together in casts of other productions.

Pathe's directors are Paul Stein, Tay Garnett, Joseph Santley, Edward H. Griffith, Rollo Lloyd, Russell Mack, John Robertson, Alfred E. Green and Reeves Eason. The authors are Eugene Walter, Philip Barry, Max Marcin, Carl Hovey, Sada Cowan, Maurice Coons, Lynn Riggs, Clara Beranger, Walter de Leon, Clare Kummer, Josephine Lovett, Paul Gangelin, Ralph Murphy, Ray Rockett, Horace Jackson, Thomas Lennon, Garrett Fort, James Seymour, Thomas Buckingham, Paul Schofield, W. C. Tuttle, John Erskine, Edward Bennett, Harold Schwartz, James Gruen, Mauri Grashin, Courtney Ryley Cooper and Laura Hope Crews. Josiah Zuro is general music director.

Three with Star Casts

The 20 specials for the new season follow: There will be three productions with star

"Pauline" Returns

Pathe will have five talker serials on its 1930-31 season, marking the company's return to this form of entertainment. The list will be headed by "The Perils of Pauline," one of the biggest chapterplay hits of years ago. Another one of the subjects will be "Pardon My Gun," which is to star George Duryea and Sally Starr.

PATHE—SOUND AND COLOR

By J. P. CUNNINGHAM

CONGRATULATIONS were in order for Phil Reisman, general sales manager, and C. J. Scollard, treasurer, recently elevated to the Pathe cabinet of three, with E. B. Derr rounding out the trio.

E. B. would have got a great kick out of the meetings, particularly the enthusiasm for the way he is hitting the ball in production.

Terry Ramsaye's versatility was a subject of comment. He certainly is doing a real job with Pathe News and Pathe Audio Review.

The newsreel owes a lot to Ray Hall, its efficient editor, whose work was praised during the sessions.

His job in putting over "Swing High" at Baltimore won congratulations for Joe Rivkin, Pathe exploiteer, who certainly knows how to handle openings.

Rutgers Neilsen, by the way, had a medal to exhibit. It's in recognition of his five years of service with the company, a fine bit of sentiment which made him happy.

T. S. Delehanty, vice-president and general manager of Pathe International Corp., says the outlook is bright in the foreign fields.

Ross Cropper, Boston veteran, took occasion to reminisce on the old days at Omaha.

J. F. McAloon, Reisman's efficient assistant, got a big hand on his talk.

Pathe's exchange efficiency is due in great part to E. W. Ballantyne, who is in charge of exchange operations.

Pathe's announcement book has some fine art work and the line-up looks good.

Credit Rutgers Neilsen with staging a real party at the Hollywood, where his good friend, Nils T. Granlund, m.c.'d to the delight of the Patheites.

Ed. McEvoy is one of the most popular sales executives in the business, and his good fellowship during the convention showed why. Ed.'s men swear by him, and how!

The Washington gang pulled a fast one on Charlie Stombaugh, signing his name to the breakfast check for the bunch.

Bob Mochrie was the object of a lot of kidding on account of the $25 riding boots he was nicked for. And he couldn't get the bootery to shave a dime off the price.

And Bob, so it seems, makes a practice of reading "The Saturday Evening Post" on Friday nights.

Several Bergs were there, including E. Ginzburg of Quaker town, and N. Steinberg of the city of stogies, which is another berg—some smoke.

Joe O'Sullivan finished indexing all of the Audio Reviews in record time and had the book in the hands of the boys before they left.

THE chairman announced that Tuesday was E. B. Derr's birthday. The boys sent him a pippin of a telegram.

No wonder Gar O'Neill is an "up-to-the-minute man"—he was born in Lexington, Ky.

The boys all gave Joe Rivkin a hand for his exploitation stunts on "Swing High."

Max Westebbe, wearer of a Chester Conklin walrus mustachio, gave his famous sound synchronized imitation of a fish out of water.

Ted Jaediker decided to put some of the Hollywood beauties on the Pathe payroll as the art department models.

Manny Lee, short subject ad champ, stayed long on all the sessions to get sales slants.

L. Garvey came to the convention by boat—the Albany night boat.

Bog Wolff made a great hit with his stories.

Arthur Goldsmith held his own with the snappy dressers.

The "Rose" of the meeting was J. L. Rose of Albany.

Sam Lefko, a Pittsburgher, is the newest and youngest branch manager, but he makes up in pep. What he lacks is years.

Charlie Ulrich, press book king, was at every session to get new ideas on injecting sales power in the press books.

H. Price, who comes from the Smoky City, has just the tag for a salesman.

C. F. Kenneth, of the NYC sales staff, was the "Eddie Quillan" of the convention with his trick clothes for every session.

Max Fellerman, Pathe's sales ace in Brooklyn, was an enthusiastic conventionite.

Ed Ballentine looked "the Arrow Collar" kid. Too bad there were no ladies present.

Patheite most resembling a movie actor—J. L. McAloon, who is a dead-ringer for Bob Ames.

Jack Level, Pathe Sun editor and staff all rolled into one jolly good fellow, used a kind of short hand that was pretty tough on pencil points.

Cheek

One of the laughs of the Pathe convention concerns an exchange manager who was transferred to another city. A few days after his arrival he was informed by one of the other managers that he was on the cuff for $4.50, that amount being his assessment for a present given his predecessor, whom the new arrival did not even know.

Pathe Seeking Fresh Talent; Actress Scouts

Hollywood—Pathe is launching investigation of dramatic schools, stock companies and music conservatories for discovery of new talent.

Laura Hope Crews, former stage star and recent dialogue coach at Pathe, has been commissioned to gumshoe for new screen candidates who will be given six-month tryout contracts. Miss Crews' first stop is San Francisco, after which she will pick out others in cities en route East.

Pathe thinks there are certain definite requirements necessary for screen players and stars of the future. Beauty and camera personality, besides quality and personality in the microphoned voice, are figured for the potential stars of the next three years. The company believes the stage has been thoroughly combed by producers in their search for talent and nothing much of importance remains in that field. Pathe expects to tap the supply right at its source and thereby secure possibilities in young faces and voices that can be developed with proper handling.

'Frisco Society Girls Go For Pathe's Talent Gag

San Francisco—The local "four hundred" are falling hard for Pathe's hunt-for-new-talent stunt. Two 'Frisco buds already have applied for tests. They are Dorothy Spreckels, daughter of the late A. B. Spreckels, sugar magnate, and Ann Koster, daughter of Frederick J. Koster, business man and former president of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce.

Pathe Central, Southern Divisions in St. Louis

St. Louis—Harry Graham, central division sales manager, and W. E. Callaway, southern division sales manager of Pathe, together with the managers, salesmen and bookers in the exchanges of their districts, will make their headquarters at the Coronado Monday and Tuesday where the divisions will meet in joint convention.

Phil Reisman, J. F. McAloon and E. W. Ballentine of the home office will be here. Others who are attending include:

Central: Buffalo—James Reilly, branch manager; G. W. Ferguson, J. Krause and E. C. Markens, salesmen, and A. Teschemacher, booker. Cincinnati—S. Jacques, branch manager; H. R. Callaway, N. Levene, C. A. Molte and A. Sugerman, salesmen, and R. O. Laws, booker. Cleveland—O. J. Ruby, branch manager; R. E. Bishop, M. J. Ghek and W. H. Windsor, salesmen, and A. E. Brauenig, booker. Indianapolis—Harry Graham, branch manager; A. W. Carrick and G. Levy, salesmen, and N. Humm, booker. St. Louis—W. E. Branson, branch manager; M. J. Dunn, L. A. LaPlante and J. Noehrn, salesmen, and R. C. Mortensen, booker.

Southern: Atlanta—H. R. Kistler, branch manager; C. R. Beacham, O. K. Bourgeois, B. A. Wallace and S. T. Wilson, salesmen, and F. L. Stowe, booker. Charlotte—R. C. Price, branch manager; R. S. Beacham, R. F. Brannon and R. S. Mitchell, salesmen, and H. Keeter, booker. Dallas—W. E. Callaway, branch manager; H. G. Krumm, W. B. Renfroe, S. M. Sachs and W. B. Wesley, salesmen, and R. F. Lowman, booker. Memphis—A. M. Avery, branch manager; J. Greig and M. C. White, salesmen, and N. T. Powers, booker. New Orleans—G. C. Brown, branch manager; H. F. Cohen and R. E. Pfeiffer, salesmen, and J. Duffy, booker. Oklahoma City—C. W. Allen, branch manager; J. Brainard, J. W. Davis and P. Fielding, salesmen, and W. R. Pittinger, booker.

Grainger's Fault

When Harry Buxbaum first applied to Jimmy Grainger for a job years ago, he said:

"I'm the best damned salesman in America."

"Oh, yeah," said Jimmy, "how do I know?"

Buxbaum: "Try me and see."

A week later, "Bux" returned without a sale and Grainger gave him the works. Whereupon "Bux" replied:

"Say, there's nothing the matter with me. My salesmanship is O. K. The trouble is with the fellow who sold you the idea to sell those pictures in the first place."

Narrated by Harry Reichenbach at the dinner tendered this week to Harry Buxbaum.

Sales Policies Bared at Pathe Regional Meet

Chicago—Sales policies best adapted to the company's new feature and short subject product were discussed by home office and mid-western executives at Pathe's regional sales meeting, held at the Blackstone hotel here, Wednesday and Thursday. Particular emphasis was placed on sales methods employed in the marketing of junior features and newsreels by the speakers, who advised salesmen that with the increasing importance of this product, more and more attention must be given to proper sales methods.

Ray Nolan, Kansas City branch manager, outlined sales plans for the newsreel product, while the short subject sales policy was revealed by J. F. McAloon, assistant sales manager of Pathe. Phil Reisman, general sales manager, outlined the company's new feature product sales policy.

J. J. Clarke, Chicago branch manager, set forth rules of proper conduct for salesmen. Other addresses were made by R. S. Ballantyne, Omaha branch manager, who advanced suggestions for final sales disposition of the company's current product; and by E. W. Ballentine, manager of exchange operations, who offered suggestions on branch management and operations.

Quotas Are Announced

Announcement of district and individual quotas was made by Phil Reisman at Thursday morning's sessions, which was followed by a discussion of the individual problems of division and branch managers and salesmen, by Reisman, McAloon and Ballentine. A discussion of divisional problems occupied the afternoon session. A banquet concluded the central division meeting, which was attended by the company's mid-west division and branch managers, bookers, office managers and salesmen.

Harry Lorch, central division manager, presided at the meetings, which included screenings of the company's feature and short subject product.

Derr Continues on Coast

Hollywood—E. B. Derr, newly-elected general manager of Pathe, intends to continue his headquarters on the Coast.

Nine Stars, Five Talker Serials on Pathe Schedule

casts. "Swing High," "Beyond Victory" and "Holiday."

"Swing High," which is already playing first runs, is by James Seymour and Joseph Santley and directed by the latter. Helen Twelvetrees, Fred Scott, Dorothy Burgess, Sally Starr, Nick Stuart, Chester Conklin, Ben Turpin, Stepin Fetchit, Robert Edeson, Bryant Washburn, George Fawcett, Daphne Pollard, John Sheehan, Mickey Bennett, Little Billy and William Langan compose the cast. Six songs are featured.

"Beyond Victory" is an original by Edward Bennett and adapted by James Seymour, Lynn Riggs, Thomas Lennon, Mauri Grashin and Garrett Fort. The direction will be by John Robertson. The cast includes William Boyd, Ann Harding, James Gleason, Robert Armstrong, Helen Twelvetrees, Zazu Pitts, Wally Albright and Laura Hope Crews.

"Holiday" will offer Ann Harding, Mary Astor, Edward Everett Horton, Robert Ames and Hedda Hopper in the stage play by Philip Barry. In the support are Monroe Owsley, Audrey Forrester, Mabel Forrest, Creighton Hale, and Hallam Cooley. Horace Jackson did the adaptation and E. H. Griffith will direct.

Constance Bennett will appear in four attractions: "In Deep," Eugene Walter with scenario by Forrest Halsey; "Lazy Lady," by Edward Bennett, with dialogue by Clare Kummer; "Adam and Eve," a dialogue presentation of John Erskine's magazine serial "All the Way," by Paul Scofield and directed by Paul Stein.

Three Starring Ann Harding

Ann Harding will star in three productions and will appear in the cast of two others. Her starring vehicle will be "The Greater Love," by Eugene Walter, with scenario by Waldemar Young; "Romance Harbor," by Max Marcin; "I Take This Woman," an adaptation of "Jane Eyre," with Harry Bannister featured and directed by Rollo Lloyd. Miss Harding will be seen in the cast of "Holiday," Philip Berry's play, and "Beyond Victory."

Three from William Boyd

William Boyd will star in three features and will appear in the cast of "Beyond Victory." His three starring vehicles are "The Last Frontier," Courtney Ryley Cooper's novel, with scenario and dialogue by Jack Cunningham; "North of the Yukon," by Eugene Walter, and "Rawhide," to be directed by Reeves Eason.

Mary Lewis will make her first appearance on the talking screen in "The Siren Song," a musical story prepared by Lynn Riggs.

Eddie Quillan will star in two attractions, "Night Work," an original by Walter deLeon, with cast including Sally Starr, Frances Upton, John T. Murray, George Duryea, Robert McWade, George Billings, Addie McPhail, Kit Guard, Georgia Caine, Tom Dugan, Arthur Hoyt, Billie Bennett, Charles Clary, Douglas Scott and Tempe Pigott in the cast and Russell Mack directing; and "Lookin' for Trouble," also by Walter DeLeon.

Helen Twelvetrees in Two

Helen Twelvetrees is in two starring vehicles, "Her Man," an original by Howard Higgin and Tay Garnett, with scenario by Thomas Buckingham and directed by Tay Garnett; "The Price of a Party," an original by Joseph Santley, with scenario by Horace Jackson and direction by Joseph Santley. Miss Twelvetrees also is in "Swing High" and also will be in "Beyond Victory."

Completing the two score are "This Marriage Business," an original by Josephine Lovett, and "Taking the Rap," with Robert Armstrong, by Paul Gangelin.

Warners Add 7 To Schedule to Meet Own Needs

rington, Conn., Ridgewood and Hackensack, N. J.; Erie, Pa.; Youngstown, O.; West Chester, Pa., and Milwaukee, Wis.

A twenty per cent increase in production which will send feature production for 1930-1931 from 35 to 42 pictures will be one of the highlights of the convention.

Behind the move lurks the lightning growth of the Warner theatre holdings and the realization on the part of company executives that those houses must be assured a backbone product. The Warner line-up, plus First National's anticipated 35 and pictures secured under franchise from other companies, principally Paramount, are held to be adequate in number to fill that need.

Three Day Confab

The meeting will run three days and will terminate Thursday night with a banquet at which First National executives and sales force will be present, as well as conventioneers representing Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., the parent organization, and the following subsidiaries:

Vitaphone, Brunswick - Balke - Collender, Remick, Witmark, Harms, De Sylva, Brown & Henderson, Continental Lithograph Co. and Continental Theatre Accessories. The attendance will total about 400.

Warner sales representatives are now en route from all over the country. A special train, starting from Seattle, will pick up delegates on its way, the special traveling East via Chicago and Pittsburgh to the coast resort.

The opening session will be held on Tuesday at 10 A. M. at which past performances will be discussed. The next day will be devoted to current activities in all branches of the Warner enterprises, which now include radio, broadcasting, phonograph manufacture, sheet music publishing as well as production, distribution and exhibition of films.

On Thursday the program for the new season will be announced. Details of what the principal pictures are to be, gathered by the Hollywood staff of Motion Picture News, appear elsewhere in this edition.

Home office executives of Warners, officials of allied firms and members of the headquarters staff to attend will embrace:

Harry M. Warner, Jack L. Warner, Albert Warner, Lewis Warner, Waddell Calchings, Sam E. Morris, Herman Starr, A. C. Thomas, C. C. Ezell, J. V. Allan, Max Milder, J. D. R. Freed, Joe Hummel, Paul Swift, B. F. Lyon, George Balsdon, A. Smith, A. C. Brauninger, A. W. Schwalberg, Arthur Sachson, Charles Kemke, Joseph Kelly, Charles Bailey, Bert Perkins, Tom Namack, A. P. Wurzel, David Zweifler, and Walter Zweifler.

On Sheehan

Winnie Sheehan, the indefatigable, as described by Harry Reichenbach at the Buxbaum dinner in New York this week:

"He called me at four o'clock one morning and said:

"'What are you doing?'

"'I'm playing checkers with my wife,' replied Harry.

"'Come on over,' said Sheehan, 'I want to talk to you about our plans for today.'"

H. M. Warner to Build in Mt. Vernon; Lives There

A theatre for Mt. Vernon, on the fringe of New York, is planned by the Warners. Harry M. Warner's estate on California Road is in that city's limits.

Another Warner house is scheduled for White Plains. A site on Mamaroneck Ave. is being sought via Prince and Ripley, local realtors in that town.

Warners Buy 9 More; Harris Skouras Aide

Spyros P. Skouras has appointed John H. Harris his assistant as a result of the deal by which Warners acquired the Harris chain of 17 houses in Pennsylvania and Ohio. Harris was general manager of the circuit for a number of years.

Warner theatre acquisitions this week included the Cambria and Park, both seating 1,200, in Johnstown, Pa., the Bristol and Cameo in Bristol, Conn., and the National Group of 5 in Roanoke, Va.

Kresge Chain Store Deal To Boost Warner Music

Five hundred music departments in as many Kresge five and ten cent stores throughout the country have been secured by Warners for the sale of sheet music written by Witmark, Harms and other music subsidiaries of Warners.

While competitive publishers may not necessarily be closed out, the break will be given to Warner-controlled music.

W. B. Theatre for Beverly To Be Built on New Site

Hollywood—Warner Brothers have switched the location of their new Beverly Hills theatre from Wilshire and Reeves to Wilshire and Canon Drive. The spot is considered a better location and more suited for a de luxe theatre. Revised plans are practically completed and construction is slated to start early in June. Warners owned both properties.

"Broken Dishes," with Loretta Young and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

Leon Janney in Booth Tarkington's "Penrod."

Ann Harding in "The Girl of the Golden West," Belasco play which John Francis Dillon will direct. James Rennie is to play opposite.

"Going Some," by Rex Beach with Joe E. Brown and Loretta Young.

Skinner To Make Two

Otis Skinner in "Kismet," done entirely in Technicolor, and in "For the Honor of the Family," under direction of John Francis Dillon.

"The Deep Purple," by Paul Potter and Wilson N. Mizner.

"The Queen of Main Street," with Lila Lee, Ben Lyon, Louise Fazenda and Lucien Littlefield under direction of William Beaudine.

"Captain Blood," made several years ago as a silent by Vitagraph.

"The Bad Man," with Walter Huston, Dorothy Revier, O. P. Heggie and James Rennie, directed by Clarence Badger.

Marilyn Miller in "Sweethearts," all-color version of "Bad, Good Girl," operetta.

"Top Speed," with Joe E. Brown, Bernice Claire and Jack Whiting.

"Mother's Cry," which Helen Grace Carlisle, the author, is adapting.

Cohen Entertains

Toledo—Sammy Cohen, who made a name for himself as a comic in "What Price Glory" and now appearing in a Publix stage unit, made the train jump from Detroit to act as master of ceremonies at a party staged by the local operators' union. One hundred and fifty were present.

RKO to Follow National Confab with 3 Regionals

Los Angeles—RKO will follow its national convention with three regional meetings. These will be held in New Orleans May 26 and 27; Chicago, May 29 and 30, and New York, June 1 and 2. Salesmen, office managers and bookers, not represented at the national convention, will participate.

National, Local Help For Exhibitors Slated

Hollywood—National advertising co-operation for its exhibitor accounts and local co-operation for percentage showings are planned by RKO for next year. The company will not launch the new policy until it has from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 to spend on its campaign.

Darmour Rounds Up Writers for Comedies

Hollywood—With a scenario department totaling 25 writers, Larry Darmour plans to get story material far ahead on his various comedy series being produced for RKO release. Darmour is said to be carrying the largest number of writers ever assembled at one time by any comedy producer on the coast.

Neighborhood Houses For Capital Planned

Washington—Radio-Keith-Orpheum is understood to be planning a number of neighborhood houses here.

Safron-Adams $500 Bet

Hollywood—Jerry Safron and Cleve Adams, western and eastern sales managers for RKO, have made a bet or $500 on their respective grosses for 1930-31. They were deluged with requests by managers of their divisions for a piece of the wager.

Sloane Gets Team Again

Hollywood—Paul Sloane will direct Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey, in their second feature comedy for Radio, "Half Shot At Sunrise." Sloane is preparing the story with Ann Caldwell, Rube Bernstein and Harry Tierney.

June Joy Month at RKO

RKO officials in the vaudeville and film booking departments are selecting programs for next month, which will be known throughout the entire circuit as "June Joy Show Month."

Brown Gets Big Job

Hollywood—Melville Brown has been assigned the Amos 'n' Andy feature by RKO. Tentative title is "Check and Double Check."

Address by 'Phone

Hollywood—David Sarnoff and Hiram Brown, Radio-Keith-Orpheum chieftains, addressed the RKO convention here via telephone from New York.

Sign Higgins

Hollywood—RKO has placed Peter Higgins, vaudevillian, under contract.

After his first roll, however, the boys had to try to get their own dough back, and lost interest in the color of Decker's own money.

Cleve Adams spent most of his spare time trying to convince several of the bridge experts that his rules and ideas were right. But he was not playing with exhibitors, and his sales arguments made no impression.

Harry Dixon of Buffalo, became the champ whistler of the tour without competition. Al Mertz of Cleveland, and Roy Churchill of Kansas City stepped aside.

Benny Benjamin of Chicago stepped aboard with the loudest green suit even seen in Hollywood. A song writer at the Roosevelt lobby first took it for a Tom Thumb golf course.

Roy Churchill and Jerry Safron are "originals" of the old Mutual and Robertson-Cole days. Both have had unbroken records with the company. And at least fifteen years with one organization is some record at that.

Eddie Wells of Montreal also lays claim to early film salesmaning. He was with the old General Film in New York, and later in Canada for Triangle.

Then there's Penrod of St. Louis and Penrod of Indianapolis. Tough luck RKO cannot produce the talker version of Booth Tarkington's story.

Jack Pegler came west to tell the boys about the "titanic" tie-ups which Radio Pictures will have during the coming year. There seems to be a load of Lord, Thomas and Logan stuff in store for the boys.

Earl Kramer seemed to be particularly partial to Canada Dry. He called for it frequently during the train trip west.

Everyone was sorry that Hy Daab had to be tied to his New York desk. But the gang excused him when they realized that titanic insert smash is getting ready for interesting eyes.

"Dixiana" sure proved a sensation to the boys when they saw it Monday afternoon. They cheered aplenty, finally calling on Bill Le Baron, Director Luther Reed and Victor Baravalle for speeches. The boys finally had to quit figuring the millions "Dixiana" will gross.

Mitt Him

Hy Daab's inherent modesty will suffer a severe setback when he reads this, for the way Lee Marcus handed him the palm at the Hollywood convention is nobody's business. "The greatest advertising genius in motion pictures of all time," was the way Lee put it, crediting Daab with no small measure of RKO success.

New RKO Device to Kill Ground Noises

Hollywood—Elimination of ground noises during recording, thus enabling the raising by 100 per cent of the volume of sound on the sound track, is claimed for improvements developed by Recording Engineer McDowell of RKO. This allows printing of the sound track on release prints, so exhibitors do not have to adjust volume control continually from the booth, according to William Le Baron. In other words, he said, sound volume will be set at the start of the picture, continuing constant throughout the picture. RKO has exclusive rights on this method for one year, said Le Baron.

United Borrows Daniels From RKO for 1 Musical

Bebe Daniels will make one picture for United Artists under terms of a borrowing agreement arranged for with RKO by Joseph M. Schenck. Irving Berlin will produce the film, "Reaching for the Moon," for which Berlin has composed eight new songs. He also wrote the story. Wm. Anthony McGuire is writing the adaptation and dialogue. Technicolor will not be used, contrary to first reports.

RKO Books "King of Jazz"

Lou B. Metzger, Universal sales chieftain, has closed a deal whereby "King of Jazz" has been booked solid into the 32 RKO theatres in New York City and environs.

"Big Brother" for Dix

Hollywood—Richard Dix's picture to follow "Cimarron" will be Rex Beach's "Big Brother."

They say Quaint

A CITY—not a beauty, nor of motion pictures, nor of glamour—a city of sandwiches.

The fact that a Garbo sandwich is really a Swiss-cheese sandwich under another name, and that Cooper is another name for ham and jelly, is quite well known.

This item does not concern itself with edibles, but with that greater and ever-increasing horde of human sandwiches stuck in-between two slices of a sign, and who are forever parading the once picturesque sidewalks of Hollywood.

The plight of the old favorites is one calling for thought from every thinking man in Hollywood. The trouble is that this classification is so notoriously slim. As thin as the sandwich men, but not so numerous.

Actors, even the best of them, may be seen visiting their friends, stepping out, shopping, wearing the clothes they used in a recent picture—clothes studiously studio-made for character roles. We have checkered suits—I never believed any one would really wear them—burlesque golf clothes and others which have apparently gone through a rain sequence, from the shape they're in. This is a period of retrenchment. Why, no one knows for certain.

Walking down the Boulevard I spied a doddering old soul between two signs which read, "I want work and enough money to live on." This man started the fad.

Two days later I saw five more. One read, "Good character actor. Plays villains, dopes, and underworld characters. $5 a day. GL 2552."

Another read, "Former gag man, director, general manager, will write your stories for you. Reasonable prices."

One was a pretty girl in a bathing suit, "Beauty-contest winner. Doesn't want to be a waitress, cash girl. What can director offer? Honorable preferred."—Reay in Picture Play

The End Is In Sight

The sandwich parade is now a feature of the movie capital. Some of our former screen names are in hard times. So if you send a quarter to a star for a photo and there's no answer, don't get sore. I heard one remark the other day, "If I don't get some fan mail soon, I'll starve."—Neville Reay in "Picture Play."

Kill Heem!

Leo Heatley reports the verbal tilt which resulted when George Jessel, having received a resounding whack on the back at a recent lodge meeting, turned around and was met by a little guy who chirped: "Hello, Mister Greenberg!" Of course, George protested that he was not Greenberg.

"What!" exclaimed the other guy. "You ain't Mr. Greenberg?"

"No," said George. "And even if I was—is that the way to come pounding a man on the back?"

"Say, listen," said the stranger, a little huffed. "Are you trying to tell me how I should treat Greenberg?"

THE extra sensational and lurid style of advertising motion pictures died out with the transition of nickleodeon to cinema palaces. The average theatre patronage of today is such that anything of an off color nature, either implied or real, either in advertising or the picture itself, is resented.

While we are on the subject we would like to comment on the fact that Hollywood is evidently at great pains to keep her skirts clean. It has been quite some time since a Hollywood scandal blazed across the front page of the daily press. The effects of this adverse type of publicity are too well known. Oblivion awaits the luckless movie star involved in a nasty scandal. In the long run making good clean pictures and advertising them in the same manner will show the most profit at the end of the year.—M. P. Record, Seattle.

Bowling—you know, the game in which you roll a ball and knock down the ten pins—is now a fad in Hollywood.

Naturally such a game has its allegorical significance, but it is not what you might think. True enough, studio executives seem to delight in it, for they have so much practice during the day bowling down the personnel.

But one of the Hollywood papers put the thing right, through a typographical error. A big headline said, "Bowing now fad in Hollywood."

There are bows and more bows.

There's the bow the actor gives the producer, the bow the director gives the producer, and all down the screen aristocracy to the bow the prop boy gives the assistant director. But perhaps the most interesting is the one given by the former star to the star she is now supporting. These range in grandiloquence from the faint light of recognition accorded the assistant, to the sweeping gesture of the serf for the lord of the manor accorded the producer.

In these days, Hollywood is bowing so much that in another few years every one will have curvature of the spine, chronic, and facial close-ups will have to be shot with the camera on the floor. Picture Play

A general clean-up on the part of authorities, seeks to remove the menace of fake mediums, clairvoyants, sensitives and such folderol from the Hollywood picture.

Motion picture people do not bother much with the spirits. They like to have their fortunes told. They are a bit superstitious and given heavily to such fads as numerology—if indeed it comes under such a head. The Working-Girl's Friend

Hollywood—This doesn't sound like a very strong tribute to the entertainment value of motion pictures—or else it attests to the stronger drawing power of another form of diversion. At any rate, to hear Neville Reay tell it, the theatres in several states have been compelled by the police to lock up their balconies at matinees to eliminate heavy petting parties. These even outdid the torrid scenes on the screen, and undoubtedly the censors feared that the cast might stop in the middle of the scene to admonish their rivals. Take that either way."

WORD sifts along the Hardened Artery that another popular song writer wants to quit. He is none other than Mr. Irving Berlin. He hasn't been knocking them so cold with his last few numbers. It seems that the public taste with its quick, revolutionary changes, has passed up the dreamy sentimental type of stuff that made Berlin his fame and fortune. However, why should he worry? He has his, and now would like to lead the quiet life and devote his time to his charming wife and family. In the song writing business like everything else, things move fast, new favorites pop up, and the wise one is he who collects quick while he is clicking and salts it against the day when he must hand over the crown to a successor. —Screen Secrets

Life offers a solution to the question, "How to Improve the Movies." The remedy is comparatively simple. All the industry has to do is go out and get a few more gals who can write as well as Katherine Brush and a supply of directors with Monta Bell's idea as to what it's all about.—Life.

THAT (the code) will be largely successful in its purpose is proven by the extent to which it has been taken in utter seriousness. One of the strange misapprehensions that General Hays has had to combat is the theory that the film producers are deliberately, diabolically attempting to corrupt the public's pure mind with obscenities or with incitations to crime. Views of Alice White disrobing, or of George Bancroft blowing up a safe, are said to be part of the subtly satanic propaganda with which Hollywood is converting mankind to its peculiarly moral religion.

"These charges, it need hardly be said, are not exactly just. There is just one purpose that animates the movie magnates in everything they do, and that is the understandable ambition to make money.

"If these worthies become convinced that the film fans want nothing but sweet cleanliness, then they will give them (or, I should say, sell them) just that. In fact, they will provide so much soft soap that the public will become sick unto death of purity and will start shrieking for the restoration of sex. This has actually happened not once but many times.

"Just at present the trend is unquestionably in the opposite direction. The movie market has lately been so thoroughly glutted with underclad chorus girls, in natural color, that there is no longer any particular kick in a bare leg. This is true also of the thinly disguised bawdyisms with which 'The Cockeyed World' and similar comedies overflowed.

"The public has seen enough of flesh-tinted underclothes and heard enough of blue-tinted wise-cracks for the time being. It is now necessary for the celluloid-mongers of Hollywood to provide something else, and to keep on providing it until that, too, has been overworked. After which they can return, as they always do, to good old reliable, infallible sex appeal." —Sherwood in N. Y. Post already finished. One of these pictures is "Trader Horn," filmed in British East Africa and directed by W. S. Van Dyke. Others now ready include the musicals, "Good News," and "The Singer of Seville," the latter starring Ramon Novarro.

Twenty-three pictures are adaptations of books or plays. Among the story properties are "The Merry Widow" (now in music), "Naughty Marietta," "The World's Illusion," "The New Moon," "Jenny Lind," "Trader Horn," "The Bugle Sounds" and "Good News."

At least two of Marion Davies' vehicles will be adaptations of New York musical shows, "Rosalie" and "The Five O'Clock Girl." Miss Davies's third has not yet been determined.

Three Garbos, Two Gilberts

Greta Garbo will be seen in at least three productions, the first of which will be "Red Dust." This is based on Wilson Collison's story.

John Gilbert's first starring film for the coming year will be "Way For a Sailor," based on Albert Wetjen's story. He will be seen in at least one other during 1930-31.

Two of Novarro's three will be "The Singer of Seville," in which the star appears on the screen for the first time as an opera singer, and "Song of India," based on an original now being prepared by Achmed Abdullah.

"The Bugle Sounds" is a Lon Chaney starring film. It is an adaptation of Zinovi Pechkoff's book and will be directed by George Hill.

Four Starring Haines

William Haines will be seen in four, but the title of only one is announced. This is "Remote Control," based on the Broadway show.

Norma Shearer will be seen in at least two productions next season, but these stories have not yet been selected.

Joan Crawford's first will be "Great Day," based on Vincent Youmans's stage production. "Her Fortune," a story by James Montgomery, her second, deals with a telephone operator who wins a small fortune on a lottery ticket and goes to Florida. Two other vehicles will be named later.

Lawrence Tibbett's second film for next year has not been determined, but "New Moon" will be his first. This is an adaptation of the stage musical of the same name and will be directed by Jack Conway, using the original musical score by Sigmund Romberg.

4 Cosmopolitans Slated

The first of four Cosmopolitan productions will be Grace Moore's "Jenny Lind." There will be three other Cosmopolitan productions.

Other pictures on the list include the following properties:

"Madame Satan," directed by Cecil B. De Mille and featuring Kay Johnson and Reginald Denny; "Razzle-Dazzle," a co-starring comedy for Marie Dressler and Polly Moran. "Billy the Kid," directed by King Vidor, with John Mack Brown in the title role. Others will be:

"The World's Illusion," Jacob Wassermann's novel; "Dixie"; "War Nurse"; "Ballyhoo," Beth Brown's novel; "Dance, Fools, Dance," an adaptation of Martin Flavin's stage play, "Cross Roads"; "The Great Meadow," by Elizabeth Maddox Roberts; "Doing That Thing," a musical comedy with lyrics and music by Jimmy McHugh and Dorothy Fields; "Tampico," by Joseph Hergesheimer; "The March of Time," presenting Weber and Fields, De Wolf Hopper, Trixie Friganza, Marie Dressler and Josephine Sabel, as well as present day stars of the screen; "The Crisis" by Winston Churchill; "The Passion Flower" by Kathleen Norris; "Monsieur Le Fox" by Willard Mack, directed by Hal Roach; "The Dark Star," Lorna Moon's story, with Marie Dressler in the central role; and "Those Three French Girls."

Loew's Pays

Chicago—Loew's is proving a big factor in gross of M-G-M, Col. E. A. Schiller, general manager of the circuit, emphasized at the film firm's convention here. Houses which previously paid an average of $98 now are paying more than $1,000, he declared.

Talker Rental Increase Offset, Says Saunders

Chicago—Increased rentals of talking pictures do not mean proportionately increased profits for the producer, said Edward M. Saunders, M-G-M western sales manager, who cited data to show that distribution and production costs have kept pace with the increased cost of theatre operation. The increased rentals, he contended, are proportionate only to increased box office returns.

In the first six months of 1930, Saunders asserted, production and distribution costs showed the following increases over the same period of 1929:

	Per Cent Increase
Studio employees	8.25
Distribution employees	5.50
Production expenditures	15.25
Distribution expenditures	3.80
Studio wage increases	25.25
Studio improvement	11.00
Exploitation expenditures	38.80

Against these, for the same comparative periods, he cited the following increases in exhibition costs:

	Per Cent Increase
Theatre employees	1.50
Theatre expenditures	1.67

Saunders pointed out that in addition to these moderate increases in exhibition costs, the theatres, particularly the small ones, have been able to eliminate organist, pianist or small orchestra, and still obtain a higher quality of music with talking pictures. The inclusion of this music, he said, has been at the cost of the producer. This better entertainment now provided makes it possible for the smallest of houses to present a program identical to that of de luxe houses, whereas in the past there has been a great difference in the quality of the programs presented by the two classifications of theatres, he said.

House for Albany Suburb

Albany—A new theatre in the village of Menands, just north of the Albany city line, probably will be erected this summer, according to an announcement by an Albany real estate dealer acting for a New York City theatre company. The house will have a seating capacity of 1,500. The village of Menands is showing a rapid growth at the present time, owing to several large industrial plants which have located in the village and which have brought a considerable influx of new homes and new residents.

Photocolor Moving to Coast

Studio equipment of Photocolor Corp. is being moved to the Coast where production is to be concentrated. Pictures made by the process are being released through Columbia.

Delf to Direct Shorts

Hollywood—Harry Delf has been signed by Columbia to direct short subjects. His initial assignment probably will be direction of "Specialties," the company's series of 26 single reel novelties.

"Adios" for Barthelmess

Hollywood—Richard Barthelmess will next make "Adios" for First National with Frank Lloyd directing. It is a yarn of old California.

Spanish Player Signed

Ernesto Vilches, Spanish actor, has signed with Paramount Publix to play the lead in the Spanish version of "Grumpy" and with M-G-M for the lead in Spanish version of "Mr. Wu." He left for the Coast May 14. Albert Godoy represented the player in both deals. Miguel De Zarraga, Spanish author, also was signed by M-G-M through Godoy.

Hart at Seattle

Seattle—Win Hart, formerly treasurer of Publix's Rialto in Portland and prior to that connected with the St. Francis, San Francisco, last week was appointed treasurer of the Seattle Paramount by Manager William A. Pert Kelton Cast

Hollywood—Pert Kelton, recently signed by Tiffany for three years, has been cast opposite Benny Rubin in "Hot Curves."

Cabanne at RKO

Hollywood—Christy Cabanne has been signed by RKO to direct "Conspiracy," a play by John Emerson. Bessie Love has been borrowed from M-G-M for the featured spot, with Hugh Trevor and Ned Sparks assigned important parts.

Not So Good

Sam Marx, who left last week for Hollywood to prepare scenarios for M-G-M, told his favorite yarn to the Broadway scribblers before departing.

It concerns a Broadway rounder, noted as a heart breaker among women, who was leaving for Hollywood. He threw a last wild party for his friends and they told him that he would burn up the movie colony when he got there. "Boy, if they think they're wild—just wait until you show them a few things."

After a few days in Hollywood this playboy of Broadway was invited to a party. Before the evening was over he began to strut his stuff and show the natives why he had earned a reputation on Broadway.

He took a girl away from a noted screen sheik, got her into a corner and said, "Baby, from now on you belong to me. Those other fellows don't count."

He went on and on until the girl broke down and wept. The wicked Broadway lover became frightened and asked, "What's the matter?"

"I've been here for almost a year now," replied the girl, "and you're the first fellow that acted like a gentleman."

Detroit — Vera Patch, 20-year-old daughter of the chief of police of Highland Park, never has attended a show. Her sister, Margarate, 18, has attended only four. Her father has seen but few shows.

Iowa Theatre Changes

Des Moines—Two Iowa houses which changed hands last week were the Jewel at Burlington, which was added to the chain of the Strand Amusement Co. of Ottumwa, of which Jake Cohen and C. K. Adler are in charge, and the Strand, Newton, purchased by Mrs. Amelia Graber at a sheriff's sale, after foreclosing her mortgage on the property, which is to be transferred to Fred Stines. Another house under new management is at Wall Lake, which has been purchased by LeRoi Henry.

Indiana Theatre Sued

South Bend, Ind.—A judgment of $2,500 on a note it alleges it holds against the Palace Theater Corp., here is sought in involuntary bankruptcy action filed in the United States district court by Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction Co. A receivership for the Palace Theater Corp. was asked in a suit filed in the district court Jan. 2 this year by a bank in Cleveland. Clarence O. Miller at that time was appointed receiver.

3 "U" Managerial Changes

Three managerial changes have been made by Universal. H. J. Chapman, veteran Sioux Falls manager, has been transferred to Des Moines, and is succeeded at Sioux Falls by C. J. Feldman. Charles Gregory, as previously stated, has been named manager at Kansas City. He recently resigned from Columbia.

Rename M-G-M Picture

"The Richest Man in the World" is the final title of the new M-G-M picture formerly known as "Sins of the Children." It was directed by Sam Wood, with Louis Mann and Elliott Nugent featured in the cast.

Spanish-Star Signed

Paramount Publix has signed Ernesto Vilshes, stage star, of Madrid to star in the Spanish version of "Grumpy." He already has left for the Coast to appear in the picture, of which an English version will be made with Cyril Maude in the title role. Vilshes is to appear in a short sketch to be used in the Spanish version of "Paramount on Parade."

Install Acoustic System

The Berliner Acoustic System is being installed in the Warner Stanley in Newark.

THE

Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

ELECTRICITY is best appreciated by its manifestations. We know that heat can be produced by electricity. We also know that light can be produced by electricity. We further know that these effects are caused by what we understand as being electric current. The first impression gleaned by the average individual about electricity, is that it is a source of energy. Such is not the case. Electricity is not a source of power. It is a medium whereby power or energy may be transferred from one point to another. This transfer is due to the action produced by an agent we term electricity. The actual action is atomic.

When we cause a motion of electrons or a flow of electrons, we have electric current or we produce electric current. Now we are confronted with a new subject, the electron. In order to explain this subject it is necessary to repeat the material contained in all elementary electrical texts. Investigation has shown that all matter contains electricity or at least can be made to display electrical effects. This interpretation of electricity and electrical effects, is the phenomenon surrounding the electron. The atoms contained in the molecules of all matter, irrespective of its state contain electrons. Perhaps it might be well to explain molecules and atoms to a greater extent. As rudimentary as this discussion may be, it nevertheless is information of interest because it delves into subjects much beyond daily routine.

Molecules

All matter is composed of minute particles known as molecules. As a matter of fact, the molecule is the smallest integral part of matter, regardless of its form, whether it is a gas, a solid or a liquid. The kind of molecules in existence, as far as we know are as numerous as the kinds of matter. In other words, there are as many different kinds of molecules as there are kinds of matter. Each form of matter or each substance contains molecules akin to that substance only and not to be found in other substances. Thus, a molecule of wood is different than a molecule of charcoal. A molecule of water is different than a molecule of sulphuric acid. A molecule of air is different than a molecule of neon gas, etc.

Assuming any one form of matter, each molecule is distinctly separate from every other molecule in that matter. In other words, what appears to be a solid, such as a piece of coal, is actually not solid. Instead it consists of countless molecules, each separate from the next and each in a state of motion, that is in a state of agitation around a point of rest. The separation between the molecules decides the state of the matter. Molecules are closest to each other in what we term solids; are further apart in liquids and furthest apart in gases. This condition is evident by the fact that the solid is a solid, the liquid flows and the gas combines with other gases, such as air.

Agitation of matter frequently changes its physical dimension if not its state. For example, a bar of steel or iron or, as a matter of fact, the average solid, will expand when heated and will contract when chilled. This state of expansion and contraction is a change in the separation between the molecules of that matter. Thus, water when sufficiently chilled assumes a different state, becomes a solid, ice. Such reactions may be termed chemical, yet we find that they are of great importance in electrical circuits. The molecular activity has a great deal to do with magnetism; with the degree of conductivity of metals, with the suitability of an element as a conductor of electricity. Let us delve further and see why.

Lesson Number 3

In this article, third of the Projectionists' Round Table series, John F. Rider delves deeper into basic information on electricity and further lays the groundwork for future discussions on sound projection.

Atoms

While it is true that the molecule is the smallest integral part of matter, and is individual, with respect to the substance, the molecule itself is also a structure. An explanation of this structure illustrates how each molecule of a substance is distinctly different from the molecule of every other substance. Each molecule, or rather a molecule, consists of small particles known as atoms. The atom is smaller than the molecule and is the smallest particle of matter obtainable by any form of chemical action. Perhaps it is difficult to imagine a definite difference between the atom and the molecule, but this difference will become evident shortly.

Allowing the individuality claimed for the molecule, no statement is evident to the fact that the molecule consists of any one kind of atom or any one atom. Herein lies the difference between molecules. The molecules of any substance consist of atoms. The known atomic elements are of a certain number. These atoms in definite quantities appear in certain molecules. Certain atoms may be common to more than one kind of molecule, but the exact quantity and number of atoms constituting any one kind of molecule are associated only with that one kind of molecule. Thus water, which is liquid matter, is composed of molecules consisting of two atoms of hydrogen and one atom of oxygen. That is, each molecule of water is a separate structure consisting of two atoms of hydrogen and one atom of oxygen. To contrast with the molecule of water, we have a molecule of the electrolyte in the conventional storage battery. This form of matter is also a liquid, resembles water, yet is of different constituency. A molecule of this substance consists of two atoms of hydrogen, one atom of sulphur and four atoms of oxygen, the atomic structure behind designated H_2SO_4.

During such discussion one cannot help but wonder about the connection between such organic chemistry and sound projection. There is a definite connection because the function of numerous devices, such as rectifiers, photo electric cells and other vacuum tubes are governed or influenced by the gases within the tubes. The subject of interest in connection with these gases is the molecular activity when under an electric stress or when acted upon by electrons liberated by some means from an associated part of the system. We shall, therefore, proceed.

Recognizing the presence of molecules and atoms in matter irrespective of the form, one can very readily appreciate that if we have a mass, such as a length of copper or resistance wire, that the greater the mass or the greater the diameter of the wire, the greater will be the number of molecules to be found in that mass. Furthermore, if we have two kinds of copper wire or if we have two kinds of resistance wire, it stands to reason that the molecular structure is different and that the associated atomic structure is different. The variation in the atomic structure is what constitutes the variation in molecular structure and the difference in the substances. It is necessary, however, to understand that any one form of matter is of a certain structure and a greater mass of that same structure does not involve any atomic change. The difference in mass, in diameter if it is a length of wire, is one of the number of molecules and not the structure of the molecules. This item should be remembered for future reference.

Electrons

Now we enter upon the significant subject. The normal atom has been quoted as being the smallest particle of matter obtained through any chemical action. Despite its infinitesimally small size, it, too, is a structure. It consists of more than one part. Not only that but one part of the atom is always in motion. Other interesting items are associated with atoms and have a very definite bearing upon electricity.

The presence of the electron was discovered by Sir J. J. Thomson in 1897. Investigation disclosed that the electron as a particle was, in contrast to the other parts of matter, common to all atoms, no matter what the structure. Furthermore, investigation showed that the electron from one atom was the same size as the electron procurable from every other atom. Now we arrive at the structure of the atom and the consideration of electronic activity. The last two words in the last sentence represent the most outstanding figure in electricity, since the electron is said to be nothing but electricity and an electron in motion or electrons in motion constitute electric current, as we understand it today.

Once the presence of the electron in all atoms was discovered, it became of interest to determine the number of electrons in different chemical elements. It was found that the number of electrons in chemical elements was finite and varied from element to element. Furthermore, it was found that an electron procured from any atom, was of the same size and uniform with another electron procured from some other atom. Continued investigation disclosed that the electron was negatively electrical, or displayed a negative electrical charge. Supplementary to this it was found that each and every electron possessed the same quantity of electrical charge, at all time negative. Under the circumstances, it may be said at this time that all matter contains negative electricity. The statement is true, but not wholly complete.

Observation of the electrical action of a normal atom showed that it was neutral, that is, electrically neutral. Yet if one electron was dislodged, that electron was found to be negative, which brought about the conclusion that each atom contained a positively electrified part as well as a negatively electrified part. When the magnitude of charges was equal, the atom was neutral. If, however, an electron was lost, the atom displayed a preponderance of positive charge. If on the other hand, an atom had one excess electron, it displayed a negative charge.

The Structure of the Atom

At this stage one is apt to wonder about the structure of the atom. What is the relation between the positive charge and the negative charge? Where is the positive charge? Is the positively charged part the same size as the negatively charged part? We stated that the number of electrons in an atom was finite and that the exact number differed from element to element. Thus, one atomic element may have four electrons and another may have twenty-nine. Be that as it may, the magnitude of the positive charge in a neutral atom is at all times equal to the magnitude of the negative charge of all the electrons present in that atom when it is electrically neutral. Thus, if an atom loses an electron, the positive charge predominates because the cumulative value of the electrons remaining in that atom is not equal to the positive charge.

Electrically the negative and positive charges in a neutral atom are equal, but the mass of negative charges and the mass of the positive charge are far from being equal. It is said that the electrons in an atom account for only 1/3400 of the mass of the atom. The remainder of the mass is accounted for by the positively charged part. Now, as to the location of the positive part and the negative part, it is possible to state theories advanced upon the subject. One such theory states that there are as many positive parts as there are negative parts which can be represented as in Figure 1, the + sign representing a positive part and the — sign representing a negative part or an electron. The positive part is known as the proton. Another theory is that the electrons are held at definite distances from the nucleus of the atom by the attractive and repulsive charges within the atom. Such a structure is shown in Figure 2, the central portion being the proton, or the nucleus. It is possible to construe the first theory as the second, wherein the total of the positive charges is one common positive charge. Another theory is the planetary theory, wherein the electrons are assumed to revolve about the nucleus or proton in certain orbits. Such a structure is shown in Figure 3 in simplified form. This structure of the atom is that advanced by Prof. Nils Bohr of the University of Copenhagen and offers a representation of some of the orbits of the 29 electrons supposed to be present in a normal atom of copper, showing how the electrons revolve around the nucleus.

Once again what has all of this to do with sound projection; with the selection or application of electrical devices? Let us continue and delve a little deeper. We recognize the present of electricity in the form of electrons in all atom, hence electricity in all matter. If we analyze an atom, it will be found that some of the electrons are free to revolve, whereas other electrons are contained within the nucleus. Since an electron in motion constitutes electric current, movement of an electron from one atom to another means the flow of electric current. The ease with which an atom when agitated will part with an electron will then govern the rate at which charges are transferred from one point to another and the magnitude of electric current. Now, the structure of some atoms is such that they hold on with great tenacity to the electrons within the atom no matter how great the agitation. Since motion of electrons between atoms is difficult under such conditions, electric current will not flow through that substance. Such materials are said to be poor conductors of electricity, non-conductors or insulators. If, however, the structure of the atom is such that it frees an electron to circulate among the other atoms, that is the planetary electrons revolving around the nucleus as in Figure 3, that substance is said to readily conduct electricity and is a conductor of electric current.

Conductors and Non-Conductors

Our concern is with both conductors and non-conductors but primarily with conductors. If we assume a piece of wire, say copper, which is of such constituency that the atom will part with an electron, each change in the mass of that copper, such changes being the use of a thick piece of wire instead of a thin piece, providing that the structure of each molecule of that wire remains unchanged, will result in more molecules, hence more atoms and greater agitation, at least greater number of collisions between the molecules and the possibility of freeing a greater number of electrons from the atom (an atom is assumed to lose but one electron). This means that the thick wire is a better conductor of electricity and has less resistance to the flow of electric current than a thin wire of the same molecular structure. One must, of course, understand that if any one piece of wire is selected, the number of molecules will change with the mass of that wire, assuming normal temperature, rather than the mass of each molecule. Thus, the electronic activity among the atoms explains why a thick wire has less resistance than a thin wire of the same constituency.

It might be well at this time to refer to the molecular action of metals when hot or cold. We stated that when a metal is heated and expands, the separation between the molecules is increased. This means that the separation between the atoms is increased. Hence during a state of agitation, collision between molecules is reduced hence the possibility of freeing an electron from an atom or dislodging an electron from an atom is reduced and the rate of electronic flow is likewise reduced. Hence the resistance increased. When the metal contracts, the molecules are brought closer together and any agitation results in more frequent collision and greater electronic activity. Hence the resistance is decreased and electronic action is accelerated, thus permitting the flow of a greater value of current.

Continuing with what was stated, the electronic affinity in the atom explains why a wire will have less or greater resistance and why insulators do not allow the flow of current. Special alloys are used to make certain resistance wires because the atomic structure representing these alloys is such that free motion of the electrons is not available. The atoms in that wire hold on to their electrons more than the atoms in a conductor, say copper.

A certain amount of electronic activity is available in all substances, hence all substances conduct electricity, but if this motion of electrons is so small that the current is negligible, that substance is classified as a non-conductor, but one must understand absolutely perfect insulators are not available.

Free Electrons

Our discussion so far considered the motion of electrons between atoms in a substance. Therefore, one can assume that matter must be present in order that an electron be present. Such is not the case. An electron may be liberated from an atom located in a vacuum, in which case that electron will be present in the vacuum and if some attracting agent is also present in that vacuum as in the case of the modern amplifying tube or the hard photo electric cell, the electron will flow through the vacuum to the agent which exerts the attracting force. Such electrons, liberated from atoms are known as free electrons and constitute the flow of electric current. One must differentiate between such free electrons and the electrons which revolve around the nucleus of the atom. Those electrons are also in motion, but do not represent the electric current in the circuit. Free electrons are given off by the active coatings in photo-electric cells when light impinges upon this surface and by vacuum tube filaments when heated to

'Quiet' Continues Skyward Climb; Takes $23,000

"All Quiet on the Western Front" record-breaking b. o. figures in its New York run continue at the Central, where Universal's war film rolled up $23,000, aided by a few extra performances added to the regular two-a-day routine. Last week, the film turned in about twenty-one grand, which was considered exceptional for the 922-seater, and then tops the high by $2,000 in the current check-up.

The week, as a whole, was off—and how! Only a few other "black" performances were made, among them M-G-M's "Divorcee," which jumped the Capitol's gross $21,000 over the previous week to a healthy $84,000 figure. "Journey's End" fared three hundred better than the preceding week, when the Tiffany vehicle took $14,500.

"ROGUE SONG" (M-G-M)
ASTOR—(1,120), 50c-75c-$1-$1.50-$2, 7 days, 16th week. Other attractions: Newsreel, overture. Gross: $9,975.

"THE DIVORCEE" (M-G-M)
CAPITOL—(4,700), 35c-50c-75c-$1.50, 7 days. Other attractions: Overture ("Rossini's Melodies"), M-G-M comedy ("Fast Work"), Capitol magazine, Hearst Metrotone news, presentation, organ. Gross: $84,054, good; $21,000 better than last week.

"ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT" ("U.")
CENTRAL—(922), 50c-75c-$1-$1.50-$2.50, 7 days, 4th week. Other attractions: None. Gross: $23,000 (on extra shows, in addition to regular 2 a day); a high gross.

"TEMPLE TOWER" (Universal)
COLONY—(1,900), 35c-50c-75c, 7 days. Other attractions: Shorts, newsreel, comedy ("Ranch House Blues"). Gross: [illegible]

EMBASSY NEWSREELS
EMBASSY (598), 25c, 7 days. Straight newsreel show, running continuously. Gross: $8,201, pretty good; $500 higher than previous week.

"SONG O' MY HEART" (Fox)
FORTY-FOURTH ST.—(1,478), $1-$1.50-$2-$2.50, 7 days, 10th week. Other attractions: Newsreel. Gross: $8,050, off considerably.

"JOURNEY'S END" (Tiffany)
GAIETY—(808), $1-$1.50-$2-$2.50, 7 days, 7th week. Other attractions: Short ("Voice from Hollywood"). Gross: $14,880, a $300 jump over last week.

"HOLD EVERYTHING" (Warners)
HOLLYWOOD—(1,600), 50c-75c-$1-$1.50, 4th week. Other attractions: "Yama Kraw" (Negro rhapsody short), "Wedding of Jack and Jill" (echnicolor short), Martinelli in "Celeste Aida" from "Aida" (operatic short), "Wedding of Jack and Jill" (Technicolor short), 1895" (newsreel cutbacks). Gross: $13,205, plenty terrible.

"DEVIL'S HOLIDAY" (Paramount)
PARAMOUNT—(3,700), 40c-50c-65c-85c-$1, 7 days. Other attractions: Comedy ("Peace and Harmony"), Pathe review, vaudeville ("Home Records"), O'Donnell and Blair, Billy and Elsa Newell, Andrew and Louise Carr, Six Beverly Girls. Gross: $70,700, a nice jump of $13,000 over previous week.

"PARAMOUNT ON PARADE" (Paramount)
RIALTO—(1,904), 40c-50c-65c-85c-$1, 7 days. Other tractions: "Prisoners' Song" (sound cartoon). Gross: $17,700, away down; lower by $7,000, under last week.

"VAGABOND SONG" (Paramount)
RIVOLI—(2,103), 35c-50c-65c-85c-$1. Other attractions: Shorts, newsreel, overture ("Vagabond King"). Gross: $19,400

"KING OF JAZZ" (Universal)
ROXY—(6,200), 50c-75c-$1-$1.50, 7 days, 2nd week. Other attractions: Shorts, vaudeville (Paul Whiteman in junction with the Roxy orchestra (and George Gershwin at piano). Gross: $62,476, flopping $40,000 under last week.

"THE WEDDING BELLS"
STRAND—(3,000), 35c-50c-60c-75c-85c-$1, 7 days. Other attractions: Shorts, Universal newsreel, "Money, Money, Money," "A Holiday in Storyland," "Cave Club." Gross: $15,017, considerably off.

"SONG OF THE FLAME" (Warners)
WARNERS—(1,500), 50c-75c-$1-$1.50-$2.50, 7 days. Other attractions: Comedy ("Looney Tunes"), Eddie Buzzell in "The Royal Four Flusher," "The Stand-up," comedy ("Ill Winds—or No Mother to Guide Her"). Gross: $13,205, so-so.

"SHOW GIRL IN HOLLYWOOD" (First National)
WINTER GARDEN—(1,495), 35c-50c-65c-85c-$1, 7 days. Other attractions: The Potters in "Big Money," "Believe It or Not," "The Jazz Rehearsal" (technicolor musical comedy), "The Military Post," "The Window Cleaner," with Ann Edwards and Steve Brice; and Roberto Gunman, Mexican singer. Gross: $17,569 and dropping $4,000 under previous 7-day [illegible]

'Divorcee' Frisco Run Clicks With $28,000 Gross

San Francisco—The week proved a successful one for two reasons: First, the weather was favorable; second, pictures, generally, were exceptionally attractive, six of the theatres doing over 100% and two doing 165% and 185%. "Song of the Flame," with $24,000, and "Divorcee," grossing $28,000, hit the latter two high figures.

"Song of the Flame," at the California, did $24,000, a 165% rating. "The Divorcee," at Loews-Warwick Theatre, did a remarkable business. It was shown to crowded houses all week after running the week before at the Fox. Here a gross of $28,000 and a rating of 185% was rolled up.

Special midnight shows were started at 11:30 at the Embassy, to inaugurate the San Francisco run of Al Jolson's "Mammy." The proceeds were devoted to the American Legion's 49'er celebration. The picture was introduced to a crowded house on Thursday, Friday and Saturday night. The late shows, running consecutively, establish a precedent in Market Street houses.

Weather: Fair, windy.
Opposition: "Song of the West," California; "Divorcee," Warfield; "Arizona Kid," Fox; "Return of Dr. Fu Manchu," stage show, Paramount; "Paramount on Parade," St. Francis; "Cuckoos," Orpheum; "Rich People," vaudeville, Golden Gate; "Hold Everything," Embassy.

"SONG OF THE FLAME" (First National)
CALIFORNIA—(2,300), 35c-50c-65c-90, 7 days. Other attractions: Comedy ("Getting a Break"), news, review, orchestra, "Peace and Harmony." Gross: $24,000. Rating: 165%.

"DIVORCEE" (M-G-M)

"Lost Zeppelin" Flops with $870 Three-Day Gross

Ottawa—Natives of the Canadian Capital paid more attention to "Clean-up Week" than to current film attractions, although a couple of rainstorms sent them scampering from gardens to shows. Daylight saving got in its dirty work as well, patronage in most houses being scanty until 9 o'clock. Many saw Maurice Chevalier in "The Big Pond" at the Regent, which registered 100%, and "A Notorious Affair" held up fairly well at the Centre.

Weather: Opening hot, rain, then colder.
Opposition: "The Big Pond," Regent; "Cohens and Kellys in Scotland," B. F. Keith's; "A Notorious Affair," Centre; "The Other Tomorrow," Avalon; "Only the Brave," Imperial; "Vengeance," Keith's; "The Lost veppelin," Avalon.

Balto Top Goes To "Divorcee" On Take of $24,300

Baltimore—With normal spring weather prevailing, and despite voluntary daylight saving, patronage at large theatres increased considerably here during the week.

Highest gross was taken in at Loew's Stanley by "The Divorcee," starring Norma Shearer. Receipts were figured at $24,300, or a 139% rating. This engagement was aided materially by a large national campaign in newspapers.

The surprise of the week was the $1,400 gross piled up by the Little Theater, with its 267 seats, showing the German dialogue production, "Dich Hab Ich Geliebt," which rated 140%. It was noticed that an entirely different class of people came to see the production, the German element, supplanting the "arties." Throughout the six days, patronage was steady.

"King of Jazz" did not fare so well at Keith's, after an engagement at the Auditorium, at $1 top, only doing a gross of about $3,600, representing a 45% rating. All seemed to agree the picture is an artistic triumph, but the people appear to want a story with their films.

The Auditorium got a break with "All Quiet on the Western Front," with this picture running 8 days and $1.50 top at nights; the gross hit $8,400, rating 80%.

Weather: Clear and cool, excepting one day hot and one day cloudy with a little rain.

Opposition: "All Quiet on the Western Front," Auditorium; "Ladies Love Brutes," with "All Aboard," starring Teddy Joyce, Loew's Century; "Around the Corner," Bert Smith Players in "Broadway Limited," Hippodrome; "King of Jazz," Keith's after engagement at Auditorium at $1 top; 'Dich Hab Ich Geliebt," German dialogue film, Little; "Dumb-Bells in Ermine," Metropolitan; "Arizona Kid," New; "Ladies of Leisure," Rivoli; "The Divorcee," Loew's Stanley; "Honey," Loew's Valencia and Parkway simultaneously after one week at Loew's Stanley; Stage: "Ann Corio," Gayety; Vagabond Players in "The Pidgeon," Maryland.

The Unexpurgated Truth

Stepin Fetchit seems to have gone the way of many a movie actor who turned temperamental. Pathe has put another young man of color in his place in a new picture. Mr. Fetchit should have been told, way back in the beginning, that no movie actor is so good he can't be replaced.

Portland Plugs Whiteman to a Healthy $11,750

Portland, Ore.—Spontaneous comedy of Dressler & Moran in "Caught Short" was sufficient to bring out long waiting lines and the heaviest box-office of the week. Henri LeBel, organist, received heavy applause, and Herman Kenin and his stage band made additional friends; all at the Fox Broadway, which grossed $12,115 and again raised its percentage to 155.

With clever exploitation by Manager Sasso at Hamrick's Music Box, who brought the film by air, making clever tie-ups and window displays, Paul Whiteman's "King of Jazz" registered $11,750 (145%).

With an extra midnight Saturday show, the United Artists scored with "Arizona Kid," which hung up a score of 130%, grossing $10,355.

Weather: Light Spring rains; did not affect grosses.

Opposition: "King of Jazz," "Arizona Kid," "The Cuckoos," "True to the Navy," "Young Man of Manhattan."

Big M'P'ls Dough To 'Caught Short' Taking $33,420

Minneapolis—The Minnesota showed her heels to the rest of the Loop theatres this week when "Caught Short" topped the line-up. The picture was a crowd catcher. It gave the theatre a rating of 94% on a gross of $33,420.

Second honors went to the Orpheum, which surprised at the end of the week with 'Cuckoos" and Viola Dana headlining the vaude bill registering 95% and a gross $21,530. The State ran third, registering 90% and grossing $20,135.

"Ingagi," the sensation of the Loop, came through on the third week with a rating of 95% and took in real money, no rocks, at the box office to a total of $9,400. The Pantages, sixth on the list, showed "Soldiers and Women" to 85% and a gross of $8,500. "The Rogue Song," held over for a second week, did not register a great pull. It listed the Century, usually among the first four in the week's grosses, in seventh place with a gross of $7,580, or 70%. The Lyric showed "The Second Floor Mystery" to 90%, or gross of $4,000. The Aster ran "Second Choice" to 95%, or $3,000.

Opposition: "Caught Short," Publix Stage show; "Jazz Preferred," Minnesota; "The Texan," State; "Soldiers and Women," 5 acts vaude, Pantages; "The Rogue Song," Century (2nd week); "The Cuckoos" and 5 acts vaude headlined by Viola Dana, Hennepin Orpheum; "The Second Floor Mystery," Lyric; "Ingagi," Seventh Street (3rd week); "Second Choice," Aster; "The Play's the Thing," Legit, offering by Bainbridge Players.

"U" Studio Begins to Hum "Little Accident," First

Hollywood—Work on Universal's productions for next season has been launched with "The Little Accident," with William James Craft directing. The company has borrowed Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., from First National, and Anita Page from M-G-M. The pair will be co-featured. Balance of cast includes Sally Blane, Joan Marsh, Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts, Albert Gran, Henry Armetta, Nora Cecil, Roscoe Karns, Maude Turner Gordon, Bertha Mann, Gertrude Short and Dot Farley. The picture is initial supervising assignment of Albert De Mond.

"Texan" Rides 'em High in Boston Copping $37,000

Boston—"Song o' My Heart," after eight weeks as a road show, ended with the week's business showing approximately $8,000, which is a little better than the seventh week but far below the other six weeks. "Journey's End," road show, also closed after four weeks at the Tremont with $9,000 gross. Had a booking date been available it would have continued at least another week. With the only two road shows in the city moving along, other picture houses expect a slight gain for the ensuing week.

Publix Metropolitan with "The Texan" showed a gain with a $37,000 gross, 125% rating. "Putting on the Ritz" at Loew's State was something of a surprise with an increase in gross to $24,500 and a boost in the rating to 125%. "Song of the Flame" at the Keith Memorial maintained a rating of 125% with $27,000 gross. Other theatres maintained better than average business with very few exceptions.

Weather: Warm and fair.

Opposition: "The Texan" with Publix stage show, Metropolitan; "The Other Tomorrow" with five acts RKO vaudeville at Keith-Albee; "Song of the Flame" at Keith Memorial; "Putting on the Ritz" with special display newspaper advertising at Loew's State; "The Divorcee" with Loew's Greater vaudeville, five acts, at Loew's Orpheum; "Dumb Bells in Ermine," playing day and date at Publix Scollay Square and Fenway Theatres; "Soldiers and Women" at the Park and two road shows. Rain the Jinx in Omaha; "Brutes" Hits Par, $8,500

Omaha—Sunshine is a forgotten joy in this town, where rain has fallen almost steadily for the past five weeks. With the exception of the Paramount, which hit par for $8,500 with "Ladies Love Brutes" (Paramount), business was off in all houses.

Columbia's "Ladies of Leisure" brought the Orpheum $13,500 (90%). Three vaudeville headliners and "Show Girl in Hollywood" (F. N.) grossed $9,500 at the World (95%).

Two flops were "Second Floor Mystery" (W. B.), which got $1,912 (85%) for three days at the State, and "Let's Go Places" (Fox), $2,000 (80%) for the last half.

'Divorcee' Proves A Honey in L. A. Grosses $29,700

Los Angeles—'Twas sweet to hear the merry tingle of dough in the box office window of Fox's Criterion, where "Divorcee" knocked 'em still to the tune of a 297% rating—which means $29,700 in gross intake. But many murmers of dissatisfaction were heard in other quarters, what with red written all over the books of other local stands.

"The "Divorcee" figure rolled up a record early and when the race was over came out three grand ahead of the house top for all time. Splash advertising plugs by the theatre and studio helped tremendously. The studio used half-page spreads.

Other attractions which made the better-than-par mark were the Carthay Circle, taking $17,400 (139%) with "All Quiet on the Western Front," "Lady of Scandal," on a $27,400 gross, making one point higher than par; "Benson Murder Case," fair at $10,500 (105%); "Courage," so-so at $15,000 (107%), and "Cuckoos," which hit $19,500, on a 122% rating.

$21,750 Grossed By "Montana" In Kansas City Run

Kansas City—The Midland celebrated the week with the best business in months with "Montana Moon." The intake far surpassed the previous "Anna Christie" record. The picture, enhanced by the personal appearance of Phil Baker on the stage, grossed $21,750, which rated 145%.

Pantages claimed to have the next best rating, with 130%, or $14,700, on "Arizona Kid." The Uptown hit third spot with 115% business for "Painted Angel," and the Royal boasted 110% on "Under a Texas Moon." At the Newman, Warner Brothers' "Hold Everything" ran up 105% or $10,500, and at the Mainstreet, business was a little above normal with Radio's "The Cuckoos," which grossed $15,750.

Unholy Three

(M-G-M—All Talker)

Chaney Talks

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

THE "man of many faces" bids fair to also become "the man of many voices." This fact was apparent after a preview peek at Lon Chaney's initial venture into talkers, "The Unholy Three."

That well-known Chaney personality of the silent film is greatly enhanced by the quality of his microphoned voice. It is hard to understand the original hulabaloo about Chaney refusing to talk in pictures, unless it was a clever publicity build up to focus attention on his first talker. One thing is certain, Chaney was never afraid of his voice registration via the "mike" and this fact is demonstrated by his naturalness in delivery of dialogue in "Unholy Three."

The talker remake of Chaney's former silent success is a particularly fine piece of work with the dialogue allowing far greater dramatic scope than was possible in silent pictures. "Unholy Three" rates for substantial business in the week runs and succeeding program bookings and might easily top former Chaney grosses of silents.

Chaney, as Prof. Echo, the side show ventriloquist, is particularly effective with his various voices. Opening with Lon giving a ventriloquist performance, the story switches to Chaney impersonating an old woman. As such, he runs a bird store that forms the base of operations for his trio of crooks—the midget, the strong man and the girl.

The girl gets involved in a love affair with Hector, the young clerk, thereby arousing the jealousy of Chaney. Then the midget and Hercules pull a robbery, committing a murder in their escape. Chaney does his best to cover up and finally rushes his coterie off to a mountain hideaway, but not before the midget plants suspicion of the murder on Hector.

The latter is brought to trial, with conviction imminent. The girl pleads with Chaney to help the boy, and Echo visits the courtroom. Next day he appears on the witness stand disguised as the old lady to prove an alibi for the boy on the night of the crime. But the prosecuting attorney detects a slip in Chaney's voice, and whips off the wig. Then Chaney makes a full confession.

In the meantime, Hercules attempts an attack on Rosie at the mountain cabin, but the midget loosens Chaney's pet gorilla. Hercules is enraged and kills the midget, with the gorilla finally finishing the strong man. For a finale, Chaney is back with the side show as ventriloquist after a two-year prison stretch and sends Rosie back to Hector for the love fade-out.

There's plenty of drama and suspense throughout the picture, with direction finely handled by Jack Conway. Next to Chaney, Elliott Nugent takes acting honors. Harry Earles as the midget, and Ivan Linow as Hercules, turn in satisfactory performances, while Lila Lee was hardly impressive as Rosie.

Broad comedies will blend well with the drama of this one.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. From book by Clarence Aaron Robbins. Directed by Jack Conway. Scenario and dialogue by J. C. and Elliott Nugent. Edited by Frank Sullivan. Photographed by Percy Hilburn. Length, about 6,300 feet. Running time, about 70 minutes. Release date, Aug. 2, 1930.

Follow Through

(Paramount—All Talker)

Plenty Musical Comedy

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

THERE'S music and comedy galore in "Follow Through" nicely assembled into a fast tempo picture that should supply plenty of entertainment for all classes of audiences. It is claimed by various circuits that musicals don't go, but if "Follow Through" does not get over in a substantial way, producers just better stop making that sort of picture entirely and go back to the old formulas for dramas and comedies of the silent days.

Caught in preview shape, the production, nevertheless, rates for attention in the long run houses at top prices, and should garner substantial grosses in the split weeks and small towns.

Strange as it may seem, there is not a dancing ensemble throughout the entire picture. Elimination of the dancers gives audiences a rest from an over-abundance of this type of entertainment besides materially speeding the picture tempo throughout.

"Follow Through" is a filmusical adaptation of the hit stage show of the same name, with golf for the story background. Practically all action takes place in and around a country club and golf course, with a romance interwoven into the plot to provide motivation.

Charles ("Buddy") Rogers and Nancy Carroll carry the main featured spots, with Zelma O'Neal and Jack Haley underlined. The latter pair carry the major portion of comedy and score heavily in several roar sequences. Both are newcomers from the stage and are slated to stay in pictures for some time to come after this. Eugene Pallette is grooved for another comedy spot, and puts over his usual fine performance. Margaret Lee and Don Tomkins, another comedy team, is limited in footage and overshadowed by the O'Neal-Haley combination.

"Buddy" Rogers is capable in the lead. Ditto for Nancy Carroll. Both have various song numbers to warble.

Laurence Schwab, part-author and producer of the stage show, gets co-direction credit on the picture. Schwab was teamed with Lloyd Corrigan, Paramount writer, who had his first directing opportunity on this one. Schwab's knowledge of the stage show, combined with Corrigan's picture ability, resulted in one of the fastest-tempoed musical comedies that have ever been turned out in picture form.

Technicolor was used throughout, giving the production a chance to set off the scenery and the parade of loud and colorful golfing ensembles.

The Dude Wrangler

(Sono Art-World Wide—All Talker)

Glorifying the Pansy

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

THE Chic Sale influence has reached Hollywood, and the author of that famous American classic, "The Specialist," should get some of the blame—or credit—for this picture. The producers have injected chunks of raw, earthy humor into it that shock—and rock the theatre with laughter.

Sono Art-World Wide created comment by advertising the picture as the story of a "pansy cowboy" and the writer of the copy did not stretch his imagination. In fact, an old cowboy, detailed to accompany the dude wrangler to his ranch, objects with the protest: "Folks will think he's made a pansy out of me, too."

It's a tough job to define the production. In print, the scenario resembles the hallucinations of a bughouse inmate. But the treatment given it results in a succession of belly laughs. And its appeal is not necessarily confined to the low brows; the old adage, "a little nonsense now and then is relished by the best of men," holding true in this case. It's a throwback to the primitive. Director Richard Thorpe, taking a glance at the story and the cast, probably threw up his hands and exclaimed: "Oh, what the hell. Let's have some fun."

Thorpe has taken a cue from revue blackouts and gets over his salty gags with a speed that leaves the spectator gasping, clicking a bigger roar thereby. When a woman questions the dude's lack of judgment in fondling a pet skunk he informs her that "Charley's had his pockets picked." Another scene shows a city couple entering a tent and then comes the woman's voice: "Oh, what a large cup. What is that for?"

On another occasion the hero, pursuing a cow which, in some broad comedy titles previously had been established as anticipating a blessed event, shouted: "Don't run; remember your condition."

George Duryea is adequate as the effeminate cowboy. Lina Basquette, playing opposite, is merely excess baggage. Francis X. Bushman puts over the heroics in wooden style. Clyde Cook grabs the acting honors and his straight comedy is a wow.

Burdened with the tag of "Western" and without a big name in the cast, the picture probably will not reach the de luxe houses. But it might go over as a "Take a Chance Week" offering.

Add any type of shorts except comedy or Western.

Produced by Mrs. Wallace Reid and Cliff Broughton. Distributed by Sono Art-World Wide. Directed by Richard Thorpe. From the novel by Caroline Lockhart. Dialogue and adaptation by Robert Lee. Length, 6,200 feet. Running time, 68 minutes. Release date, June, 1930.

The Danger Man

(Cosmos—Part Talker, Effects)

Punk

(Reviewed by J. P. Cuningham)

IT'S nice to know that only occasionally do we have to witness pictures as utterly hopeless as "The Danger Man," which first saw light of day many years ago in serial form. Truly, it's an unbearable piece of screen fare and patrons would be fully justified in accepting it as an insult to their intelligence. We do!

Immediately after they flash the main title, a sub-caption informs us of the existence of a prologue, necessitated, it is said, because the producers had reversed the usual order and tacked on the "happy ending" at the beginning of the picture, rather than in the last reel. The truth of the matter, however, rests in what follows the prologue: A CHOPPED-UP SERIAL, amateurishly dubbed with musical and effects in serial stuff, yeah, how they sounded! It's a mess.

The antiquity of the serial stuff is laughable. And rest assured the audience in the house where this was caught took full advantage of the opportunity to chuckle. The sound was deafening, to say the least, although we appreciate the toughness of the synchronizers' job in adapting a fast action serial negative to music and sound.

It will undoubtedly get by at kid shows, because they ram climaxes of at least ten serial episodes into one picture, over-run with the old-time car chases over bridges and cliffs; airplane and yacht thrills, and the usual stock motorcycle escapades which made Charles Hutchinson so dear to the hearts of serial-loving youngsters many years ago.

A fine example of the old school of picture making, which instantaneously develops a keener appreciation of the present trend in screen attractions. The serial negative used, according to the distributor, is "Lightnin' Hutch."

Strong double feature bill needed, with plenty of entertainment value in the support.

Roaring Ranch

(Universal—All Talker)

Dandy

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

HERE'S a Western that the women are going to fall for hard. The Gibson male fans will eat it up, too, for it's packed with action they like, but Hoot in the role of a foster mother to a baby will make a big hit with the femmes. They rocked a Broadway theatre with laughter as they watched the star bathing the infant and making a masculine mess of trying to adjust its most important article of attire.

There is a plausibility and humanness to the story generally lacking in Westerns. Many of the sequences are devoted merely to Hoot performing the customary chores on his ranch, with the baby propped up in a wheelbarrow nearby, and pigs, goats, chickens, cows and other live stock contributing to the sound effects. Hoot's monologue as he cares for the child is delightfully natural and humorous.

The story itself is as old as the hills. The villain discovers that under Gibson's ranch is an oil pocket "as big as the Pacific ocean," and gets it in the customary crooked manner. Hoot wins it back with his fists, becomes rich and marries the girl. Sally Eilers is excellent as the heroine.

While the production values required by Class A houses are lacking, the picture will win new friends for the star. In running it make a play for feminine patronage.

The Runaway Bride

(Radio Pictures—All Talker)

Will Get By

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

IT'S a case of a runaway story, too. Just when one romance gets off to a good start the director, Donald Crisp, throws in a handful of melodrama. When that peters out for the nonce we find a new affair of the heart starting. Then the villains bust in again. The picture is both nice and exciting, if you know what we mean.

It opens with Mary Astor and David Newell eloping and to pave the way for a more or less consistent development of the plot, registering at a hotel before they have the knot tied. The room has been occupied the day before by a quick-shooting gentleman who, returning via the fire escape after another killing, finds Mary locked in by her bridegroom-to-be. Mary had decided at the last moment, as women will, not to marry her "heart" because she wants a husband who just adores to work, instead of idling his time away. So he's going to caveman her. The crook slips the diamond necklace in her bag. Then a cop appears at the window, shoots and kills the bad guy—and disappears from view. Sort of a Mack Sennett cop.

A chambermaid, in league with the crooks, liberates Mary for $300 and gives her a card from an employment agency which she had intended to use to get a job as cook for a wealthy bachelor, who is none other than Lloyd Hughes. Mary, afraid to go home because of the compromising situation she is in, takes the job. Just as Lloyd is falling in love with her all the crooks and detectives in Hollywood break in, and virtue and pure love triumph.

The characters are juggled about with little regard for logic or plausibility, but on the whole the picture is entertaining and should please generally. There is nothing outstanding in direction or acting. It is fast in tempo and as a program offering will get by.

Light comedy shorts or musical featurettes for balance.

Sunny Skies

(Tiffany—All Talker)

Raw! Raw!

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

THERE'S going to be a riot when the rah rah boys of the nation spot this "college" story. The studes have registered many a kick about Hollywoodian conceptions of campus life, but when they lamp this one they'll probably wreck the theatre. And—you're right again. Our hero wins the football game in the last moment although the day before he's given a pint of his blood to save the life of his roommate. Of such stuff are film heroes made.

It's a curious picture. It's impossible to figure out if the director intended his public to take it straight or not. Just when you're convinced that he is kidding the college cycle he injects some laborious heroics and spoils all the fun. However, paradoxically, there is so little rhyme or reason to the tale that interest [illegible] the uncertainty as to what queer tack the story will take next.

Benny Rubin gets the top billing, but he belongs on the burlesque wheel. The few laughs he gets are due to the situations concocted by the scenario writer. His grimaces and antics are painful and he was woefully miscast as a college freshman. Marceline Day, as the heroine, was given a lifeless role. Rex Lease, as the football hero, gave a satisfactory performance and looked the part, while Marjorie Kane was awful in her attempts to be funny. The entire production gives the impression of having been shot from the cuff, with Director Norman Taurog and A. P. Younger, the author, splitting the responsibility. The less said about the songs spotted in, the better.

The average audience may like it, but if your house is in a college town see the picture before you book it.

Add novelty or dramatic shorts.

The Burning Heart

(Terra-Berlin-Sound Effects)

Not So Hot

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

THIS German production rates only as a fair program offering due entirely to a weak story and a loose continuity. It is saved from utter mediocrity, however, by the acting of Mady Christians and Gustav Froelich in the leading roles. Both are personally attractive and expert pantominists, and they evoke a sympathetic response that keeps the audience from walking out on the picture.

There is little coherence, and a lot of coincidences, in the tale. A musician-inventor not only writes a symphony, "The Burning Heart," but makes a contrivance (you've read about it) which produces music simply through "ether waves"—by waving his hands in front of it. The girl, a struggling singer, tries to land in opera, fails and takes a job as a cabaret singer. For some reason she is ashamed of her profession and the romance that has sprung up in a few feet of film through scenario writers' license goes on the rocks when he finds out that she is not a postoffice employe as she has told him.

He throws a theatrical rage when he learns about it, although he has a souse as a mother, and when he gives his first performance of the symphony he is unable to go on with the "ether wave" portion. The girl saves the day by getting up in the audience and singing that portion of the symphony. More license. Then the happy fadeout.

It is synchronized throughout, but contains no dialogue. Mady Christians sings three songs in English in a fair voice without an accent, and apparently had no double for these sequences. Other sound effects, however, are dubbed in and in many spots do not synchronize with the action. The subtitles are in English and German.

The picture does not justify many promises, but it is as good as many American program pictures.

Comedy shorts (no cabaret stuff or revue stuff) and cartoons are needed for balance.

Opinions On Pictures

Bride of the Regiment

(1st National-All Talker)

Moderately Pleasing

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

Photographically, "Bride of the Regiment," a talker remake adapted from "The Lady in Ermine" is beautiful. In point of acting, it calls for no cheers. As a piece of entertainment, it ranks as pleasing stuff with a direct appeal to women.

In big towns, the picture will probably be met with a couple of yawns. In all others, the romantically inclined will probably get a kick out of it.

Those who look for hidden inferences will get plenty from the major situation, wherein the fair countess, played in so-so fashion by Vivienne Segal, finds it necessary to sacrifice honor and a few sleeping hours to save her husband from death. Walter Pidgeon, as Colonel Vultow, is the fellow exacting the price. He thinks he gets what he's after, but instead falls asleep, dreams his plans in behalf of the countess and himself are actual fact and rides away in the morning, carrying out to the letter his promise to free the husband.

Those in the opening night audience at Warners' Hollywood in New York who caught the drift, as well as the daring in the treatment, looked at each other and laughed. There were many who didn't, just as there will be plenty throughout the country, who won't interpret the slant as herein outlined.

The story is one of those things. It concerns the Austrian invasion of Northern Italy, the flight of the revolutionist leader on the night of his wedding to Miss Segal and efforts of the colonel to make the countess pay his price for her captured husband's freedom. Hubby does go free in the wind-up and that's that. Injected into the story for comedy are Ford Sterling, Lupino Lane and Louise Fazenda. Sterling has amusing moments, but is permitted to overplay. Lane, as usual, comes through with a nice performance. His song number with Miss Fazenda is one of the best spots in the picture, although a trifle long. Allan Prior looks hardly the type for a hardy leader of the revolting natives, but after all, this is primarily a musical and Pryor was selected for voice, not physique. Pidgeon strust all over the screen as the military leader in strict accordance with the formula for villains in operettas.

The producer, wisely enough, subordinated the operetta formula to straight picture treatment with the limited number of song numbers interluded where the action made it logical. Myrna Loy, in a vamp part, gives a variable performance. Some of it good and a lot of it just ham stuff.

Stay away from color subjects; this is all Technicolor and enough for any one program. Try cartoons as companion piece.

Edited by Le Roy Stone. Photographed by Dev Jennings and Charles Schaenbaum. Length, 74 feet. Running time, 82 minutes. Release date, June 22.

(Universal-Silent—2 Reels)

Average Comedy

GOOD comedy for the neighborhoods, with plenty of slapstick. If they like this sort of entertainment, we are sure they'll accept "Her Bashful Beau" without disappointment. Arthur Lake clicks at about the same pace which marks his other shorts. In this one, he rides into a jam with the girl friend when the latter's competitor succeeds in vamping Arthur. Running time, 22 minutes. Directed by S. Newfield.

Average comedy, suitable for light feature bill. Use a dramatic sketch with both units.

Hot for Hollywood

(Universal-Sound—1 Reel)

Nice Cartoon

LITTLE OSWALD journeys to Hollywood for his debut in films. Only a card of introduction from Will Hays saves him from the bum's rush at the studios of Putrid Pictures Corp. It runs short—only six minutes—but very snappy. The burlesque on Chaplin is particularly funny.

Ideal for mixture with a two-reel musical comedy and a heavy feature story.

A Spanish Fiesta

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3279—1 Reel)

Pleasing Enough

ANOTHER in the Roberto Guzman series. This one, "A Spanish Fiesta" is in Technicolor and in it Guzman sings "Te Quiere" and the well known, "La Paloma." It is the latter number that will send this in for average satisfaction. Nothing to get excited about. Running time, 6 mins.

O. K. Offset for heavy feature.

A Chinatown Fantasy

(Paramount Talker—1 Reel)

Very Bad

JUST another short subject and a poor one at that. You get a jumbled mixture of vaudeville bits tied together with a dream as an excuse. The numbers don't mean a thing, are indifferently presented and similarly performed. Directed by Frank Cambria. Running time, 10 mins.

Soft pedal this if you have to show it. Will fit in with almost any type of feature.

Not by Design

Utica, N. Y.—There's a Columbia Street in this town and it was purely by accident that Joe Goldberg, general sales manager for Columbia Pictures, found himself traveling over it last week-end while visiting Harry D. Goldberg (no relation) of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc.

Harry insists he had nothing to do with it and that the avenue is Columbia Street even when Joe isn't in town.

Station S-T-A-R, No. 11

(Tiffany Talker—1 Reel)

Okay

A PARTICULARLY good number in this series, thanks to Billy Bevan, the "announcer." He tries to keep up a telephone conversation with his wife while announcing the presentation and the better half gets an earful of hot stuff which sends her to Reno. He clicks a lot of laughs. Bessie Love, singing one song while playing her uke, and Blanche Sweet, yodeling another number, are the high spots, but evoke no cheers. Running time, 10 minutes.

Will fit into any type of program.

Who's Got the Body?

(RKO-Talker—2 Reels)

Peppy

THE first of the "Nick and Tony" series made by Louis Brock and jammed with gags and comedy business that put it over. Those who like slapstick will enjoy it. The two Italian leads buy a garage and get in a mess of trouble when a souse, sleeping it off in a car, is for the dead man whose body is being sought by the police. The drunk takes an awful lot of manhandling. Directed by Mark Sandrich. Running time, 21 minutes.

Play it with a drama.

All Wet

(Universal-Silent—2 Reels)

Okay

KID SAYLOR offers a pleasing fun concoction in which gobs on shore leave get themselves disliked by sappy behavior with their newly-found girl friends. Hits a pleasing pace for fun. Running time, 20 minutes. Directed by S. Newfield.

Typical two-reel comedy material, offering itself readily as supporting material on a bill highlighting drama in its feature.

Battling Kid

(Universal-Silent—2 Reels)

Usual Western Stuff

LOTS of fightin' and ridin' enhance the value of this one for the kid market. They'll go wild over it. But don't bank on the elders, 'cause it has nothing more than is usually found in the average short reel Westerner. Little Bobbie Nelson pleases. Running time, 19 minutes. Directed by Jack Nelson.

Good for the Saturday show for kiddies. Use light slapstick comedies and a cartoon.

Fast Work

(Chase-M-G-M—2 Reels)

A Swell Comedy

A SITUATION comedy wherein mistaken identities and an escaped lunatic supply the laughs. Charley Chase, as usual, is after the girl. She's ready to fall, but insists Chase must get her father's permission to take her out. Out after it, Charley goes, believes the lunatic is the father and finds himself beautifully mixed up in a series of funny situations. Well worked out and fast moving. Directed by James Horne. Running time, 20 mins.

A clean comedy, geared nicely for family trade.

The Museum

(Winkler-RKO—1 Reel)

This Is In

IN WHICH a new cartoon character, Toby the Pup makes an auspicious debut. This is the first of a new series by Winkler for RKO distribution and is very well done. Nicely keyed for laughs, the cartoonists did a fine animation job. In conception and timing, "The Museum" clicks. Toby does a lot of miraculous things, including bringing to life the various famous characters of history who do their stuff to jazz time rythm. Recommended. Running time, 6 mins.

Go for this and tell the mob you've got it. It's there. For any bill.

Danger

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3529—1 Reel)

Terrible

VITAPHONE has turned out plenty of bad shorts. Also a lot of good ones. But this aimless, pointless number called "Danger" hits about as low a level as this reviewer has seen in the short subject field. That's covering plenty of ground.

The locale is Texas near the Mexican border. Seems a young lieutenant is off his post making love to the girl in the piece, is seen, attempts to escape, is caught and sentenced to be shot. But the Spanish words of "Under a Texas Moon" convince the colonel he is a ranger, not the deserting officer, thereby saving him from the firing squad. So to the girl he goes, escapes the pursuing soldiers and out of the picture. Also out of the minds of any audience that sees it. Directed by Eddie Cline and apparently in very much of a hurry. Running time, 8 mins.

Forget it. If you must show it, sandwich it in and make your support plenty strong.

Yes, We Have No Bananas

(Fleischer-Paramount—1 Reel)

Delightful

THESE song cartoons continue to maintain an extremely high average. The words and music of the well known popular number lend themselves to clever animation. Joseph Fleischer has done it again. It's all a lot of nonsense, but so ridiculous, it's funny. This will make any audience go in for chuckling on a wholesale scale. Running time, 8 mins.

A fine number. Will fit in anywhere, anytime.

Audio Review No. 22

(Pathe-Sound—1 Reel)

Fair

A REMARKABLY fine picture of Sweden's beautiful forests and the sturdy lumberjacks who work them. It is sufficiently pleasing to redeem the remaining two unimportant units in this new "Audio" number, which as a whole, is fair.

Second in the reel is a vocal picturization of the old Mission San Gabriel, in California. Parts of "La Paloma" rendition flop miserably. This is followed by "Chemical Forest," a microscopic study of chemical reactions. It's right in keeping with Terry Ramsaye's yen for fantastic designs—but not in keeping with the public's yen for entertainment, we are sure. After all, what great value can there be in depicting the pretty flowery designs which follow a test with ammonium chloride, sodium sulphide, or any other chemical for that matter? Running time, 10 minutes.

Light feature comedy and a musical short

Audio Review No. 21

(Pathe-Sound—1 Reel)

Okay—But Too "Arty"

HITS the average mark made by "Audios," not a single point further does it go. There's a study of "busy bees," and a study of New Zealand geysers, captioned "artful mud." The mud is there, but we failed to recognize the art. Next appears "Coal Belt Art," by none other than negro miners of Carbondale, Ill., who apparently formed a band while still taking lessons from a music correspondence school. Pathe should have waited until the black boys graduated. The Review quartette closes the sea "chanty," "Rio Grande." Running time, 10 minutes.

Strong supporting shorts needed with this.

Kicked Right in the Neck

Hollywood—Harry Carr, while discussing Greta Garbo recently, mentioned Greta and the old days, when it was about as easy to get chatty with the Swede "as to run in and have breakfast with the Pope." But since the talkies came, we look back to the Greta of the silents as a genial and sociable soul.

"Greta is only snubby to the great and grand, however.

"She is taking lessons in tennis from a Hollywood professional. She shows up at the tennis court in a sweater and a pair of pants that are understood to have been white at one time.

"The other day, another pupil of the tennis teacher sat on the sidelines to wait for Greta to finish her lesson. He was of the terrible age of fourteen years.

"'Well,' she said, when a stroke brought her over near where he sat, 'how do you think I play? Hey?'

"'I think you are a lousy player,' he replied with candor.

"'I tank you are right,' Garbo assented gloomily.'"

Red Heads

(Pathe-Talker—2 Reels)

Pleasing Musical

STACKS UP as an average girlie revue having a fair amount of entertainment value, much of which emanates from the straight comedy lines by Nat Carr, who, as the owner of an elaborate dress emporium, finds himself the center of attraction among a bevy of good looking red-headed models. The girls hit the paces with some fast stepping. One number in particular is plenty torrid, led by Mona Ray—the half-pint blues warbler who clicks as an entertainer in a piece of this type.

In several sequences there is a pronounced tinny, microphonic sound, which may have originated from the reproducing device. It was terrible, and resulted in sending the entertainment barometer to lower depths than were necessary. All-in-all, it's just so-so.

Slip this in with a comedy drama and a novelty short.

Hawaiian Pineapples

(Terrytoon-Educational—½ Reel)

Corking

ANOTHER topnotcher in Paul Terry's series of musical cartoons. To the accompaniment of a quartette singing Hawaiian melodies, native belles, tree trunks and whatnot do the hula hula. It's speedy and catchy and will click anywhere. Running time, 7 minutes.

Spot it into a program that needs light stuff.

Big Money

(Vitaphone-Talker—1 Reel)

Nicely Built Up

ONE of "The Potters" series, this sketch boasts of a domestic situation which readily lends itself to hilarious comedy. "Pa," unknown to the folks, is a paid corespondent in divorce cases. His mysterious and continuous absence from home at night leads to the discovery of the old man at work—and the fight starts. Well handled. Running time, 12 mins.

Musical comedy feature okay with this, but use a good cartoon for light comedy.

Believe It Or Not

(Vitaphone-Talker—2 Reels)

Mighty Interesting

RIPLEY—whose "Believe It Or Not" oddities appear in several hundred newspapers—has at last reached the talking screen. His initial short fully lives up to expectation. The material is a natural interest builder. Just can't miss, and you might take advantage of the newspaper tie-up. There's some exploitation angles which should click, particularly on sports pages.

"Rip's" enunciation is not clear—the only flaw in his first reel. The material which he uses was well selected and some of his characters appear with him. Running time, 19 minutes.

A crackerjack for a feature comedy.

Hooked

(Pathe-Talker—1 Reel)

Just the Thing

QUITE APPROPRIATE for this time of year, when the vast legion of Izaak Walton followers are all primed for lake and deep sea water angling. It will appeal to the women folk, too, because it very clearly depicts the "old man's" fight to land the brain-food which he promised to deliver for the dinner table. Top-notch entertainment for any house. A Grantland Rice "Sportlight." Running time, eight minutes.

Fine with an adventure story and a good sound cartoon.

Universal Orders Changes In Play Before Purchasing

Before purchasing the film rights to "The Trimmer," stage play which will come to Broadway following a try-out on the "subway circuit," Universal induced the producers, J. J. White and H. Clay Blaney, to make a number of changes designed to add to the exploitation value. The comedy drama, by Michael Hagan, will be given the title of "Reckless Daughters."

Films, Drama and Music Used Together in Opera

Berlin—Films are being used to aid presentation of the operatic biography, "Christopher Columbus," based on the life of the discoverer of America. Some of the scenes require the players to appear in person on the stage, and in film scenes projected on the back of the stage at the same time. Singing, acting and the playing of the orchestra are in synchrony.

Eastman Slices Price Of Kodacolor Stock

Rochester — Eastman Kodak Co. announced a cut in the price of its Kodacolor film from $6 to $4.75 for a 50-foot roll. It is now making the film in 100-foot rolls, retailing at $9. Company executives said that the lower prices are made possible because of the growing popularity of the film which has increased production and cut costs.

High and Low On Music Row

PROCLAIMING "George Piantadosi Week" in honor of the new professional manager for Robbins, a group of orchestra leaders, including Abe Lyman, Irving Aaronson, George Olsen, Fred Waring and Johnny Hamp, sent the following letter to the New York offices of the music company: "We, the undersigned leaders, now playing in Hollywood and on the Pacific Coast, take this opportunity to congratulate you on securing George Piantadosi as manager of your professional department. George Piantadosi's thorough knowledge of the requirements of band leaders and the sincere interest he takes in our welfare makes his association with your organization another progressive move in Jack Robbins' leadership of the music world."

Since signing to write for Warners, Al Bryan has written 54 songs, Al Dubin is a close second with 50 compositions, Joe Burke boasts 47 while M. K. Jerome is credited with having composed the greatest numbers of songs for Vitaphone varieties. In the space of 18 months Warners have had 308 songs especially written for Warner productions.

DeSylva, Brown & Henderson have added another batch to their catalogue, which now includes two hit numbers in "Cottage for Sale" and "When the Little Red Roses Get the Blues for You." The new songs are "Washing the Blues from My Soul," by Willard Robison and Dave Oppenheim; "Don't Cry for Rover, Fido Is Here," by Lew Brown and Albert Von Tilzer; "Go Ask Hannah," by Sidney Claire, Lew Brown and Cliff Friend; "Are You Ashamed of Me?" by Sammy Lerner and Al Hoffman, and "When Love Finds a Way to Your Heart," "Havin' You Around Is Heaven" and "On a Little Street in Havana," by the two Als, Sherman and Lewis. We have a sneaking suspicion that several of the above numbers were written years ago.

Davis, Coots & Engel, who recently aligned themselves with Radio Music Co., have just published another pair of tunes from the pens of Benny Davis and Freddy Coots, writing team of the firm. The songs are "Sharing," which already is getting some great radio plugging, and "A Little Bit of Happiness Will Go a Long, Long Way."

Ziegfeld glorifies the American girl, scientists glorify prehistoric men and music publishers are glorifying the hobo, even glorifying the noun with the result that the "Dusty Rhodes" and "Weary Willies" are now Vagabonds. Santly Bros. have published a hit song in "Singing a Vagabond Song," from the United Artists production, "Puttin' On the Ritz," Mills has in its catalogue "When Vagabond Dreams Come True" and now Remick has started to work on a new song by Joe Young and Cliff Hess, "It's a Long, Long Road I'm Travelin' On, But I Got Good Shoes." Billy Baskette started something when he wrote "Old Shoes" about 15 years ago.

Lovers of the ballad type of song will find a wealth of beautiful songs included in the new catalogue of Chas. K. Harris, whose firm is known as "the house of ballads." Among the 18 new numbers are "Dancing in a Dream," "A Memory at Dawn," "Starlight, the Roses and You," "Would You Tell?" and "You Closed the Gates of Paradise (when you closed your heart to me)."

Murray Mencher, writer of "Me and the Girl Next Door" and "Ro-Ro-Rolling Along," for Shapiro-Bernstein, has signed on the dotted line and will write exclusively for that firm.

Vienna Houses Close to Fight American Films

Vienna—Times are tough in Vienna and, starting June 1, 60 picture houses will go dark two days a week in an effort to avoid bankruptcy. Small theatres are backing the move, which is part of a drive against American talkers.

They have been pleading for patronage on the ground that they are giving employment to musicians and preventing exportation of large sums to America to pay alleged profiteering prices of "the American electric monopoly."

Radio Music Controls Davis, Coots & Engel

Radio Music Co., RCA-Photophone subsidiary, has acquired control of Davis, Coots & Engel, New York publishing firm. Like Leo Feist, Inc., and Carl Fisher, Inc., other Radio subsidiaries, the firm will continue as a separate unit. It was organized about six months ago. Thirty per cent interest of Bobby Crawford, of the Warner music department, was bought by the company, which then sold 51 per cent interest to Radio.

Completes Music Deal

George R. Batcheller, president of Chesterfield M. P. Corp., has completed a deal with Charles Lang, of Bibo-Lang, Inc., publishers, whereby they will publish all the music of Chesterfield's latest release, "Ladies in Love." The songs to be published are "Big Boy," "One Sweet Song" and "Oh, How I Love You."

Goldwyn Borrows Tours

Frank E. Tours, general music director of the Paramount New York studio, has been loaned to Sam Goldwyn to act as musical director in charge of the forthcoming production starring Evelyn Laye. Tours, accompanied by Mrs. Tours, leaves for the coast Monday and will be gone about three months.

Joe's First in Color

Hollywood—Joe E. Brown's first solo starring vehicle on the screen, "High Life," will be photographed in Technicolor. This First National picture is based on a play by Rex Beach and Paul Armstrong.

Zeppo Marx is seriously thinking about changing his vocation and become an Alpine guide. During production on "Animal Crackers," on Paramount's New York lot, the junior member of the Clan Marx had to walk up and down 16 steps about 1,000 times—no, 100 times—maybe it was 50 times—anyhow, it was at least five times, so do us something if we're wrong.

Edward J. Savin, comptroller of the Eastern Vitaphone studios, has been made an honorary member of Local 52 of the Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators of United States and Canada. Savin was presented with a gold membership card in recognition of his work in bettering relations between producers and the union. Others who possess the gold card are D. W. Griffith, Courtland Smith, Sidney Olcott and George Stewart.

And a versatile young man is he. Burnet Hershey, scenarist at the Warner Flatbush plant, not only writes Vitaphone scripts in ye goode olde English, but does them in French or German as well. Don't be surprised to see a Chinese laundry scene with native dialogue one of these bright rainy days.

Ruth Etting, who scored a hit with the "Dime a Dance" song in Ziegfeld's "Simple Simon," B. M. T.'d across the Brooklyn Bridge to make a two-reeler for Vitaphone. Don Cook of Arthur Hopkins' "Rebound" and Frank Rowan, recently of "Penny Arcade," supported her while Terry Carroll, Nancy's sister, also did a bit in this variety.

Does the average man or woman need a little naughty kick in his or her amusement?

Have the moving pictures been supplying this dash of vicarious living?

Has the race been stimulated by the spicy entertainment for its own good, for its own sanity and safer balance?

If the answer to any of these questions is "yes" the recent moral code for motion picture plays publicly outlined by Will H. Hays, guardian angel of the world's favorite entertainment, will certainly put a crimp in any vicarious thrill which may have lurked occasionally in the talkies.

In the elimination of these thrills, many persons profess to visualize a diminishing in the popularity of certain lovely stars whose methods of making love may be seriously cramped by the limits placed upon them.

There is somewhere something immoral in this; something that is obviously against the interest of the consumer. I am not economist enough to say exactly where the immorality of it comes in, but I do know very definitely that there is not a man in the world who is worth a salary of half a million a year to a business unless that business is conducted on a basis that is against all reason and against all justice to the consumer.—Vancouver Daily Province

$6,200 (230%) in 'Cargo's' Fifth Week at "Chi"

Several Loop houses staged belated comebacks during the week, but the majority held to their low levels established two months ago.

The Chicago was the outstanding revivalist, coming back to the tune of $10,000 above its mark for the preceding week. The Gaynor-Farrell team in "High Society Blues" (Fox) gave the house a gross of $52,800 (185%), its best figure in six weeks. McVickers, Roosevelt and Castle were the other high spots. "Hold Everything" (W. B.) grossed a nice $32,500 at McVickers—enough to carry it five extra days, which means plenty, since B. & K. inaugurated its new profit line for the hold-overs. "The Texan" (Paramount) showed similar strength at the Roosevelt. Beamed on by critics, it took about $28,000 for the week, which also justified its being held over. "White Cargo" (State Rights) turned in its fourth week of prosperity at the Castle, grossing $6,200 for a rating of 230% at this small house.

"Captain of the Guard" ("U."), with John Boles appearing in person, left the Woods on its eleventh day of unimpressive business. Replaced by "The Cuckoos" (RKO), which opened in mid-week at a $3,000-a-day pace. Critics went for it. State-Lake, carrying a heavy overhead on an anniversary program, had a bad week with $20,000. "Murder Will Out" (F. N.) was the feature. "Journey's End" (Tiffany) hit a good stride near the end of its first week and maintained it throughout the second. Gross for the second week was $12,500 (185%).

Weather: Fair, then cool and cloudy.
Opposition: "High Society Blues," stage show, Chicago; "Redemption," stage show, Oriental; "Captain of the Guards," with John Boles in person (4 days, of 2nd week); "The Cuckoos" (3 days), Woods; "Murder Will Out," RKO vaude, State-Lake; "Hold Everything," McVickers; "The Texan," Roosevelt; "Hell Harbor," United Artists; "White Cargo" (4th week), Castle; "Journey's End" (2nd week), Garrick; "Across the World with Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson" (2nd week), Studebaker; "General Crack" (2nd time in Loop), Orpheum; "Blaze o' Glory," Monroe.

"WHITE CARGO" (State Rights)

CASTLE—(300), 50c-75c, 4th week. Other attractions: "Daily News" Universal newsreel. Sensational business for this house. Gross: $6,200. Rating: 230%.

"HIGH SOCIETY BLUES" (Fox)

CHICAGO—(3,910), 35c-85c, 7 days. Other attractions: Stage show, orchestra, comedy, novelty short, newsreel. Nice business all week despite a calm reception by the critics. Best figure for house in six weeks. Gross: $52,800. Rating: 185%.

"JOURNEY'S END" (Tiffany)

GARRICK—(1,200), 50c-$1.50, 2nd week. Continuing a nice pace set toward the end of its first week. Gross: $12,500. Rating: 185%.

Frank Young, having sold everything United Artists' exchange had on its shelves in his own territory, was given a special sales mission into the country last week. First time in a flock of years that Frank has made a country sales trip. . . . Joe Wolf, one of Columbia's ace salesmen from Los Angeles, was a visitor on the Row while en route to New York recently.

The Royal Theatre, Kansas City, just completed installation of a $10,000 Nu-Air cooling system. . . . Jack Rubin, formerly at the Harmony Theatre here, is now associated with Therm-O-Proof Acoustical Products Co., with offices at 203 N. Wabash. . . . Milton Krueger, former Fox salesman, now lined up with Educational. . . . Oscar Hansen, owner of the Jefferson at Goshen, Ind., a visitor during this week. . . . Joe Plunkett of RKO in town looking over the local situation. Expect an announcement of the selection of a site for RKO's new loop house any day now.

Some more big shots who made the town during the week: Joseph I. Schnitzer and Lee Marcus of RKO; Carl Laemmle, Sr., and Lou Metzger of Universal. . . . "The Bad One" (U. A.) received nice comments and an attendance of about 1,400 at its midnight pre-view at the United Artists last Monday. . . . Henri Ellman still hitting the road with "Journey's End" (Tiffany) contracts in both hands. Made Des Moines and Omaha last week. . . . Saul Goldman landing "Dad Knows Best" (Educational) at the United Artists during Educational's convention week here. . . . Pathe offices empty. Everyone hitting the road on "Swing High."

KANE.

The Sappy Ending

Two Loop managers, in the current mood of disgust, were alib-ing low grosses as they wandered back-stage looking things over. Something very sleek and polished burst out of a dressing-room door and skipped past them, leaving a heavily-scented atmosphere in its wake. The visiting manager pointed after it questioningly.

"Oh, him?" scowled the host. "Well, before he was born his father was hoping for a boy and the mother had her heart set on a girl. They were both satisfied."

Indies' Slick Tricks Force Tank Bookings

Independent distributors here have found a new bludgeon to use on small town exhibitors who shy at booking novel and sensational product, according to reports from the provinces.

The distribs, the story goes, select a prosperous farming town where the lone theatre gets a big play the year around. They do some cheap but effective local exploitation on their product before attempting to sell the exhib. If he refuses to make a booking they show him an option on the local school or village hall auditorium and tell him they intend to show it themselves. With local interest in the picture already developed by the exploitation, that usually settles it.

Exchanges Supply Free Shows for War Veterans

Fox and Paramount exchanges furnished several features for screening at the Speedway Hospital, Maywood, Ill., as part of a program given for disabled war veterans there. A portable sound equipment unit was furnished by Western Electric, which made it possible for many of the bed-ridden veterans to enjoy talking pictures for the first time. The program was sponsored by the Western Electric Hawthorne club.

Steagall and Quinlan Get New RKO Posts

Changes were announced at two RKO loop houses during the week. A. H. Steagall replaces M. H. Rosenthal as assistant manager of the Woods. Rosenthal will take over the management of the RKO Orpheum at New Orleans. At the State-Lake, John Quinlan replaces William G. Cole as assistant manager. Cole has been named assistant manager of the RKO Orpheum at Spokane, Washington.

Foxites Trek West

The local Fox exchange will be represented by three members at the company's annual convention in Los Angeles at the end of the month—Clyde Eckhardt, manager, and Lou Dreher and Harold Loeb, salesmen.

William Benjamin, manager of the RKO exchange, attended RKO's annual convention at Los Angeles last week.

Chicago's Cutting Censors Continue Clipping Careers; in for a Century

It's a Crime!

A salesman for one of the local exchanges just in from his Wisconsin territory will try to help you imagine his amazement when, on repairing of an evening to one of those famed Wisconsin oases, he found it closed and barred. This particular spot, he explains, is not only situated in a section which, to all appearances, no word of prohibition enforcement has penetrated, but is also the property of one of the most influential and widely known operators in the territory.

Upon encountering this gentleman on the street later, the film salesman stopped to offer him a few words of sympathy.

"Too bad they closed you," he said. "That stuff you sold was the best in the country."

"Yeah," grunted the pub owner.

"How long before you can open? A year?"

"Aw, no. Thirty days."

"Thirty days! I never heard of a thirty-day closing for a prohibition violation."

"Aw, I wasn't pinched for no prohibition violation. I stayed open after twelve one night and Ed Simpson pinched me for violatin' the town closing ordinance."

"Permanents" Hang on to Jobs Five Members on Board Ten Years

Producers, distributors and exhibitors who have been irked in the past by the vagaries and uncompromising fronts of the Chicago board of censors have little hope of relief in the way of obtaining new and more amiable membership in the near future. The present membership, a study of the confidential records of the board discloses, is destined to remain intact until either death or mental incompetency removes them.

Despite the fact that a civil service examination is being held May 24 to fill two vacancies on the present board, there is little chance that any but the temporary appointees who have been filling the vacant posts for these many months will succeed to the permanent board. And as for the replacement of a permanent member, a glance at the past record of such replacements should suffice to convince you how much chance there is of that.

The complete censorship board is composed of ten members. At present there are eight "permanent" members and two temporary apointees. The eight "permanents" are: Miss Effie Sigler, censor in charge; William Foust, Edith Kerr, Anna Victor, Cora Doolittle, Anna Costello, Helen Bacon and Amy Adams. Of these, two have been members of the board since it came under civil service jurisdiction in 1914, another of these was appointed in 1917, another in 1918, another in 1919, another in 1925, and two more in 1928. Five of the present eight "permanents," then, have served on the board ten years or longer.

In For Life

Little hope that any but the two temporary appointees will succeed to the vacancies is given by an authority above that of the censor board.

"It cannot be said to be a foregone conclusion that the two appointees are 'in'," this authority said. "However, when they take their civil service exam they will have behind them the distinct advantage of their experience, which is rarely shared by any other candidate.

"As for the permanency of the present board," he continued, "only an eventuality can displace them. There are few changes in this or any other branch of the city's civil service. The object is to establish efficiency and reliability through length of service and experience."

Once in, they are, apparently, in until death or the trial board gets them.

The position of member of the censor board is a full-time occupation. The salary of the censor-in-charge (Miss Sigler) is $2,880 per year. Members receive $2,040 their first year; $2,280 the second year, and $2,460 the third year and every year thereafter.

Women have predominated on the board since its inception. Only three men (one of them a negro) have seen service on it. Most of the members have been unmarried women of middle age.

Revenue Decreases

A survey of the annual reports of the board of censors for the past two years (1928-1929) reveals some interesting sidelights. It is shown that the advent of talking pictures, with its increased projection speed and lengthened features, has increased the film inspected by more than 600,000 feet while, at the same time, it has decreased the revenue of the censor board by nearly $2,000. The influx of talking pictures has also brought an accompanying increase in the number of films rejected by the board.

The comparative reports follow:

No. of feet inspected	7,554,000	8,147,000
Cuts made	6,470	4,416
Reels rejected	122	148
Theatres inspected	303	262
Violations reported	46	84
No. of permits issued	20,885	20,892
Total receipts	$72,425	$70,245

There was a very high percentage of "silents" on the 1928 list, while the 1929 was practically an all-talking program.

Singer Stung

Mortimer H. Singer, general manager of the R-K-O Chicago offices, annually donates a valuable prize for the amateur player whose diction is adjudged best in the Drama League's annual theatrical contest, held at the Goodman Theatre here.

In this year's contest, staged recently, the Singer prize was awarded to Ralph Schoolman, a member of the cast of "The Tenth Man," a playlet which was awarded the first prize—the Edith Rockefeller McCormick cup. In addition, Charles Freeman, stage director for the prize winning play, received the third and final award given during the contest. Mr. Singer was so impressed by this clean sweep by the members of the same entry—and by the merits of their playlet—that he booked "The Tenth Man" for a week's engagement at the Palace here. Naturally interested in the winner of the prize he had donated, Mr. Singer sought him out.

"You have remarkable ability," he told Mr. Schoolman. "You shouldn't have been hiding yourself all these years. You might be a leading man today if you had started earlier."

"Mr. Singer," smiled the prize winner sadly, "I have been trying to gain an audience with you with just such hopes in mind for the past ten years."

Balaban Cans Managers

Harry Balaban, independent owner of the Windsor and Dearborn theatres here, has dispensed with managers at both houses and is now directing the two himself. Balaban was formerly associated with the Balaban & Katz organization here.

PRESS AGENT PUFFS

"A good old-fashioned snowball fight, staged by Clarence Brown for scenes in 'Romance,' in which Greta Garbo is starred, almost caused the director a day's work when he hired a group of newsboys to put on the battle. The youngsters were supplied with 'prop' snowballs for the scrimmage and Brown, with his camera, was stationed behind a window, shooting down into the street below.

"In the midst of the battle, one of the kids hurled one of the 'loaded' missiles with wicked aim, smashing the window pane and just missing Brown and his camera."

"It will be news to practically every editor in the world—and to all press agents—that the United Artists studio gateman has never failed to recognize Mary Pickford."

"Buster Keaton, who will play a soldier in his next M-G-M starring vehicle, has dug up his old uniform, which he wore in actual service in France, and will use it in some of his scenes in his new talkie. 'I got kind of used to wearing it then, and it'll fit better than a wardrobe uniform,' he says."

"Ramon Novarro wonders, in these days of foreign versions of talkies, if they'll ever make Chinese versions of pictures. 'Imagine singing "Free and Easy" or "The Rogue Song" in Cantonese,' he suggests. 'I guess it would sound like stones being dropped into a can.'"

"Harry Earles, the midget playing with Lon Chaney in 'The Unholy Three,' has a pet dog taller than himself. He is 'Rudolph,' a Great Dane. The huge pet never jumps on his diminutive master, and can be led on a leash, never pulling at it. 'It is something like when a bigger guy leads a horse,' says the tiny actor."

"Mott Shea, famous theatrical man of New York, visited the M-G-M studios and, among other old friends among ex-vaudevillians there met Polly Moran. 'You fired me once,' she laughingly informed him, 'But I'll bet you couldn't hire me now!'"

"Hey! Come down off that ladder. What are you trying to do, break your neck?' shouted a raucous voice.

"Every pair of eyes turned toward the top of a very tall, wobbly stepladder and there on the top, maintaining a precarious seat, was Lotti Loder, the German star who is now making pictures for Warner Bros. She began an ignominious descent.

"'If you want to kill yourself, wait until the picture is finished,' was the concluding remark of the owner of the raucous voice. When Lotti stepped off the bottom rung she had regained her composure. Anyway Lotti couldn't be upset for more than a minute and it was only the director speaking. Directors speak that way to stars in Hollywood."

Stevens Acoustic Firm Acquired by Johns-Manville

Assets and patents of the Stevens Sound Proofing Co., Chicago, have been acquired by Johns-Manville Corp. The Stevens firm manufactures patented structural products for sound insulations in walls, floors and ceilings and for constructing anti-vibration platforms under machinery.

The deal adds to the present line of Johns-Manville acoustical materials, Nashkote felts in various forms, with both perforated and plain covers; Nashtile with a "plastic" finish and Sanacoustic tile, the latter product being a perforated metal tile containing rock wool.

The Stevens systems are designed for theatres, studios, and other institutions.

Franklin's Free Show

Ottawa—Joe Franklin, who manages B. F. Keith's, this week staged his annual free show for senior school pupils under the auspices of the Royal Humane Society, when 2,600 boys and girls crowded the theatre, these being the scholars who had taken part in the society's essay competition. The feature was "The Wagon Master," starring Ken Maynard, supplied by the Film Board of Trade, and short subjects were provided by the Canadian Government. Franklin is a director of the society.

THEATRE Construction

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Ground was broken this week for Samuel Bomes' new house in East Providence, to cost about $150,000 and to have a capacity of 1,244. M. Davis Mason of Great Barrington, Mass., is the architect.

WOODLAND, Cal.—Erection of a $200,000 theatre here, to seat 1,200, has been announced by L. R. Cook, president of the National Theatres Syndicate of San Francisco.

LAKEVIEW, Ore.—The Marius will be the title of the new theatre to be built here by the two sons of the late Marius Miller, W. V. and Hobart Miller, together with M. E. Alger and R. E. Winchester.

ALBEMARLE, N. C.—A. F. Biles and R. L. Smith are to erect a theatre and lease it to the Stanly Amusement Co., operators of the Columbus. It will seat 700.

BATON ROUGE, La.—Southern Amusement Co. will build a theatre here.

LUBBOCK, Tex.—Mrs. G. T. Scales will spend $200,000 on erection of a theatre.

WINNIPEG—A syndicate of Winnipeg business men has arranged for the construction of the Academy Theatre, an atmospheric and wired house, to cost $150,000.

Fire Destroys Crescent

Pampa, Tex.—An early morning blaze destroyed the Crescent, causing a loss of $50,000. For a time a number of adjoining buildings were threatened. Defective wiring is given as the cause. The theatre was recently remodeled for talking pictures.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Good News!

ABOUT the greatest bit of news to reach our ears, comes indirectly from Harry Arthur, newly appointed "chief" of all the Eastern Fox Theatres.

His plan is as follows: NO MORE RUNNING THEATRES FROM THE HOME OFFICE, THE HOUSE MANAGER WILL BE THE MAN TO RUN THE THEATRE AND HIS DIRECT AND ONLY BOSS WILL BE THE DISTRICT SUPERVISOR.

That's just what we have been hoping for right along, and now it's coming to pass so that the house manager on this circuit will find himself divorced from a couple of dozen bosses.

Mr. Arthur's idea of chain management is by no means the first of its kind, but it strikes a new note here in the east where "boss management" had reached the point where the manager could never learn who and how many bosses he really had to take orders from.

It's high time that someone undertook to find out whether the average house manager is a capable individual and suited for the responsibilities of handling a house together with its many important details.

If, and time will tell, most of them can't make the grade without half a dozen or more supervisors standing behind them to prompt their every move, then it is high time that such conditions were brought to light and men capable of carrying the burden be found.

The "boss control" from the home office, making the manager follow every move according to home office judgment, has made robots out of real managers and a lot of them might find it hard to adjust themselves to the new order of things. But no matter how hard the adjusting process is going to be, it will be well worth the effort.

When a theatre owner engages a manager to run a theatre, they should at least allow him to follow his own judgment to that extent where he can demonstrate, after a reasonable period of time, whether he is the right man for the job. Putting him in charge and then making him jump through hoops at the command of a dozen different bosses, all with separate and individual ideas can only end one way. A poorly run theatre with a hundred loop-holes where patronage and money are seeping away.

The right type of man likes responsibility. He works harder by reason of feeling that his superiors have implicit faith in his honesty and judgment.

Our hats are off to Harry Arthur.

"Chick."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Press Boosted His Kiddie Biz. Plenty With Showmanship

With more and more Kiddie Clubs being organized by theatre men, the latest Club to come to our attention is the one founded by Matt Press, manager of the Saenger Theatre in Hope, Arkansas, with which he is securing plenty of kiddie business on his Saturday matinees.

As the first move in his campaign Press put a proposition up to the local Parent-Teacher association and the newspaper whereby both organizations were to sponsor the Club and give him full co-operation. Securing their consent he made an announcement regarding the club to the junior classes. The teachers then enrolled the pupils on payment of ten cents for a three months membership. As there was one Parent-Teachers association for each school in the town the enrollment fee was presented to the respective organizations. Over five hundred members were secured in a couple of days.

The membership cards carried the children's name and addresses as well as the birth date, with the address being filed away for future mailing purposes. Through his newspaper tie-up Press arranged that the paper give a present to the kiddie or kiddies whose birthday would fall in the week preceding the Saturday matinee. Another activity was the securing of space in the paper to be devoted to a column of club news. He also promoted samples of merchandise for the kiddies from the local merchants and obtained the dealers' promises that whenever they wished to advertise a product it would be done through the kiddie club.

As we have stated before the club meets every Saturday. For an hour before starting time the kiddies sing songs, play games on the stage and listen to announcements of coming attractions. Admission to the theatre is five cents, providing the youngster is enrolled in the club.

The kiddies also have a theme song, the lyrics of which work in the Publix organization and the Parent-Teachers association. The song is sung at the opening and closing of each session. The kiddie club is going along great and Press secures loads of good-will from everyone in town. And when you can get good-will the way he's getting it, you'll never have to worry about the box office hitting a slump.

We would like to reveal at this time that Matt has just been enrolled into the club and this is his first contribution. We want to welcome him into the organization and let him know that we believe he is going to be numbered among our very active members. And listen, Matt, why not shoot us in a photo and a little dope concerning yourself so that we can give you a regular "intro".

Auto Door Hangers Proved A Good Bet For Hinman's House

With a fine showman like S. H. Hinman operating up around Medina, N. Y., it looks as though a little dust will be stirred up every now and then. For with him handling the Diana Theatre it's a cinch that things won't stand still, by a long shot.

Already Hinman has pulled a nice angle in the traffic tags he used in conjunction with his showing of "She Couldn't Say No." The cards were regular baggage tag size and one side bore copy which read: "Warning!"—You Are Violating A Very Important Law!—There Is No Reason For This And No Excuses On Other Side Will Be Permissible—This Ticket Is The Last Warning And For Your Own Good Read Reverse Side."

The other side of the card bore copy relating to the picture and playdates and also set down seven excuses, headed by copy which declared that none of the excuses would constitute a sufficient reason for staying away from the picture. Another angle Hinman uses to sell his show is a personal letter, signed by an usher. The letter sets forth the pictures coming to the house and closes with a paragraph in which the usher advances the hope that he will seat the reader often during the "All Star Festival Month."

The letters were inserted in envelopes and sealed. Ushers carried them to the residences in town and deposited them in the mail boxes thereby saving the cost of postage. Both of the gags we have set forth here went over very well with Hinman's patrons as this was the first time they had been worked in the town, and even if we do say so, we know that the town is in for a lot more treats in showmanship for the reason that when "S. H." worked with E. E. Bair in East Liverpool, Ohio, they certainly put over some fine stuff, and knowing the way "E. E." has of selling shows, anybody working with him must be good too. So hop to it "S. H." and let's have some more accounts of your work.

Hal. Kopplin Used Blotters To Plug His Cooling Plant

From the one place where they seem to need cooling plants almost all of the year 'round we receive these helpful suggestions concerning the plugging of refrigeration systems. One of Florida's live wire showmen, Harold Kopplin, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Miami, is responsible for these suggestions and since they are a subject of interest among showmen to-day who are setting their plans for the summer we decided to include them in our Anniversary Edition.

As a street ballyhoo for his cooling plant he created a display which was placed on top of a truck. The display consisted of cut-out boards made up to resemble a huge cake of ice. Cut-outs of polar bears were placed on the top with icebergs forming a background. Concealed under the icebergs were a couple of loudspeakers, one pointing to the front of the car and the other to the rear. A victrola record furnished the music and sales talk on the plant and no matter whereabouts in town the truck went it attracted plenty of attention. The gag not only served as a cooling plant plug but was also used to plug the current picture at the Capitol. We have on hand a picture of the display but unfortunately it turned out to be too dark for reproduction and anyway we don't think that a photo could have done justice to the very nice effect that was achieved in this ballyhoo.

Another angle he used to get in plugs for the cooling plant and the coming attractions may be seen in the blotter we are reproducing. The blotters were made up in attractive colors and distributed in almost every store in town. The angle of including the month's attractions on the blotter also made it of value since they were distributed in office buildings and apartment houses as well as stores and were almost a certainty to be held onto for a couple of weeks anyway. The cost of making up the blotters, we believe, was nominal and should any of the Club members care to use them to plug the cooling plants we are sure that they will be found to serve the same beneficial purpose as they proved to be to Kopplin.

We want to thank him for passing these angles along at a time when they are most needed and since he is one of Miami's real active showmen, who keeps right in front with the rest of the live-wire members of the Club located in his district we believe that we will have more accounts of him to present shortly.

J. Albertson Gives The Low-Down On House's 'Magnafilm'

Taking time off from his very busy work at the Indiana Theatre in Indiana Harbor, East Chicago, Ind., Jack Albertson favors us with a little dope on "Magna film" which we think will prove of value to his brother members in the ROUND TABLE CLUB, and for that reason we are shooting it along to you in his "own words."

"Our house," states Jack, "is a 1,220-seat house with 1,140 on the main floor and 80 in the Mezzanine with a throw from the booth to the stage of 110 feet. We formerly used a 16 x 18 ft. screen—a Daton-X Western Electric screen. We used 6-in. lenses in the booth and had a mask pulled by the stage hand for subjects that were on film, so you see we lost the size of the picture and the Movietone mask on the projector cut only the left side of the picture. That much for the former screen.

"Now, here is what we use for 'Magnafilm.' We bought an 18 x 24 ft. Sound Screen. We have a full size picture on the screen no matter if the subject is Vitaphone or Movietone. Four new Ross lenses had to be bought, one 4½-in. for Movietone and one 5-in. for Vitaphone, two of each for each projector. We have Motiograph projectors in our booth and the Motiograph factory in Chicago. They supplied adapters for to hold these lenses and each adapted has a small ring that can be adjusted by little screws on the side. We pre-focused all the lenses so that it is but a moment's time to open the thumb screw and change the lenses as you go from Vitaphone to Movietone subjects. The new Movietone mask we have cuts off the top and bottom and the left side of the picture, but still we have a full size picture on the screen as we are using the 4½-in. lens. This is a very good thing as the public don't see the mask on the stage going open and closed and have the benefit of a full picture all the time. This is also a benefit to the small house that can't afford a stage hand to pull a mask on the stage but to me there is nothing more worse to walk into a house and see a screen with a large portion of the screen black as there is a movietone feature or subject on the screen.

"It is a rather hard job to explain about 'Magnafilm,' as it is a big move in the theatre, but I hope that you have gotten the drift of what I have tried to explain.

Oak Jack, we want to thank you for the interest you have shown in writing this little article on your "Magnafilm" experience and we feel that it will more than be appreciated by the CLUB.

BACK TO THE GRIND!

With the Anniversary Edition off our chest, we can now buckle down to hard work once more with this thought constantly in mind: to improve the Club activities and pages more than ever before.

Many interesting and valuable items, received too late for use in the Anniversary Issue, or not used for lack of space, will be presented during the next few weeks, but regardless of whether your item appeared or when it will appear, we are deeply grateful for your splendid co-operation.

Many fine things have been planned for the future of the Round Table Club and if you were pleased with your organization in the past, you will be doubly pleased with what is going to happen in the future.

Just one more word before we close this little statement: If you contemplate a trip to New York this summer, be sure to drop us a line and by all means make the Club your headquarters while here. We had the opportunity of saying hello to pretty near a hundred of the boys last summer and we look forward to doubling that number this year.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

More Views Of The Work Being Turned Out By G. Shewell

Since he hasn't been represented here in a couple of weeks we feel that it is about time to pass along an account of the corking way that George Shewell, exploitation manager of the York Theatre in York, Pa., sold the town on "Happy Days" and "Magnafilm."

In the past we have reproduced a good many of his newspaper advertisements so it is small wonder now that the ad we are showing was bound to sell the town. Knowing his work as we do we feel that he has put almost everything into it that will appeal to his audiences and if you will study it carefully you will get an idea of what he is selling the picture from.

Cashing in on the Grandeur film angles (since the house has a big screen) he played up the Magnascope as "Giving the characters the breath of life." Another very profitable catch-line he has adopted, and one incidentally which a Round Table member originated is the "Something You Will Remember All Your Life Time" line. We could point out many more fine points in this ad but since we feel that you are versed in playing up highlights in your advertising it is unnecessary for us to talk further on the layout. Incidentally, it was the Magnafilm idea alone which sold the picture since the patrons are not so partial, in Shewell's houses, to screen revues. So you can see what showmanship can do whenever you display it.

Another interesting angle on his campaign for the picture comes to light in the form of a window tie-up he arranged in a local drug store. The store window sold a display of candy along with the picture lay-out and it is certainly a pleasure to pass along the story that the display was so effective the dealer sold more boxes of candy than ever before. Which again proves the value of real showmanship when properly applied.

As George is one of our very active members we know that in the future we will pass along many more accounts of his showmanlike work so we want to thank him for letting us in on this one and wish him continued success.

Louis Glinnen Is Breaking Into The Racket Quite Early

Here's another young fellow who seemed to be set in his determination to make a name for himself some day in the show business. The young man's name is Louis Glinnen and he is the assistant manager of the Olympia Theatre in Chelsea, Mass.

As this is the first time he has been in the show game, Louis has plenty to learn yet, but we think that under the able tutelage of his boss, and house manager, Herman P. Claman, he will pick up many very valuable points on the why and wherefore of show merchandising. He has one point in his favor though, he has worked at the same theatre for two years, starting there when he was sixteen years old, by doing odd jobs as reel boy, usher, relief doorman, etc.

With his installation as assistant manager he will really embark upon his show career and we are of the opinion that if he sticks to his dtermination in a little while he'll be running a house of his own and be a full fledged showman in every sense of the word. We want to congratulate him for attaining his present position so quickly and want him to know that we will be very glad to pass along any of the activities of Mr. Claman and himself. So let's have a little note from you now and then Louis, so that we can tell what's going on.

Bergmann Used A Couple Of Good Stunts On Picture

Some excellent showmanship was displayed by W. H. Bergmann, manager of the World Theatre in Kearney, Neb., as part of his merchandising for "The Lone Star Ranger."

He promoted a lot of old guns from an antique dealer in town and then arranged to display them in the window of a store located in a central part of the town. The guns were placed on a special display board and bore little explanatory notes concerning their age and type. A card in the center of the display carried copy and play dates on the picture.

As another angle to the stunt he arranged to insure the display for $2,500, through a local insurance agency. When he received the policy he put in on display alongside of the guns and this served to enhance the selling punch of the layout.

The window display attracted more than the usual amount of interest and made mighty fine advertising for the picture.

To top off the campaign in good fashion, he used a ballyhoo in the form of a street stunt. This stunt consisted of a real cowboy attired in his regular regalia riding a horse which was bannered on both sides carrying copy about the picture, theatre and playdates. The cowboy also passed out heralds to make the stunt more effective.

These few gags he used, completely sold the town on the picture and his showman judgment was more than verified when he checked up the receipts at the finish of the run. We are glad to note that Bergmann is continuing that live-wire showmanship he is so capable of doing and we want to hear from him more often. How about it "W. H."?

Assistant Managers as Members!

In order that we may dispel a wrong impression, we want all assistant theatre managers to know they are eligible for membership in the Round Table Club, PROVIDING their manager certifies as to the position they hold.

Many assistant managers have important duties in their respective theatres, such as publicity and exploitation directors, treasurers, etc. We therefore feel that their activities are many times just as important to the Club pages as the managers.

The reasons we make this one provision is that it is difficult for us to know whether an applicant who calls himself an assistant manager is really just that. We can check up on the assistants and we would rather they expressed their willingness before their assistants joined the Club.

W. J. Roesch Sold Them On His Show By Special Tie-Up

Some very clever showmanship was exhibited by W. J. Roesch, of the New Fifth Avenue Theatre in Nashville, Tenn., when he set out to sell "His First Command" to the residents of the city.

Through a tie-up with the R.O.T.C. of the Hume Fogg High School and the Nashville, Tennessean, he offered a prize of a silver loving cup to the platoon making the best showing in a drill to be held during the week. For a week before the playdate, the cup was exhibited in the window of one of the largest jewelry store in town, with a card alongside announcing the playdate and contest.

Motion pictures were taken on the day of the review and since seven hundred boy students appeared in them you can bet they were down at the theatre when the film was run off. On the night of the presentation the school band played in front of the theatre and also before and after the presentation of the loving cup, which took place on the stage. With over 1400 boy and girl students enrolled in the school, only the winning platoon, numbering fifty boys, were present as guests of the theatre, but the rest of the student body, anxious to see movies of the review and also the show, paid admission and boosted up the box office receipts considerably all during the run of the film.

In this manner plenty of interest was aroused in the theatre and loads of good-will created. The newspaper came through wonderfully and gave the stunt a good "break," both by pictures and by stories. The stunt was a complete success from a box office as well as a publicity standpoint and the efforts expended in the tie-ups were more than rewarded.

Lots Of Good-Will Secured By Ken Hoel On Free Show

One way to boost good-will in your community is to run a free show for the kiddies every now and then and it's a safe bet that the mammas and pappas are going to feel okay about it. And working on that theory Ken Hoel, manager of the Harris Theatre in Findlay, Ohio, decided to run a free kiddie show.

By looking at the photo we are showing below, you'll get an idea of what the kids thought of the stunt. Some of them were at the theatre hours before the house opening. In order to give them a treat that they would remember for a long time Hoel made a tie-up with a local candy company whereby the manufacturer agreed to donate a bar of candy to every child at the theatre, and in addition, to give away a pair of skates to a boy and a girl.

To make the town sit up and take notice of his house, Hoel had the kids parade about the street for a block or two before entering the theatre. A couple of the kids carried banners announcing that the crowd was attending a free show at the theatre and also got in a plug for the candy bar. Hoel's stunt did wonders towards building up more good-will in the town and though his box office didn't show much with the special show, he more than made it up in good-will.

Okay Ken, we're glad to hear from you again.

Browning Clicked Again With These ShowmanlikeStunts

Speed is often essential to the laying out of show merchandising campaigns. This is due to the many "productions" being turned out daily and opportunities for showmanship they offer. So here's why "Tod" Browning of the Metropolitan in Boston, Mass., is a "hustler."

To again give you some idea of the way he works we are going to show you how many valuable tie-ups he engineered in the short space of two weeks. When he played "Ladies Love Brutes" he tied-up with one of the local newspapers and promoted a contest in the sheet. A picture of Bancroft was run daily, showing him in different poses from various pictures.

The contestants were supposed to guess the names of the pictures he played in and write a short essay on which they thought his best picture was. The stunt went over big with the residents of the city and the thousands of replies that came in more than showed the value of it.

On "The Vagabond King" he promoted a number of tie-ups from various stores and beauty parlors. The beauty parlor owners were allowed to conduct stands in the Met. lobby and the patrons were invited to witness free demonstrations on beauty culture. The stunt did a lot towards boosting good-will for the house and a lot of valuable publicity was received. Some free newspaper space was obtained by inserting notice of the demonstration and the picture in the ads run by the dealers.

The photo we are showing in conjunction with this article shows another phase of "Tod's" activity in which he cashed in on lots of free space by offering free tickets to the theatre to all persons guessing the winner of the recent Boston Marathon. The newspapers alloted his plan space on the sport pages and he followed this angle up by having a cameraman take shots of the race which were projected at the theatre a couple of hours later.

By offering scholarships totaling five hundred dollars, he was enabled to tie-up almost every school in Boston on a drawing contest. The scholarships were awarded for the five best drawings, showing actual scenes from pictures at the Metropolitan, for four consecutive weeks. The pictures were all to carry the title star and theatre plug in them. The gag went over like wildfire and reams and reams of good-will rolled into the Met. After securing the photos they were put on display in the lobby and this angle enabled the house to drag in a little more additional box-office in the form of relations of the artists, who had come to see their prodigies' work.

If time and space would permit we could make up a couple of more pages concerning "Tod's" work and even then that wouldn't be enough. But since this edition must, of necessity, be carefully limited as to space, we'll have to tell you more about the work turned out at the Met. in the near future.

R. Van Hook Joins And Boosts Our Arkansas Line-Up

At this time we would like to introduce to you a showman from the state of Arkansas, in the person of R. W. Van Hook, manager of the Rialto Theatre in Morrilton.

As his first contribution, we have on hand a copy of his house organ and an ad that he used for "Sunny Side Up." We want to say, before going any further ahead with this article, that he certainly did turn out a good piece of work in the half page co-operative ad he used on the picture. The local merchants bought space on the page and tied-in the title of the picture with the merchandise they were selling. And incidentally, it's not so easy, when you're located in a small town to make up ads of this sort and it is for just that reason we think Van Hook deserves a compliment.

His house organ, too, is nicely made-up and no doubt does a lot to sell his shows to the townspeople. It has only one page, made up in miniature tabloid size, but it carries everything he is trying to convey. Since he knows his patronage very well, it is safe to assert that they pay a lot of attention to the program. This angle is one of the best used by Van Hook to obtain a more or less "personal" contact.

We want to welcome this showman into the Club and we feel sure that from time to time more will be heard of him concerning the way he sells his shows at the Rialto. Let's hear from you, "R. W." and why not shoot us in a little "dope" about yourself, and a photograph too.

JACK STEWART Says:

"A word about the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB in the NEWS. This section is the most inspiring piece of showmanship ever conceived by a trade journal; it teems with ideas for exploitation, and I am sure that the Managers everywhere are most grateful to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for their constructive enterprise and foresight in giving them this key to increased box-office receipts."

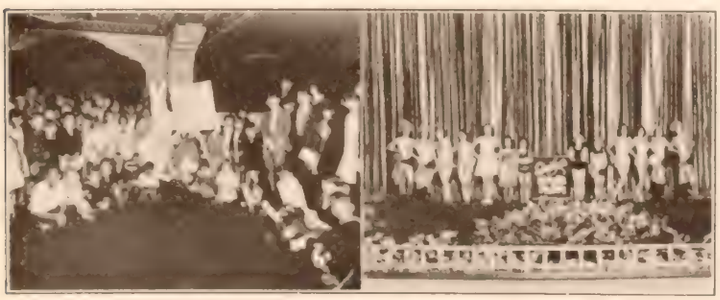
MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB



Weiss-Perlberg Inc. Of Florida Still Putting Them Over

Of course, in this number, we couldn't forget the famous Weiss-Perlberg team of the Florida Theatre in Jacksonville, Fla., for without the beaming face of Jonas Perlberg, publicity hound of the house, there'd be no life in this story. Just so that you may not waste any too much sympathy on Jonas (though he is a hard worker) we are giving you an idea of how he poses for the sake of publicity and in the photo we are showing you can readily see that he has put in a hard day's work as he is supported by a couple of young ladies. What a guy!

But to get down to real business and tell you what Weiss and Perlberg are doing to put their shows across it will be necessary to explain the two photos being run with this article. They show part of the kiddie party that was sponsored by one of the largest department stores in town about Easter time. The store paid for all of the advertising on the contest and they did plenty, putting readers in their regular department store ads, running special boxes and making special displays. During their shoppers broadcast which was made every morning, they plugged the special show. Talent was recruited from among the local youngsters to make up the stage part of the program. A lot of advance publicity was secured by special one sheet cards placed in all the windows of the store. Thousands of tickets were printed and distributed free to children calling at the store with their parents. On the day of the show, egg rolling contests and a parade was held and the kids were also treated to candy and novelties. The whole campaign was well planned and executed and the house and the department store came in for a lot of publicity and good will.

Some fine work was turned out by the "incorporation" on recent pictures and as usual their record for street ballyhooing remains unbroken. On "Ladies Love Brutes" a man was engaged to parade about the streets dressed in a costume, one half of which was comprised of evening dress and the other half, a laborer's clothes. A sign on the man's back read "Girls, which do you prefer?" "Ladies Love Brutes." As usual the whole town was set to laughing at the grotesque appearance of the man and it seems to us that whenever the team uses a street ballyhoo of this sort it always clicks with the residents of Jacksonville. Another stunt that met with great favor was the tie-up arranged with a bath room fixture concern for "Puttin' On the Ritz." The company sent out ten thousand attractive heralds plugging the picture and announcing the display of the colored bath fixtures which were placed in the Florida lobby. To lend an atmospheric effect to the scene, a young lady was engaged to sit at a dressing table. Through the tie-up fifty window displays were secured by Weiss-Perlberg and this, coupled with the display in the lobby did a lot towards selling the picture.

Before signing off this article we'd like to hand the boys a compliment for the nice house organ they got out on the third anniversary. The sheet was made up in the form of a tabloid and carried many items of interest to the patrons of the house. We want to thank the famed team for the interest they have shown in the Club ever since they joined our organization and we feel sure that the future will bring forth many more suggestions which we can pass along to the other members of the Club.

"BUDDY'S" ORGAN SPECIALTY!

As presented by "Buddy" Webber of the Capitol Theatre in Miami, Fla., an organ specialty takes on the form of a special holiday. His solos have become the rage around the Capitol and "Buddy" is besieged by requests for numbers. Proving the popularity of organ solos. How does he do it? The answer is simple. Novelty plus.

As his first offering at the theatre, "Buddy" featured his now famous "Singin' in the Bathtub" number, where, garbed in a semi-bathing suit and seated in a tin bathtub, he rendered a solo that delighted the hearts of the audience. In fact, it lifted them from their seats. (So inquisitive were they to see whether Buddy had on a bathing suit.)

His latest offerings at the Capitol are "Why Can't You Love That Way?' in which he poked a lot of good fun at the local celebrities, and for the last half of the week featured "Bug House Blues," in which the lines "When I asked the keeper how he ever got a collection of nuts like those, he said he collected all that didn't sing with the organ in movie shows." And that line pepped them up and made them sing.

No question about it. You can't beat a cleverly prepared organ solo and if you've an organ in your house and you're not using it, why you're just letting a good bet go to waste. A solo peps up your audience and gets them in a good mood for the program following. So grab a piece of cheese cloth and start wiping the dust off the organ. Give your organist a hand and help him arrange novelty numbers and don't be afraid to plug them either.

Murdock Cashed In On Every Angle By Merchant Tie-Up

Whenever it comes to plugging his house plenty at no cost to the theatre you can trust J. E. Murdock, manager of the Rowland Theatre in Wilkinsburg, Pa., to be right on tap.

One of the local dealers in produce and groceries, the largest store in town incidentally, has a mailing list of five thousand names which they use to send a special weekly circular informing the patrons of the bargains to be had. Murdock tied in with the store and persuaded them to run his weekly program along with the circular.

For doing this, the store received two hundred passes good for one admission apiece at any matinee. A note was inserted in the herald informing the patrons that the passes would be included every week and that perhaps they would be lucky enough to win one. This gag clicked wonderfully with the residents of the town.

Another thing that he is promoting in the town is a community drive in association with the Chamber of Commerce and the Business Men's Organization and though we haven't the full and complete details on hand just now we expect to very soon pass along the entire campaign. To date, Murdock has promoted over a thousand dollars worth of merchandise which will be awarded during the drive.

Oak "J. E.," we are looking forward to the rest of the dope and since we know the kind of showmanlike work you turn out, we feel that it will contain many interesting angles for us to pass along to the rest of the Club.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

A "SCOTCH MATINEE"—?

Take a tip from a couple of live-wire showmen in Great Bend, Kansas. When they played "Free and Easy," they innovated a "Scotch Day Matinee" in conjunction with the picture. The gag consisted of REDUCING THE RATES and the publicity and good-will derived from the stunt more than paid up for the matinee.

Here's a chance for you to do the same thing. You don't have to wait for a special picture. Pull it on anyone! And instead of a matinee you could run it for a whole day. Give it a week's advance plugging and you'll have them talking for months after. Arrange some novelties. Tie up with your local newspaper and give passes for the best Scotch jokes. Place funny signs about your lobby tying in the Scotch Day Matinee. Copy on the cards could read: "STANDING ROOM ONLY—FOR THOSE WHO DON'T WISH TO WEAR OUT THEIR CLOTHES BY SITTING DOWN," "WANTED TO MARRY—A MAN NAMED BROWN SO THAT I CAN USE MY FIRST HUSBAND'S SILVERWARE—(Signed) MRS. ANGUS BROWN" and gags of like nature.

You can have a lot of fun with a stunt of this sort and also help your stock of good-will in your town. Pick out a day when business is not so "hot" and then "shoot the works." The only thing to remember is that a lot depends on your advance campaign and the more novelty you inject into it the better it will go across.

Showmanship Is On Display When Paul Kunze Starts Work

When we receive examples of showmanship of the sort turned out by Paul W. Kunze, manager of the State Theatre in Stoughton, Mass., it stands to reason that we are going to use them for nothing more or less than the Anniversary Edition, so if Paul hasn't already guessed our intention, and is wondering why his fine stuff didn't appear on the pages we forthwith offer the solution.

With such a raft of his material on hand we hardly know how to begin, but since all of our members are showing a great deal of interest in boosting their kiddie business we'll try to tell you what Paul is doing to swell his box-office receipts on Saturday. As his first move, he founded a State Theatre Kiddie Club, the idea for which, he frankly tells us, was secured for the Round Table pages.

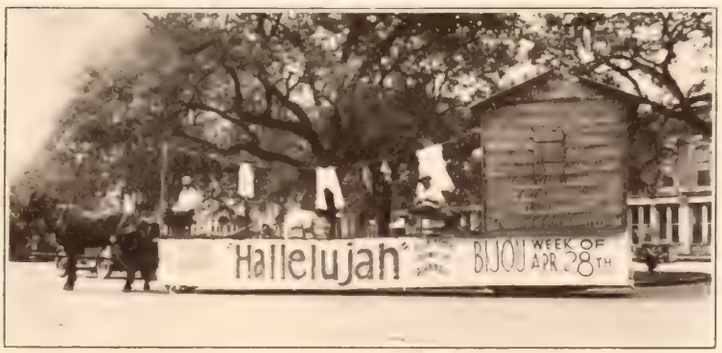
He has added a touch of novelty to the gag by having a young lady, called by the youngsters "Big Sister," chaperone the kids. The girl meets them at a booth in the foyer and listens to their stories as well as accepting new members and issuing a membership card and pin. Occasionally free gifts are given to the members. The gifts are promoted from the local merchants. Every Saturday matinee the kids sing songs, play games and listen to little talks by the girl or Kunze. The parents like the idea of the Club, especially having the girl in charge, as it gives them assurance that their kids are under expert supervision.

To boost his stock with the local schools and also the parents, Kunze arranged to conduct a spelling bee on Saturday afternoons on the stage of the theatre. The contest was run for five consecutive weeks. Each week the school teachers, in classes, ran a preliminary contest and the winners were privileged to compete on the stage of the theatre. Between twenty and thirty kids took part weekly. A silver loving cup was donated as first prize. Kunze displayed some fine showmanship in having a local radio personality conduct the bee. The radio star, Bob Emery, had been doing the same stunt over the air and had become very popular with the youngsters of the town. During the week he plugged the theatre's bee over the air and some valuable publicity was received gratis. The stunt went over very well and the house secured plenty of good-will and added business from schools and parents.

In the photo we are showing of the window display for "Rio Rita" you will get an idea of how he uses showmanship at all times. The store is located in the center of the town and loads of people pass the windows daily. The owner had been unable to lease the place, so Kunze promoted the use of the windows until such time as the owner should lease them. All he pays is two dollars weekly phone and electric lights. For the "Rita" gag he had two girls call every number in the phone book and inform the residents about the picture. Whenever the girls were not phoning, a radio was used to draw attention to the window display. The phone gag is used about once a month by Kunze and the display is changed weekly. Occasionally a girl is used to stand in front of the store and hand out heralds. The interior of the store is made up to resemble a drawing room, with props from the theatre being used as furniture. The idea has proven of great value and Kunze knows that he has found one sure method of plugging and selling his shows.

In his lobby the theme songs from the coming attractions are plugged by his organist. A piano was promoted from a local dealer for this purpose and the only cost was a credit line to the dealer. Through a tie-up with a local bank he arranged a very profitable stunt on "Happy Days." The bank agreed to feature a "Pot O'Copper" in the window. The gag, of course, was a large pot of pennies. Persons were invited to guess the amount in the pot and submit their guess to the bank. As awards three bank books for five, three and two dollars were given. The bank paid for the distribution of heralds and blanks and also tied the angle in their ad, along with a "Happy Days" plug. The local newspaper also gave it some publicity stories. And, talking about the newspapers, Kunze has found that it helps to boost his stock considerably by offering, every once in a while, twenty-five passes to the paper. The paper inserts the names of local residents in all of the ads and in this manner the advertisers are assured of their ads being read, the paper comes in for good-will and Kunze comes in for good-will and publicity. So what could be sweeter?

At Easter Time, as a good-will plug, he sent out over 100 telegrams to regular patrons. The stunt helped a lot, as nearly every one who had received one stopped in to thank him. A similar angle was used to plug "Anna Christie," only many more telegrams were sent out. When the "Lost Zeppelin" played the house he made a tie-up with the Life Saver Corp. and distributed samples of the confection, in pay envelopes plugging the picture. As an added business booster he gave away a radio that he promoted from a local dealer, and put the campaign across to good results and a minimum of cost, as the dealer paid for the printing of coupons, and newspaper space. Incidentally, Kunze is now working on a proposition to give away an automobile and in a little while we expect to pass along the complete details to you.



We could probably go on and use a couple of more pages for his work, but since space in this issue is rather limited we have tried to pick out the ideas we believe would be most useful to his fellow Club members, and since Paul is one of our very active members we will present many more of his live-wire stunts in future issues.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Earl N. Willey Had A Trick One To Exploit In This

Ticklish propositions are often encountered by showmen and it's for the purpose of showing you how they get over them that we are passing along the work of Earl N. Willey, manager of the Bijou Theatre in Savannah, Georgia, on "Hallelujah."

The picture, since it boasts an all-colored cast was rather a risky venture to be shown down in the "old south" but Willey felt that his showmanship was equal to the occasion. As a result he opened up his campaign with newspaper ads which read, "Hallelujah (big type)—A simple story of the plantation darky of the old south (small type)." He followed this up by inviting the local press, the mayor, and a group of civic heads to witness a preview showing. This proved to be a master stroke as the press broke the next day with recommendations from everyone present, and the testimonials were certainly put to good use.

He followed up his newspaper publicity with the street ballyhoo we are showing with this article. The cabin was built, as you note, on a scenery truck, thirty feet long. On the floor of the truck plows, hoes and spades were placed. A negro sitting on a stool strummed a banjo and sang songs from the picture. A live goat was also pressed into service to lend an added touch of atmosphere to the display. The truck was sent through the streets a couple of days before opening and in addition was parked, night and day, in front of the theatre, during the run of the picture, with a negro quartet being added to lend more life to it.

The ballyhoo and the newspaper publicity proved very valuable to the success of the picture and persons were calling up reserving seats for the special midnight showing which took place at 12:01 on Sunday. We want to compliment Willey for the showmanlike way he handled his campaign and were very glad to include this in our anniversary section as we feel that it more than merits passing along to the rest of the Club in order that they may see what the Southern showmen are accomplishing.

What The Southern Showmen are Doing About Organ Solos

We've given you so many accounts of Stewart Tucker's work that by this time it must seem to you as though he never gets to sleep. At least that's the way it appears to us, as most of his fellow members know, Stewart is the manager of the Byrd Theatre in Richmond, Va.

At this time we are going to set forth a few of his recent activities, just so that the rest of the Club might know what he is doing to sell his shows, and since we know there's more to handling a house than just exploiting and publicizing, this little article will mostly concern the organist Steward engaged to give his patrons a little "rest" from an all-talking program.

The Bryd Theatre boasts the largest organ in the South, a four manual Wurlitzer, so it was rather unfortunate that it be covered up when sound came in. Taking a little tip from the Round Table pages (pardon the bow) Steward decided that there was no reason why dust should collect on the beautiful instrument, so he engaged Karl Bonawitz as guest organist and set to work to wake up the town.

Many specialities were arranged by him and the guest organist and the novelty songs, lighting effects and solos, after the first recital, had the town sitting up and taking notice. The engagement was a complete success and Stewart found that when it comes to handing the audience something different in these days of "talkies," the organ is just as good as ever.

To get away from the organ angle now, since we have shown you what a help it can be to you providing you wish to make it so, we want to tell you about a little stunt he engineered in his lobby that created a lot of talk and landed the house in the newspapers. The lobby featured a large aquarium, filled with fish, and people used to stand there almost by the hour watching them swim around. To liven interest even more than usual, Stewart sent to Florida for a number of small alligators. The 'gators were deposited in the aquarium, from which the fish had been removed, and what a sensation they created. The tank was crowded from morning till night with lookers-on. And just to show you what happened, when the alligators began to multiply, the papers ran a story and a picture on the event that gave the house an "ace" publicity break

These few activities which we have set forth form but a small part of Stewart's work and since space will not permit us, at this time to set down more, we'll have to hold off until a future date.

RITZ PATTER

By ADOLPH PINCUS

Manager Ritz Theatre, Lyndhurst, N. J.

This is the first of a series of humorous "chats" used by Pincus in his theatre's program. If they appeal to you, go ahead and use them with his compliments.

Why is it—a young girl will go to the theatre with her sheik to see some particular picture that she has been waiting for and then spend her evening wrapped up in the bozo's arms—having her neck partially broken—while listening to a lot of mush and boloney that he has told some other girl the night before—and when she goes home she will tell her folks that everything was just G-R-a-a-n-D.

* * * *

There must be a new thrill in having the ribs crushed synchronized with music and effects—one girl received so much embracing through a five-reel feature that she had to have her face lifted three times before she regained her former appearance—just imagine if it had been twelve reels.

* * * *

The funny part of it all is, they forget that they are being observed by the patrons who go to the theatre to be entertained and to be forced to watch a wrestling match—wonder what the parents of the girl would say if they saw their offspring being strangled through the comedy—bet her father would kick her escort in the news and trailers.

When the usher flashes his searchlight in the faces of the spooners to call their attention to the scene they are creating, some of the excuses they offer are really humorous—some will say that they paid their admission—one fellow said his girl felt chilly—but the ace of them all is, it was the fault of the picture that was showing, the name being "She Couldn't Say No."

Oh, well, love will find its way, but old boy Cupid would be doing a wonderful thing if he would find a better place for love other than an aisle seat in a theatre—if the boys and girls must neck and be seen, why not pick out a more fitting place such as Grand Central Station or the Yankee Stadium.

Here's A Line Or Two On The Career Of A. R. Nininger

We have been trying so long to secure some dope on the past career of A. R. Nininger, of the Fort Lauderdale Theatres in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., that Sherlock Holmes was an amateur compared with our sleuthing. But imagine after we had made a lot of inquiries and what not Mr. Nininger himself gives us the low-down. So here goes.

As we told you before he is a veteran showman, but now we would like you to know that he has been in the game over thirty years. He spent his first fourteen years as an actor in dramatic shows, vaudeville sketches and opera, graduating from the thespian class to that of director and manager.

Feeling that he needed some Texas air (before Florida, of course) he entered the picture business in El Paso and sold films there for a while, handling distribution for the Southern states. From there he went into the managerial end of the business and ran houses in Texas and Georgia, until he located in Florida. He worked for four years as manager of the Publix house in Ocala and then shifted over with the Sparks theatres at his present position, where he has been for the past two years.

And we don't have to go on any further at this point to tell you what he is accomplishing at the Fort Lauderdale houses since his name has been represented on our pages before. However "A. R.," we look toward hearing from you real soon so that we can tell what you are doing to bring in summer business down there, or perhaps let us know what methods you used to bring in big business on your winter campaigns.

Fashion Show Put Across By Hiehle Had Them Talking

It's been quite a while now since we last gave you an account of Ed. Hiehle's work, but we are happy to state at this time that Ed. has been busy knocking them dead with his spring fashion revue which he put on at the Midland Theatre in Newark, Ohio.

He rang in about five local merchants who furnished everything from models to wearing apparel. He also promoted a full page ad in the local newspaper plugging the stunts. And to show you what an effective ad it was we are reproducing it here. To give the men a break he arranged to feature the latest in haberdashery as well as feminine attire and this angle met with immediate favor.

As a measure of goodwill and also as a means of putting across one of the biggest style shows ever seen in Newark, he secured the co-operation of a local dancing school and arranged to present the pupils in conjunction with the revue. This showmanlike move on Ed's part resulted of course in the mothers, fathers, relatives, etc., of the children being present at the theatre. The entire billing was presented in the newspaper ad, with the names of the children and participants in the revue being published. And say the paper didn't like this! Ed got a vote of thanks from them because all of the fond mothers and fathers were buying the papers to save the offspring's name for future years.

The result of the fashion show, after the three nights it was run, was very gratifying, and the work Ed put into it was more than shown in the box office receipts. Besides plugging the Fashion Revue, he also put in a few plugs for his cooling plant and the new wide screen the theatre installed for the purpose of "effects" on the big productions and since we explained his methods of plugging his cooling plant not so long ago we won't repeat it. But we would like to say, or rather, remind you, that if you haven't started to plug your cooling plant, it's about time you started, because first thing you know summer will be right here and then where will your patrons be?

Dangerous Paradise Was Engineered To Big B. O. Receipts

An excellent campaign was put over recently at the Royal Theatre in Kansas City, Mo., for the showing of "Dangerous Paradise."

The live-wire showmen handling the campaign certainly tossed out some excellent angles. One of the tie-ups with a local newspaper enabled the house to come in for a lot of publicity. An ad was inserted in the classified section which announced that all red heads appearing at the box office of the theatre at a certain time were entitled to see the show free. The stunt met with immediate approval from the titian-haired beauties of Kansas City.

From the photos we are showing with this article you can see what nice work was done on the campaign in the way of window and lobby displays. In the first photo of the layout you see a tie-up made with one of the leading stores in town who agreed to feature a "Paradise Sundae" at the fountain. The middle one shows an advance plug with the catchline "Sweetie Goes In For South Sea Lovin'" standing out like nobody's business. While on the bottom the picture shows the selling layout arranged for a display of flowers and drapes sold by the department store.

Besides this, all of the restaurant and soda fountain menus in town were rubber stamped and special invitations were sent to all persons named Carroll. The front of the theatre was very effectively done up in a tropical atmosphere as the photo we are running shows. The large cut-out in the center drew a great deal of comment from passersby and attracted plenty of interest. To give the picture a good send-off a special week called "All Star Appreciation Week" was innovated. With a campaign so well planned and executed as was this one we believe that we don't have to say that it went over, as anyone having read this far knows it.

SUMMER B. O. SLANTS!

IT CAN BE DONE!

By BOLIVAR HYDE, Jr.
Lakeland, Fla.

GO OUT AFTER IT!

Of course, in setting forth these few stunts for summer business building suggestions, we have been hampered, due to lack of time and space, from covering all of the angles we would like to touch upon. But since you have often used these gags, you should know how to handle them and our only object in passing them along is to sort of brush up your memory, as we feel that when you lay out your campaign all of the other ideas that go with these things will be taken advantage of.

Don't Delay!

With summer almost upon us, it is time to take drastic measures to keep them coming up to the box-office. Bearing this in mind, we have secured, through the courtesy of Bolivar Hyde, Jr., manager of the Polk Theatre in Lakeland, Florida, a number of summer suggestions, which have been tried and proven by him and that we are passing along in the event that you too may find them practical in boosting up your summer business.

From Bolivar's list we selected four, which we believed would appeal most to Club members. The four are, namely, Revival Week, Bathing Beauty Revue, Mammoth Fashion Show, and Independence Week.

Revival Week!

Revival Nights are clicking all over the country. If you think your patrons can stand a week of revivals give it to them. Find their views on the subject first. Send out special cards through your mailing list requesting that they vote on it.

Here are a few pictures that might be revived to big business! Look them over and give them careful consideration. Valentino's Pictures should have them fighting to get in!

FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE
THE HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME
THE BIRTH OF A NATION
THE COVERED WAGON
WHAT PRICE GLORY
THE BIG PARADE
THE GOLD RUSH
WAY DOWN EAST
OLD IRONSIDES
THE SEA HAWK
BEAU GESTE
THE SHEIK

Advertise them as being shown WITH SOUND! Your Non-Sync Operator can take care of this.

In making up this list we have avoided listing pictures where the costumes would appear grotesque, on account of changing modes. The pictures of Wallace Reid would be good draws, but it wouldn't be wise to select them, because most of them were "straights." The style in men's and women's clothes, automobiles, etc., have changed so much that it would be poor judgment to show them.

In addition to your feature it might be well to try and procure a couple of old comedies of Charlie Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, Ham and Bud, Lloyd Hamilton, etc. By plugging these along with your feature we believe that it will pep up the show a good deal and also make it a real "Revival Week."

Bathing Beauties!

The "Bathing Beauty Revue" is one that always seems to come out a winner. Don't have a stage full of girls in bathing suits. Make a real show out of it. Arrange some musical numbers and dances. Promote the aid of one of your local bands and have them come up on the stage. Make a Broadway show out of it at practically no cost at all. Have a master of ceremonies.

The theatre can give gold as first, second and third awards. Possibly through the co-operation of the local merchants a bigger award, such as a trip to Havana, can be made. Talk to them and see whether you can interest them in the idea. Urge the dealers or jobbers who co-operate with you to carry newspaper advertising on their product and mention the contest at the theatre. Help them arrange striking window displays and don't be afraid to supply them with beautiful cut-outs. And if possible a couple of girls to pose for a short time every day. Use a card in the window to plug the time. A department store is your best bet for a thing of this sort.

A Beauty Parade!

Try to arrange a beauty parade. Tie-up with a local auto agency and have them furnish cars to transport the entries about the town and use plenty of banners to plug the day of the finals. Endeavor to interest your newspaper in running a ballot. Have the newspaper sponsor the revue and call it "The Daily Blah-Blank Theatre Bathing Beauty Revue." As this will help boost circulation for the newspaper, they should be easily persuaded, for the voters would have to buy the paper in order to clip the ballots. Have all the ballots deposited in a ballot box within your theatre.

Your Mammoth Fashion Show is another good number. But don't put it on right after a Bathing Beauty Revue. Wait a little while until the excitement from the revue simmers down and then shoot with this. Run it on the same elaborate scale as the Beauty Revue. And instead of concentrating on the women's fashions give the men a break too. Men nowadays are interested, almost as much as women, in the correct thing to wear.

Make every effort with your local newspaper to get their co-operation on this. Have them put out a special supplement a day or two before the Show opens—or on the opening day. They should be glad to work with you on this as it means more money for them. And it's for the same reason that your local merchants will advertise their products in the lay-out. The supplement should contain plenty of Fashion Articles and Illustrations.

Permit your local merchants to work with you in the staging of the show. You supervise and try to work out their ideas. Decide how much time can be allotted to a revue and then assign each merchant so much. Let each dealer select his own models and work out his own particular bit of the revue. These various bits can then be incorporated to form the complete show.

Independence Week!

And now for your Fourth of July special "Independence Week." Here's one, if properly handled, you can cash in plenty on. You can work in plenty of tie-ups for this. You might even be able to stage a parade. Approach your local Chamber of Commerce, War Veterans, Boy Scout Leaders, etc., on this subject. As a special feature for the week you might also book the American Legion Band or Drill Team. Use Red, White and Blue Decorations for your front. In your lobby try to arrange a display of small cannons and other Revolutionary Period Exhibits.

You could tie-up with your local newspaper and arrange to run a series of drawings to be colored by contestants. Award free passes during the week. Run an essay contest on any subject touching upon the Declaration of Independence.

Tie-up with your local library and secure a lot of books, of Revolutionary times and put the illustrations in the books on display. Canvass your town and try to get pictures depicting Revolutionary scenes. Put them in your lobby. If you are fortunate enough in these days of talkies to possess a stage you could arrange a little tableau with locals taking part in it.

On your presentation of the feature don't forget to use red, white and blue effects. Keep the red, white and blue tone in all of your display work. If you are using an organist have him play a couple of stirring march tunes. For your kiddie matinees you might be able to give away fake firecrackers which contain candy. You could also print up a lot of tickets and arrange to award a load of fireworks to some lucky kid.

The exchanges will probably have some interesting shorts especially suitable for use on a program of this sort. Secure a one or two-reeler and don't be afraid to try to inject a few special effects into it. Try to make your program as timely as possible without overdoing it.

Thanks, Bolivar!

For your kindness in getting this material together for us so that we could pass it along to your fellow members in the Managers' Round Table Club and we feel sure that they appreciate your efforts to help them with their summer business as much as we do.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

"LAFF-O'-THE-WEEK"

It's been the case, in the past, to do a lot of good-natured kidding on the way persons confuse the name of picture titles, but it remained for Adolph Pincus to get a corker.

He was standing in the foyer of the house one evening when one of his regular patrons, an Italian, came up and started to talk about the pictures. After a couple of minutes, the patron came out with this, "And you knowa that talking-singing pitch you hadda last week that was a bootaful pitch."

"What picture do you mean?" inquired Pincus.

AND THEN—touching his fingers to his lips in the approved fashion and blowing a kiss into thin air, the Italian breathed, "THE SUICIDE UP!"

Resnick's Program Is Made Up In An Interesting Form

This little story is intended to introduce A. D. Resnick to the Club. Not that Resnick is a new member. Far from that. But in the past we have presented many accounts of his live-wire work at the Hamilton Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa., and we never had a photograph of him to pass along to the Club, but now we stand ready to remedy that deficiency.

The photo accompanying this article will serve to present Resnick and if you look closely you will notice our famous certificate occupying a prominent place on the wall of his office. And in his hand is the "Voice of Showland," the one and only M. P. News.

Those members of the Club who file away their weekly copies of our pages (and who don't) will remember the Fashion Show he put over recently and many other activities which have characterized him as one of the showman leaders in Philadelphia. We have often shown samples of the house organ turned out by Resnick and this time we are reproducing the back page of one of his recent programs in which he uses a gag that he believes the rest of the Club would like to look at.

The story "The Fable of the Palooka Who Gave Not Wisely But Well," Resnick admits was picked up somewheres by him because of the fact that it looked good to tie into an institutional plug for the house. In order that you may pass judgment on it we are reprinting it here:

THE FABLE OF THE PALOOKA WHO GAVE NOT WISELY BUT WELL

Once upon a time there was a big-hearted guy who believed that it is more blessed to give than to receive at Christmas time. So he gave and gave and gave and then he gave some more and by the time he got through remembering Aunt Exzema and Uncle Ethelbert and Cousin Penurious on his wife's side and all the little nephews and nieces on all sides, he felt like he was still holding City Service at 68 and the left side of a nickel looked like a life-sized image of a buffalo to him. So instead of hiring himself a twelfth-story window to jump out of, as is the custom these days, this palooka calls a conference of friend wife and the family and delivers himself of the following, to wit:

Look! He's a Santa Claus

You made me what I am today, I hope you're satisfied. I'm flat, broke and busted. I've been a good Santa Claus and you'll admit I've done well by my frau and progeny (which is lower Scandinavian for domestic gold diggers), and in return I have but one request to make: In the past it has been our custom to go downtown for our movie entertainment, paying 75 cents a head plus a tax for parking the wagon, plus the loss of two hours going and coming, plus the wear and tear on our patience, jostling through crowds and standing in line. From now on we go to the Hamilton Theatre, which is just around the corner and which you'll agree is as nice and as comfy a little show house as there is in this neck of the woods.

Their admission price is 25 cents for us grown-ups and 15 cents for little Languid over there and all his little brothers and sisters.

'Bob' Hutchins Had A Novelty Herald That Clicked Great

Some excellent samples of showmanlike work have drifted into Club headquarters from small town showmen (by this we mean "big time" showmen located in small towns, for all showmen are "big time" else they wouldn't be showmen). And to more forcibly illustrate the point we are going to tell you about R. D. "Bob" Hutchings and the work he does out at the Portage Theatre in Portage, Wisconsin.

On "The Green Goddess," he turned out a very nice herald that did a lot to sell the picture to the town. In fact we thought that this stunt was so good that we are reproducing it here in case you should care to use it as the idea may be put into use on any picture at all. The herald, in the cut, measured eight by ten inches and was printed in black on light violet paper. By studying the copy you will get what he is conveying under the head "Free Theatre Tickets," but in case you don't get the full import of the gag, it is simply that a head of Arliss has been cut in half. The holder of the herald on presentation of the completed head, which he could secure by finding another herald showing the right side was entitled to free admission in the theatre.

This stunt went over big in the town and the kids and grown-ups were chasing around trying to match their heralds, and in this manner the picture secured some excellent publicity. We would like to state that this is a very effective angle if you are looking for a little novelty in your campaign and remember it can be used on any picture.

Another angle that Bob puts to good use is his house organ. The program is printed in attractive colors on good stock paper and is well made up with scene mats and advertising slugs. The program is paid for by the local merchants who carry small ads on all four pages. This angle has been found to be very profitable for showmen located in small towns as it keeps the house's nut down low through the elimination of printing costs.

We want to thank Bob for keeping us posted on the way he sells his shows out there in Portage and we know he is going to continue the active interest he has shown ever since he first became a member of this organization.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

This Cuckoo Ad On "Cuckoos" Not As Nuts As It Looks

There's a rather broad statement in this ad that we'd like to have the rest of the Club look over. The occasion for all the hilarity in the layout is the arrival of "The Cuckoos" at the RKO Orpheum Theatre in Los Angeles, Calif., and the showman manager of the house seems determined that the public be sold plenty on the picture.

To that extent he has included a little box in the lower left of the ad which reads, "By the Way—If there is not a thousand laughs in 'The Cuckoos' you CAN KICK THE NEAREST USHER IN THE SHINS!" Now, we ask you, is that nice?

From what we understand, every usher in the house threatened to strike. But then, since when have the ushers understood the urge that makes a showman frame statements of the sort we are touching upon.

We know of a certain showman in the Middle West, called the Sid Grauman of Kansas City (got his name yet?) who thinks so much of his profession that he dresses himself according to the atmosphere of the picture, for instance, in a Western it's a cowboy uniform, for a South Sea island picture he's a native and for a North Pole picture, he's an Eskimo pie. Wait'll he plays "The Cuckoos"—what a bird he'll be! But to get back to this ad. To say that it's oke, is alright. It's a fine ad and it sells. But what makes it sell? The copy. And here's the lines: "A daffydill riot." "A thousand dames to go wild over." "A juggernaut of Joy—Not a Revue."

In all of the copy you have something of value. As silly as it seems, it nevertheless is serious stuff. It is a book in itself. You learn that Wheeler and Woolsey slayed them in "Rio Rita." That "The Cuckoos" is not a revue. That it's funny. It possesses good song hits, dancing and magnificence of settings. And that's the reason why this ad is good. We don't know what the ushers think about it, in fact as far as "The Cuckoos" party goes they will probably claim that they'll tire of the "shin-dig" early.

Police Reserves Had To Help Bob Soffer On This One

We might term this story "From Musical Director to Manager," the way Bob Soffer, manager of the Hollywood Theatre in New York City hands it to us, but since space will not permit us to reprint his entire letter we shall endeavor to pick out the highlights of his wide and varied career in the industry and in that way present him to the Club.

Soffer has been in the show game since the age of fourteen. He started to work for the Stanley Company in their first N. Y. Theatre "The North Star." He attended high school in the afternoon and in the evenings did ushering, billposting, rewinding reels and relieved the piano player. Jules Aaronson was the manager of the house at that time and he started Soffer off on his showman career.

At the age of nineteen he went to work for George Rotsky in Montreal, one of the outstanding showmen in the business at that time. Soffer worked with him for quite some time studying his showman methods and he states: "I will say I've never come across a man who was able to tie-up an entire city exploiting a picture the way Rotsky did." Rotsky pulled off a campaign on "Mickey" that had Montreal talking from morning to night.

After four years in Canada, he returned to New York and became an organist, working under the well known and then rapidly rising Hugo Riesenfeld. He was the youngest organist ever to work for the noted musician. He also studied Reisenfeld's famous color schemes, and was forever observing the varicolored effects and novelties arranged by him.

The following years found him learning more and more about the show business until finally he gave up organ playing and embarked upon a career as a showman. He worked for Jack Steinman, the Brandt Circuit, Blinderman and Stiener, Fox and the M&S Circuit. He studied the methods used by the various circuits and filed them away until he had a complete knowledge of colors, display advertising, ballyhooing, publicity and all of the other angles that go to make up the showman of to-day.

As an example of what he is doing at the Hollywood Theatre we will quote from the New York Evening Graphic of Dec. 28, 1929. "It is sometimes dangerous too, to attend the theatre. There is the famous case of a theatre on Avenue A, which seats only 1400 people. The management decided that they would fill all the seats, and gave one of their pictures a lot of publicity. The idea caught on—so well, in fact, that 5,000 persons milled about the entrance and more than a dozen patrolmen were helpless to keep them in order. Three women were arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct, it being alleged that they failed to 'move on' when told to do so."

"SAYS LEVEY"—

Congratulations are in order, the M.R.T.C. is celebrating its second anniversary and I am indeed proud to be able to say that I am a member of this progressive organization

As I recall the beginning of the M.R.T.C., it brings to my mind the remarks of the skeptical, "Just another one of those things," "It wont last long," "What good is it anyway," and many other such unkind statements coming from those who thought at that time it was, "just one of those things."

Of course we know that almost every organization will meet with such uncalled-for criticism no matter how good the organization's intentions are, until it has proved itself worthy of acceptance by the profession it is catering to it will always be subject to slander and knocks.

It is interesting to note that the very ones who were the "knockers" when we first started out, and the skeptical in the days of our beginning, are active members of the M.R.T.C., and have helped in a great measure to make it the "big thing it is to-day. Like Grapenuts, "there's a reason."

In my opinion the M.R.T.C. fills a long felt want in the operation of Motion Picture Theatres. I wish we would have had something like it when I started out in the "Game" about 17 years ago, it would have been a wonderful guide to me in building a showman's career

One of the particular reasons the M.R.T.C. has appealed to me is because of its fair dealing with all its members and theatre operators themselves have been dealt fairly with in all the activities of the club's pages in the "Motion Picture News."

I personally have been aided greatly in my work by consulting the club pages weekly and I am sure that it will make us all a little wiser if we read these pages which are always filled with good material which we can put to use for the benefit of the Box Office.

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating." The M.R.T.C., when it started out two short years ago required only three or four pages for its activities in the "Motion Picture News," to-day it occupies over thirty pages, all crammed full of real stuff, its reading was confined to a few localities, while now it has become international, the club pages are being read in the far away corners of the world and is helping to make better showmen of us all, while promoting the good spirit of "one for all and all for one."

Again I say, congratulations and best wishes for a continued success, and if the M.R.T.C. keeps up its good work of the past two years it cannot help but grow bigger and better. "Such Popularity Must Be Deserved" and How!

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

THANKS, CURTIS!

No doubt you have on your desk many letters from our brother showmen, with their plans of advertising, publicity and exploitation.

But I believe that some tribute should be paid to the Club at this time.

We are nearing our second anniversary. Starting with a mere handful, this organization has grown like a mighty army, advancing to every point of this country.

And even better, the attention of showmen in other nations has been attracted.

The problems of sound advertising, equipment and other difficulties have been solved through the Club pages. Our stronger brothers have helped our weaker ones, like one big family, all united we advance.

With all our minds concentrated on one big plan, a plan that has promoted fellowship as a club, efficiency to the individual and an interest to promote the higher type of entertainment for the public.

Our organization stands alone in its strive. And until all of the theatre world has become united we must strive harder to bring together our long lost brothers—many who still are at sea and others in the fog.

But we are just like the industry, advancing with the times. The problem of sound has been overcome, we are now standing on the threshold of a new era. With the fast development of the wide film and with the third dimension film in its infancy, it looks like more trouble ahead.

There is only one thing to do and that is to wait and see what the big brother will have to say in the Club pages when the time arrives. I am sure that at the dawn of this new achievement the Club will be one of our biggest sources of information.

As the old Statesman said: "In unity there is strength." Let us stand united and conquer our problems when they arise; and, be as our slogan suggests: "All For One and One For All."

Selling His Shows A Specialty With Sig. (S. S.) Solomon

Another real showman who is located among the other live-wires of the industry in Youngstown, Ohio, is S. S. Solomon, manager of the Paramount Theatre in that city.

We have presented a number of his activities in the past and we feel that they were well received by his fellow members. We are going to give you a line now on how he put "Honey" across to big box office. As the first move in his campaign he ran a full-page co-operative ad in the Vindicator, one of Youngstown's largest papers. A local grocery, a candy company and a local baking company worked in with the ad. A head of Nancy Carroll was cut-up and incorporated as a puzzle into it.

A special feature writer gave his campaign a lot of play in his newspaper column and for an entire week the house received loads of free publicity. As he was celebrating a "Pageant of Progress" at the time, he came in for more publicity on that angle. A special radio broadcast announcing the organ recital at the theatre also gave him a good break. Since the grocery store that he tied-up with was one of a chain he was enabled to plug his feature in the entire sixty stores.

As a special stunt to draw attention to the picture he rented four beehives containing about twenty thousand bees and with an atmospheric background placed them in the theatre and three ideally located stores. Special programs were made up plugging "Honey" and the "Pageant of Progress." Another stunt was the placing in the lobby of a huge honey cake especially baked by a local dealer.

In the group of photos we are showing you can make out the lobby stunt he used by having a girl distribute samples of candy which he promoted from a local manufacturer. Another girl played a piano in the lobby while a young fellow strummed a guitar and hummed the song hits from the picture. The candy company, incidentally, with whom Solomon made the tie-up for thirty thousand samples, also furnished him with miniature Postal Telegraph blanks containing a message about the picture, which were distributed by the company and theatre. Another tie-up for a special "Honey Chew" candy netted him a publicity break insomuch as the company printed thousands of novelty heralds in the form of a miniature picture of Nancy Carroll which was distributed with the samples. These stunts helped him secure loads of good-will.

Lots of other angles were covered too, but as we want to show you what he does on other pictures we'll have to sign off on the "Honey" campaign now, since we feel that we have enumerated the high spots. In the rest of the group photos illustrating this article, you can see the special display he made for his tie-up with the newspaper feature writer, who also helped on "Young Eagles." The other two photos show a street ballyhoo in the form of an aeroplane on a truck that was used to plug "Young Eagles" and received plenty of comment. In the next photo you see how he secured more good-will by letting out, to the Naval and the Marine Recruiting offices, two vacant stores in the theatre building, and also furnishing the display for them. This was greatly appreciated by the Government men and as we said before helped boost Solomon's stock with them away above par.

The photo at the top of this article shows the very successful way he plugged "The Locked Door." Over three hundred dollars worth of merchandise was promoted from the local dealers and inserted into the chest. Heralds plugging the picture were then distributed. Each herald contained a key. The copy on the herald carried the playdates, credit lines to the dealers, and the notice that anyone holding a key was entitled to try the lock on the locked door in front of the theatre. The sensational way that this stunt was met with proved Solomon's judgment in using this angle and the lobby was crowded from opening to closing with people eager to try their keys.

All of the activities we have set down here are typical of the work Solomon turns out weekly.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

METROPOLITAN ACTIVITIES!

ACCORDING TO OFFICIAL AND UNOFFICIAL REPORTS

According to the circuit organ, the month of May is designated on the Fox Metropolitan string of houses as "Merry May Days." The occasion, for the joyous sounding appellation, it seems to us, may be laid to the fact that fifteen managers on the circuit received prizes for their activities during "Promotion Month."

David Silverman, Barnett Lazarus, and Yale Greenhaus, of the Bronx Manhattan Division, are going around with great big smiles on their faces. The reason? Easy. They led the division in merchandise received free in the past month.

The bulge in the pockets of Monty MacLevy, Erwin Gold, and Sam Abrams, showmen from the Brooklyn Division, is not caused by any violation of the 18th Amendment (it's the wrong pocket anyway), but is due to the little windfall each received as a result of their work during "Grab Something For Nothing" Month.

In Long Island out where the air is fresh, Nat Ferber of the Crescent, Sidney Auerbach of the Broadway, and Robert Hutchinson of the Lynbrook will smilingly nod assent when asked whether they led their division last month.

While across the river, where real estate is low, Charles Mann of the Pascack, John Dunn of the Apollo, and M. J. Neary of the Tivoli (Remember their pictures a few weeks ago?), are receiving congratulations from their brother managers on the amount of merchandising they secured by the "Scotch System."

And last but by no means least, G. W. Lampe of the Avon, in Watertown, Wm. J. MacFarlane of the Playhouse in Canandaigua, and Al. Beckerich of the Strand in Niagara, representing the upstate go-getters, at last reports were wishing that the month hadn't closed so that they could go out and promote some more.

Max Farbish of the Granada and Max Cooper of the Corona, in the Long Island group were the circuit runners-up and to them must go honorable mention for the hustling they displayed during the month. Better luck next time.

And anyway, the runners-up won't have to break in new suits of clothes or new shoes. The summer time is an awful time to do that too.

We notice that Sidney Auerbach, live-wire manager of the Broadway Theatre in Astoria, L. I., rates a nice notice because of the fine work he turned out on "Happy Days." By engineering a double truck ad, in co-operation with the local merchants, he did the seemingly impossible for his neighborhood. Good showmanship, we calls it

And sez you, how about the laundry tie-up that Jules Fields, exploiteer for the Manhattan, Bronx and Port Chester Division, engineered with the Mott Haven Laundry? The laundry company is to treat the children in charitable institutions, such as orphan homes, hospitals, etc., to Fox Met houses, defraying all costs. The kids will visit the theatre in groups. Uncle Robert, well known radio personality, whose bedtime stories are known from coast to coast, will act as host and you can take it for granted that his sunny smile and cheery voice will never be forgotten by the kids.

By the above tie-up Fields displays showmanship and also a great big heart. There's plenty of opportunities present right now for showmen to spread a little sunshine and if you want to get an idea of how to chase Old Man Gloom away with Kid Joy we refer you to the column entitled "More Blessed To Give ——" in the May 10th edition of the Managers' Round Table Club Section in Motion Picture News.

To get back on the subject of reporting the activities of the Met Houses (Examples of fortunate persons thinking of less fortunate ones will always make us deviate from routine and stop long enough to hand the kind-hearted one a compliment) we find that in Tom Olsen's column concerning Upstate Activities!

George Lampe, manager of the Avon in Watertown, is doing some effective exploitation. He engineered some corking tie-ups recently for "Son Of The Gods" and "Golden Calf." Every shoe and hosiery shop window in the town was pressed into service to sell "The Golden Calf."

Bill MacFarlane of the Playhouse in Canandaigua (after the first hundred mistakes the spelling is easy) gave away a Buick car. Plenty of publicity and good-will for the house on this one.

Manager Rose of the Oneonta had a co-operative page on "Happy Days" that sold his show as well as the merchant's goods. But the big kick comes when it is known that Rose, after five years of non-cooperation on the part of the local paper, to other managers, broke down their resistance and crashed through.

John Breslin is going along fine with his Kiddie Klub Matinee which is held every Saturday. Twelve kids receive gifts and are entitled to participate for a grand gift to be given away in the future.

Bronx, Manhattan and Westchester, according to Jules Fields, are stepping right along and he says that:

Porte of the Parkway turned out a very effective herald on "Not So Dumb," which tied in a local dress shop. Result—no cost to the theatre for the heralds. Not So Dumb.

Fred Dollinger of the Blenheim is up to his old tricks and has the theatre lobby looking like the front of a five thousand seat de luxer. And they claim his newspaper ads are packing a wallop. Though we haven't seen the results of his present work, we know what he did in the past. So there's no doubt but that they are good.

Barnett Lazarus of the Manhattan is having trouble with the local merchants. It seems that since Barnett showed them how they could drag in extra business by using co-operative heralds, he's been pestered by them on every big picture. The merchants pay for the heralds. Poor Barnett.

Thoms of the Kingsbridge gave away a radio. As usual, tube facetious, results were loud-speaking. This radio give-away stunt if properly handled, has yet to fail.

While "Over in Jersey," the column parented by Jack Hobby proclaims that:

Dan Lee of Bound Brook gave away thirty potted plants during Easter Week. The horticultural (or flowery tributes) made quite a hit with the residents.

A couple of new faces are to be seen in the Jersey line-up. Arthur Bergoffen is now handling the Palace in Bergenfield and William Burke is doing likewise at the Rockland in Nyack.

Shroeder of the Plaza in Englewood, and Spencer Sladdin of the Home Office exploitation force are plotting a fashion show which they claim will eclipse anything yet offered as an inducement to the Jerseyites.

The Circuit has just added the State Theatre in Jersey City to its list of houses. Jack Keale, manager of the State for the former owners is retained. The house comes under the supervision of Mr. Hal Sheridan. Things should be stirring there any moment now.

And on the back page of "Progress" we find these words of wisdom, "Good exploitation consists in making the attraction fit the current needs and desires of the theatre's patronage. In every picture there is one selling angle that is timely. The alert exploiteer finds that angle and builds his campaign on it."

* * *

Which after it is all boiled down comes to this: "Know your patronage."

Maynard Madden Is Very Popular With Residents Of Town

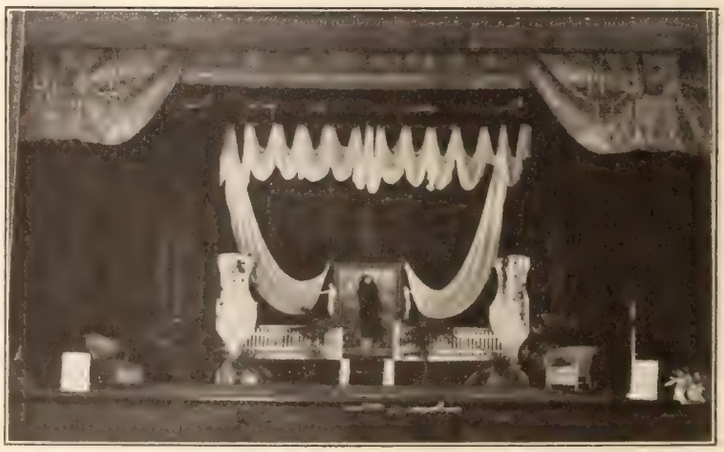
The gentleman we are introducing with this photograph is Maynard Madden, manager of the New Virginia Theatre in Harrisburg, Va.

At this time we are going to present a few accounts of his work in order that you may see what he is doing to sell his shows down in Harrisburg. The first account is that of the stunt he pulled on "Disraeli." He sold the dean of women at a local college on the educational value of the picture. She announced it at assembly and as a result an order for one hundred and fifty reserved seats came through. The same stunt was pulled later on "Green Goddess."

Madden promoted a Festival Week that went over very well. A special co-operative newspaper ad was run, merchants contributed gifts, and many other mediums were used and despite the opposition of a carnival the week went way over the one used the year previous. He arranged with one of the local schools to put on a little playlet in addition to the regular show at his house. Twenty-five children participated in it. The show was run matinee and evening and the results were excellent.

He gives us a little dope on a free matinee he ran last year that proved a great good-will builder as well as a box office sweller. One of the big business men in town donated fifty dollars to the theatre, for which Madden invited every kid in town to attend the afternoon show. He booked in an all-comedy program and the funny part of the whole thing was the fact that he played to more dough from adults at night on the picture than any he had ever played in the past with the same star. Incidentally, on the Free Matinee he tied-up with a local ice-cream manufacturer and received a number of bricks of ice cream, which was given to the children as they came into the theatre.

Madden is also using the free radio stunt and it looks as though it is going to prove a winner for him too. So with all these activities to his credit we believe that when we state we are going to hear more from him very soon and will be enabled to pass along some more angles of this sort, he will see that we do. Right, Maynard.



George A. Miller & Richardson Put Fashion Show Over

In line with a story we ran a while back concerning Spring Fashion Shows, George A. Miller manager of the Smalley's Theatre in Cooperstown, N. Y., decided to feature one.

To start the revue off with local interest he tied-up with a girl's boarding school located in the town and persuaded some of the teachers to act as models. This angle was a corker, since it stood to reason that the students would flock to the theatre to see their tutors showing off the latest styles in clothing.

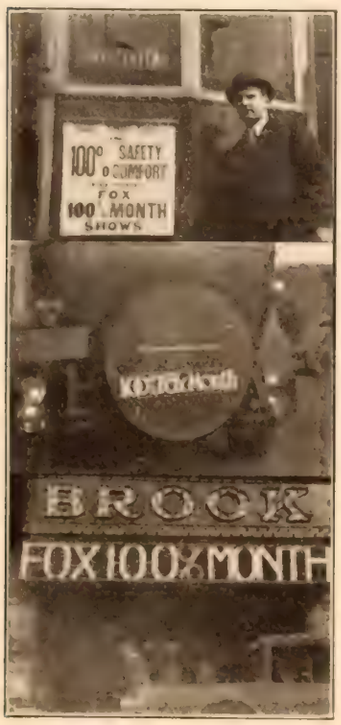
Miller then persuaded the local ladies wearing apparel shop to order some exclusive models to be used in the show. The store got behind his proposition and boosted it in their newspaper ads and this, in addition to the publicity that the theatre secured did a lot towards creating interest in the show.

To give you an idea of the effective setting that the Fashion Show was run off in, we are showing a photo of the stage, all set for the parade. The setting is the work of General Manager Richardson of the Smalley Circuit and we most certainly must hand him a compliment for the very pleasing effect he has achieved. If you look at the picture closely you will note that he has added a novel touch in the form of a picture frame, in front of which the models pose before they walked about the stage.

As this was the first time the town has been treated to so fine a spectacle, a great deal of comment was current for a time and this served as good publicity for the theatre as well as a tribute to Richardson's production ability. The complete campaign went over very successfully and we know that the publicity and good-will, as well as the additional box office more than made up for the many hours of work turned in by Richardson and Miller.

We want to thank Miller for passing this along to us and want him to know that we are very glad to let the rest of the Round Table in on what he is doing to boost box office business up there in Cooperstown. Give Mr. Richardson a little compliment for us George on his stage setting, and let's have some more of your work very soon.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB



Some Examples Of Ace Merchandising By Jersey Showmen

Now for some of the activities of that live-wire group of showmen who comprise the New Jersey Division of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses.

As a reward for his part in the recent "Booster Month," observed by the division, Maurice Broski, manager of the Franklin Theatre in Nutley, N. J., was presented with a week's vacation. During the special month Broski led the division in the number of stunts and other business getting activities he promoted.

One of his biggest activities was the promotion of five big benefit shows which he ran in one week, and swelled up the box-office considerably besides securing loads of good-will for the house and the circuit. In the photos we are showing in conjunction with this article you can see what he did to plug "Hit the Deck." This stunt was one of the many he pulled and it did a lot to put the picture across. The boys in sailor suits are members of the Junior Naval Militia and they paraded to and about the theatre during the showing of the film. Mr. Broski is seen in one of the photos.

A stunt that proved of great benefit to the managers in Jersey City was a tie-up with the Jersey Journal, promoted by Jack Hobby, publicity director for the division. Hobby arranged to have the newspaper send out a cameraman to take a picture of street crowds. The picture was shown in the paper on the following day and persons having rings about their heads were entitled to tickets to any of the Jersey City houses upon presentation of the paper at the newspaper office. Another angle that Hobby worked to bigger box-office was his tie-up with the local traction company on "100% Month," a picture of which tie-up we are showing with this story. If you look at the photo closely you can note Hobby standing alongside the banner on the trolley car. It would also pay to note the well chosen copy he used to secure the tie-up. The other photos show the way he plugged the month by means of auto tire covers and at the houses, by using special cut-out letters. He also secured a tie-up with a local bakery that helped the Jersey City houses considerably. The bakery company agreed to feature banners on their wagons announcing the month, and in addition conceived a plan whereby the patrons of the theatre and the bakery customers could secure free cake.

The other two photos we are reproducing will let you see how many gifts were promoted by E. W. Cadugan, manager of the Rialto and Al Unger, manager of the Fulton Theatre in Jersey City. The left photos show the display arranged in the lobby of Cadugan's house and the right shows Unger's lobby (P.S.—Tha't Al with the cigar, in the flesh, not a cut-out). These two displays combined constituted a total of about nine hundred dollars worth of merchandise secured absolutely free from local dealers and given away to patrons of both houses. Similar tie-ups were effected by the managers of the other houses on the circuit.

These activities constituted only a small part of what this hustling division did on "Booster Month," and "100% Month," and we want to hand them a little compliment for their work. From time to time we have been keeping you up on their activities and we know that it will continue because when these showmen start out to put anything across there's bound to be a couple of novel slants injected into the campaign.

THIS IS NOVEL!

A novel plan, sprung recently by Hal Sheridan, supervisor of the New Jersey Division of Fox Met. Playhouses, seems to be clicking over on the shore. The idea, a "Square Deal Club," is one of the most unique ideas ever formulated in the annals of show business.

The "Square Deal Club," composed of managers in the Jersey Division, features a committee on "unfairness." Any manager, deeming himself not being rightly treated, or harboring a grievance of any sort against his superiors, is entitled to state his case before a committee. The committee, composed of Charles Mann of the Pascack Theatre in Westwood, Daniel Lee of the Bound Brook in Bound Brook, M. Neary of the Tivoli Theatre in Jersey City and Al Unger of the Fulton in Jersey City, listens to the complaints and passes judgment. If the complaint merits the attention of Sheridan, the offender is called upon to defend himself.

In a recent address to the managers, Sheridan is quoted as having said, "This is to be a Square Deal Club in every sense of the word. If any manager feels he is not being treated fairly, he must take up his grievance with the committee. I want it understood that I am not immune from criticism.

"If any of you boys believe I am not giving you a square deal at any time, come right out with it. If I'm wrong, I'll rectify things immediately. There are too many masks worn in the show business. What we want to do is to remove the masks, look everyone square in the face and put our cards on the table, and not only look for a square deal but give a square deal in return. We, on our side, expect the same from our men."

Sheridan has been connected for seven years with Morris Kutinsky, division manager for Fox. The plan has met with the approval of Kutinsky. It is said that Sheridan's fair treatment of his men, in the past, has made him a prime favorite with theatre men throughout the country.

Vernon Reaver Does Good Biz. On His "Early Bird" Show

The reason why we are reproducing this photo on these pages is to give you an idea of how the residents of Birmingham, Ala., flock to the early morning shows inaugurated by Vernon Reaver who handles the merchandising of the Ritz Theatre.

You will also notice in the photo, the big banner which Reaver uses to attract attention to the picture. The flag has proven a great attention getter from passing autoists as well as pedestrians and does a lot to sell the shows. Most of the Club members are already acquainted with Reaver and Steele and thus they know about the fine work turned out by these two Southern showmen, and since we will no doubt hear some more concerning their work in the near future we won't say anything about their past activities and the showmanlike stunts they displayed, but will let the future tell the story.

Big Town Stuff!

What started out to become merely a convenience for women patrons, turned out to be a big money getter for the New York Paramount.

Eddie Hitchcock, publicity director for the big Times Square show house, arranged with the Helena Rubinstein beauty salon to take over the cosmetic room in the ladies' lounge for beauty demonstrations and lectures for one week. Lady patrons were taught the art of facial make-up and the idea went over so big that it was held over for the second week. The Helena Rubinstein Company distributed 50,000 samples of face powder in addition to giving away over $500 worth of cosmetics. First prize called for $100 in free beauty treatments at the salon. Additional prizes consisted of expensive leather bags filled with cosmetics. The big surprise was that women patrons repeated attendance daily during the two weeks to take advantage of free facial treatments for the price of the theatre admission. An even bigger surprise was the fact that the Helena Rubinstein people sent out 50,000 expensive pamphlets to dealers, distributors and the general public. These pamphlets carried a reproduction of the Paramount Theatre on the front cover with the caption "It's Beauty Week at the Paramount." The

MORE NEW MEMBERS!

A. W. PINKHAM manages the Strand Theatre in Dover, N. H., and as a recent issue proved he certainly is a showman. Pinkham, if you recall, is the live wire who pulled a stunt with a "short" that had the town talking. So you see he really does not need an introduction of this sort as he has won his surs already. But since everybody must be represented on these pages "A. W." here you are.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

A. L. LASHWAY manages the Olympia Theatre in Lynn, Mass. And unless we are mistaken Lynn is signed up 100% Round Table, and there's no reason why that hustling town shouldn't be showing the showman influence on our pages often, and we're depending on Lashway to keep right in step with the rest of the showmen. And listen "A. L.," why not shoot us in a photo of yourself when you send in your next contribution.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

W. E. STEWART manages the Pastime Theatre in Concord, N. C., and with a pretty little house like the Concord under his wings we known that he does everything possible to sell it. And for that reason "W. E." we expect to see some showmanlike activity down around your district. So drop us a line or two and let's know what you are doing.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

DAVID SAMUELS is the house manager of the Windsor Theatre in Broowlyn, N. Y. He is proposed for membership by Lou Smith, who, incidentally holds court around the Windsor, and with Lou sponsoring you, David, we feel that you must know something about showmanship, and with that in view we know you will turn out some good work over there in Brooklyn.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

WALTER A. SMITH must be a busy manager what with handling the New Fox and State Theatres in Corning, N. Y., but we feel that no matter how busy he is he will want to let the rest of his brother members in on the methods he uses to fill the seats in his houses. We know that he is doing some good work up there and we hope in the next issue or two to be able to pass some of it along. How about it, Walter?

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

WILLIAM MICHALSON manages the Capitol Theatre, in Port Chester, N. Y. With a pretty little town like Port Chester as a background for your house Bill, it stands to reason that you adopt some novel methods to sell your shows and we'd like to pass the accounts along to the Club readers. In addition, it will only take you another minute or two to enclose your photo, and a little note about yourself.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

A. J. SONOSKY manages the Riviera Theatre in St. Paul, Minn., that city that is famed for showmanship. We don't know whether Mr. Sonosky was in on the party when the records were being busted a number of years ago, but we do know that through good exploiting he can make a few records of his own. And there's no better place to hang them up on view other than the Round Table Club's pages. So what do you say "A. J." Let the rest of the Club see what you mid-west showmen are doing.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

J. CLAAR is the Assistant Manager of the Fairfax Theatre in Miami, Florida, and the mere mention of the name Fairfax ought to conjure up ideas of showmanship, for nearly everybody knows that the house is managed by Earle Holden, and when Mr. Claar is working for a go-getter like Earle it's a cinch that he is going to know a lot when his training period is over and he's set for his own house. Keep us up on your work, Mr. Claar, so we'll know how you're coming along.

BEN PRECIADO is the manager of the Rialto Theatre in Calexico, Cal. As Ben is a California showman and knowing the work they have turned out in the past it's only fair to state that we expect him to prove himself an A1 theatre man too, by sending us in a few of his stunts now and then, for how else are we to pass judgment on a man until we see his work. What say, Ben?

JOHN C. WHITE, JR., is the Assistant Manager of the Capitol Theatre in Portsmouth, Va. Welcome into the Club John and we don't doubt but that your affiliation with this organization, providing you prove an active member, will help a lot towards securing a house of your own some day. Let's hear from you often so that we'll know what you are doing to sell shows around your vicinity.

L. B. FORDAN manages the Star Theatre in New York City. Located in a swell neighborhood for exploitation we think that Mr. Fordan will be turning out some good stuff and sending it in so that we can pass it along to the rest of the boys. Let us in on what you are accomplishing at the Star "L. B." and you might also send us a photo and a little dope on your career in show business.

MISS THERESA NIBLER is the manager of the Electric Theatre in Springfield, Mass. We are indeed glad to welcome Miss Nibler into the Club, and to assure her that we are proud to list her as the latest woman manager to join, and if she proves as active as the rest of our female enrollment, some showmen we know had better look out. How about a picture of yourself Miss Nibler, and a few lines on your show career?

* * *

ED. BENJII is the manager of the Oshkosh Theatre in Oshkosh, Wis. From Mr. Benjii's letter we deduce that he is a pretty smart showman since he has had considerable experience in the game. But in order that the Club may also see what you have done Mr. Benjii it will be necessary to forward us some of your latest work. And if you haven't anything recent on hand how about a look at your house organ.

THE Club is anxious to publish photographs of every member and would, therefore, appreciate receiving as many as possible for use in future issues of the Club columns. If you have not already done so, PLEASE send us your own photo at once. Thank you.

This film brings

SOUND and COLOR

—with ECONOMY

SONOCHROME expresses every mood of the picture . . . or its dominant tone . . . or its prevailing lighting . . . by means of sixteen delicate tints. And these tints are so adjusted that they give faithful reproduction of sound. Thus, Sonochrome supplies two features of the modern motion picture...sound and color . . . at the cost of ordinary black-and-white.

UNIVERSAL FIRST!

THE CODE OF THE GREATER NEW SHOW WORLD

¶ Codes are important in the picture business today. Guides to public approval and success. ¶ Showmen need a code guaranteeing their box office prosperity in this Greater New Show World of ours! The brilliant new era dawning with the approaching season of 1930-31. With Paramount-perfected talking pictures flowering into the most amazing entertainment the world public has ever known. ¶ Here's the quality code governing these mighty monarch hits of the coming year. Here's the code assuring you of record-breaking profits. Here's a guide to showmanship for the new season and the reason the smart exhibitor is rushing to sign a Paramount contract:

1. In the Greater New Show World facing you now, it takes great hits week after week to do consistently great business.

NOTICE

The following producers have selected motion picture film processing machines covered by patents owned by the CINEMA PATENTS COMPANY, INC., as the best and most efficient machines in the world today.

Paramount Publix Corp.	Bell Tel. Laboratories, Inc.
Fox Film Corporation	Eastman Kodak Company
Universal Pictures Corp.	Spoor-Thompson Machine Co.
Consolidated Film Ind. Inc.	H. E. R. Laboratories, Inc.

Bennett Film Laboratories, Inc.

Machines made under our patents operate at much greater speed and produce a better, more even and uniform quality than any others. Breakage and wastage are practically eliminated and nicked and broken sprockets are precluded, thus effecting a large saving, in addition to reducing operating costs.

Producers desiring to acquire or use Motion Picture Film Processing Machines covered by our patents may do so only under license agreement with the undersigned. Fully equipped shops and technicians are maintained to furnish, install and service these motion picture film processing machines.

WARNING!

Our patent attorneys advise us that our patents are basic and it is our intention to prosecute to the fullest extent of the law any and all who infringe our patents.

FOX FILM CORPORATION

New York, N. Y.

We are committed to a policy of supplying to the talking motion picture theatres of the world entertainment of the quality and character necessary for the enhancement of the prosperity of these enterprises.

We shall continue to add to our already vast production resources and studios the talent and the facilities which, guided by experienced and successful management, will make certain the accomplishment of this objective.

It shall be the aim of Fox Film Corporation to cooperate cordially in every movement directed toward the advancement of screen entertainment and toward insuring for the talking motion picture and for the industry their rightful share of prestige and prosperity.

Every factor and every branch in the industry may count upon this corporation's enthusiastic participation in all affairs aimed to heighten the industry's service to the public and to promote the business of talking motion pictures.

Exhibitors may be assured that Fox Film Corporation will at all times continue keenly mindful of their problems which will be met by this organization in a spirit of sincere good will and friendly cooperation.

In the vital matter of product for the new season, no effort has been spared to make available to the theatre owners attractions of a calibre that will insure success at the box-office, thus continuing to make the Fox Film emblem the identification, the world over, of successful entertainment.

President

AHEAD!!

Hollywood, California

We have reached our highest mark in entertainment quality and in box-office attraction values in our talking pictures to be offered to the public during the season of 1930-1931. Fox Studio activities are now at top speed and the efficiency of production is at the peak of Fox Film history.

Our principal artists—those popularly acclaimed by the public and whose names spell box-office success—are all under long-term contracts. So are our best known successful directors. Our staff of authors includes the best known stage dramatists, novelists, motion picture scenario writers, music composers and lyric writers. We have acquired rights to more than 100 new stories. We have the fullest confidence that our releases comprising 48 stories of widely different type and themes will return a fine commercial profit and good will to those theatres exhibiting Fox product during the next season.

We aim with our ambitious plans to present attractions that will compel the public to patronize talking picture theatres more regularly and to do so in larger numbers.

Our aim is to offer pictures that will amuse and entertain every person in your audiences. We are founding our production policy on intelligent and high standards yet with popular conception of human emotions. Our production plans are already made five years in advance. We thank our friends for their expressions of confidence and good will.

W. Fox

Vice President and General Manager

New York, N. Y.

The good will of theatre owners is the most valuable asset any corporation possesses. Fox Film Corporation during the season of 1930-31 will leave no effort untried to further exalt the good will its box office entertainments and service have merited.

This coming season more than ever before, exhibitors will find our organization embarked on a year that should be resplendent with maximum profit. Our course for the future is definite and secure.

With our incomparable production resources, Fox Film Corporation can be depended upon, at its inception of a new and greater era, for the delivery to exhibitors of a product that will be superior in entertainment quality and in box office magnetism.

Our sales policy is one that makes the product stand on its own, a policy that in itself is conclusive guarantee of the confidence we have in its drawing power. We are perfectly content to be judged by the product we will offer.

In planning and arranging for our 1930-31 program we have incorporated in each and every production those qualities so indispensable to both box office and entertainment success.

UP THE RIVER

A comedy-drama of high life in prison

"So long boys - Back to the old Hotel - A room with a river view!"

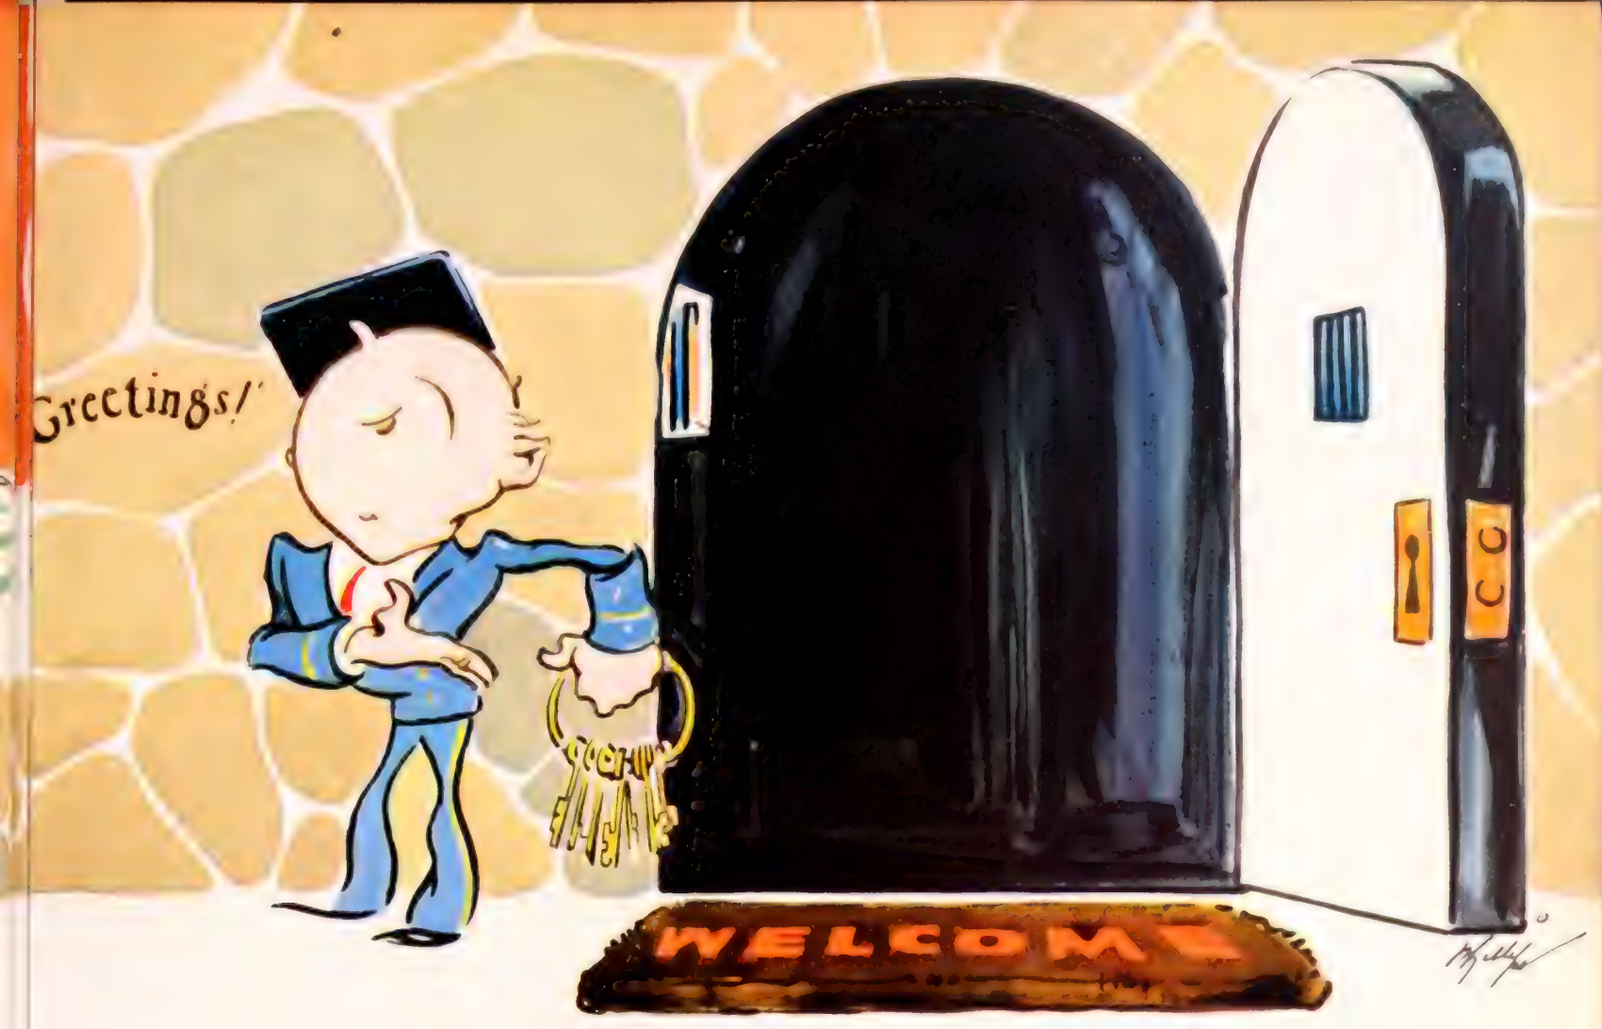
Geez - I wonder if I kin strike meself out?



"Up the River" is from the same brilliant author who wrote the comedy smash "Chicago". This time Maurine Watkins turns her shafts of wit on prisoners and prison life. There's a laugh in every line of her sparkling dialog. Love interest, too, and heart appeal.

It tells the story of what happens when a new warden tries to clean up a prison where convicts keep right on living by their wits — "business as usual". And of what happens when a pair of decent young sweethearts, separated by the law, are thrown into this nest.

Prison conditions are the topic of the day — and "Up the River" tells the real, inside story in language that sells tickets.

3 BIG COLORFUL MUSICAL ROMANCES

Handsome, youthful, gifted both as actor and singer, J. Harold Murray has become an outstanding favorite of the movietone screen. Now he comes to you in three big musical romances, each with a stirring love story and tuneful songs, especially written to give his remarkable talents full expression.

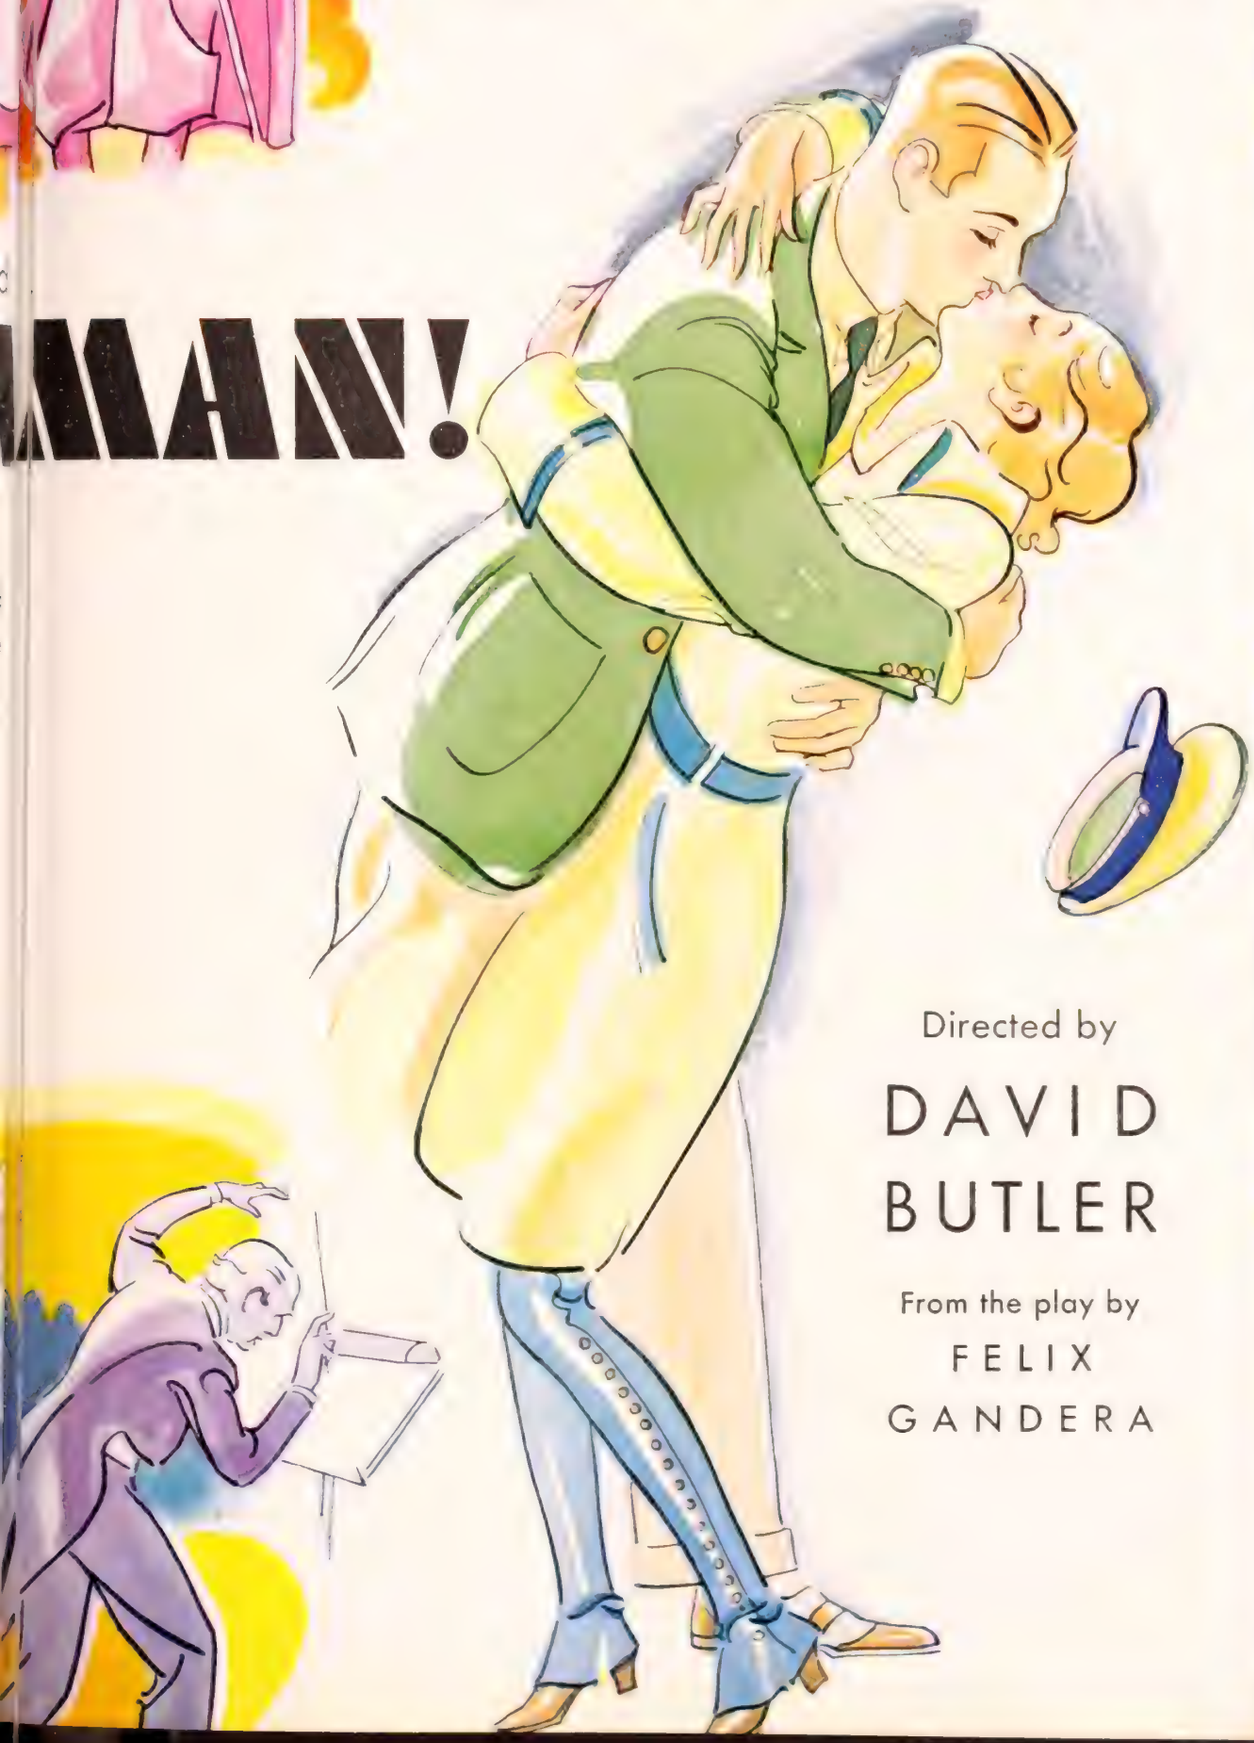
SUNNY SIDE UP

The romantic musical comedy

OH, FOR A

No need to sell you the team of Gaynor and Farrell! "Sunny Side Up" and "High Society Blues" tell everything in terms of record grosses. ● If there ever was a "natural," it's Gaynor and Farrell talking, singing and loving under the direction of the dependable David Butler. That's "Oh, for a Man!" ● The story concerns the turbulent troubles of impoverished nobility living by their wits. Miss Gaynor plays the daughter of a penniless prince employed by Charles Farrell, a young millionaire, as social instructor. ● To save Farrell from being victimized by his friends and titled servants, she masquerades as a boy and becomes his chauffeur. Imagine the beautiful love story, the comedy complications, the love songs! ● "Oh, for a Man" can't help being one of the high spots of the new season!



America's favorite screen sweethearts together once more in their only joint appearance of the new season!

ESTELLE TAYLOR

● Saint or sinner, was he more of the one than the other? ● A barker, ballyhooing a carnival; a hero to servant girls, in whose warm little hearts was hunger to be loved. He used them, abused them, yet he was adored. ● But the drab little Julie conquered the heart of the tough — a strange, wistful, passionate romance. ● Molnar's stage play, "Liliom," was an immediate and international triumph a few years ago.

SINNERS

An answer to the youth problem that even youth will love to hear

"I'll make a man of the kid, if I have to kill him to do it!"

And the story of the rich young wastrel's regeneration through strong arm methods is a knockout! Combining dramatic punches, comedy jabs and a heart-hitting love theme.

New York applauded the stage play for a solid year. The elaborately produced screen version is the last word in pictures of the whoopee-loving younger set.

FOX FILMS are produced at these 2 huge modern studios in California

It will be our endeavor during the season 1930-1931 to maintain the highest possible standard of quality in our productions consistent with the changing conditions in our industry and the taste of the motion picture audiences. Bearing in mind that in the production of motion pictures creative genius is the foundation of our efforts we are dealing with an element that occasionally calls for changes in story, plot or characters in order to obtain the perfection in production which is our goal.

With this end solely in mind we must naturally reserve the right to change story, plot, cast and director to furnish you with the product that will sell at your box office, and we therefore notify you that the list of cast, story and director is only tentative, and subject to change without notice except in such cases where definite book or play is designated, such designation will remain unchanged.

THE PATHÉ BOOK OF 1930-1931

For twenty-six years Pathé has annually come before the American public and the amusement world with a significant array of screen productions. In this most important year of this great industry it is our honor to make a signal departure from all traditional practice. This year Pathé's announcement is made in a volume specially published for the purpose with a grace and dignity as remarkable and different as the extraordinary pictures it presents. Only such a volume so conceived and executed can present in the printed word the story of a new concept and new ideals of showmanship for the talking picture screen. So today Pathé announces the publication of its announcement—a remarkable book of unparalleled pictures.

PACENT ANNOUNCES A COMPLETE NEW LINE OF REPRODUCERS

NOW, with over 1500 installations completed throughout the world, Pacent presents an improved new line of reproducer systems for theatres of all sizes. These new Pacent Systems contain improvements and refinements in design and operation which mark a new era in sound reproduction.

Features found in no other sound systems are incorporated in the new Pacent line. First is PACENT TONE COLOR CONTROL, a feature which compensates for varying acoustical conditions and for differences in crowded and partially filled houses. Second is the new PACENT OIL DAMPED PICK-UP supplied as standard equipment with all Pacent Disc Reproducers. This wonderful new pick-up eliminates record jumping and adds a full octave to range of reproduction.

These are only two of a number of remarkable and valuable new features introduced by Pacent.

Highly important to exhibitors who own Pacent Systems now is the fact that:

All important new features and improvements found in the new Pacent Systems are available at low cost to present Pacent users. It has always been, and always will be, the policy of Pacent Reproducer Corp. to make improvements and refinements available to past purchasers. Information on the new features, as applied to equipments in service, will be furnished on request to interested exhibitors.

STATEMENT BY L. G. PACENT, President

To the world's leading producers, who have made many noteworthy advances in sound recording in the past year. I wish to extend my thanks. These advances in the recording art now enable our reproducers to demonstrate their full efficiency and future advances in recording are anticipated in our new systems.

Talking picture recording, reproduction and exhibition go steadily forward. To producer and exhibitor should be given great credit. The Pacent Corporation thanks both for their contributions, which have proved invaluable in perfecting even better Pacent Reproducer Systems.

I take this opportunity to thank the 1,500 Pacent exhibitors throughout the world for their co-operation, for their interest, and for their faith in Pacent equipment.

The new Pacent equipments are finer than the first. But I am pleased to say that every present owner of a Pacent System can take immediate advantage of all basic improvements and make his system in every way the equal of our new systems. We believe, and always shall, in actively helping all our friends and buyers, old and new.

Our desks are top-heavy with complaints from studio executives and newspaper space czars.

We're too busy, and there are too many yells by mail and wire, for us to answer in any way but this. We're devoting that time to completing the only answer you will understand and appreciate.

Studio executives are bothering the very devil out of our Hollywood staff.

Newspaper photoplay editors are giving us blue blazes here in New York.

It has been a big job, but we have finished it, so stop beefing and within the next two weeks you will get your copies of the 1930 Edition of Motion Picture News Blue Book.

Compare it with the 1929 Edition. Note the increase in total number of biographies---nearly 1,000 more---and in the amount of advertising.

Move to Cow Rebel Members Seen in Hays Broadcast of Code Editorials

The Eagle-Eyes

Certain important chain interests are understood to be watching with keen interest all weekly reports of the government's new census takings for the purpose of spotting localities which show radical population increases, especially those towns where an under-seated condition has been discovered when comparisons were made with the new figures.

Johnston Reveals Studio Problems In Satevepost Yarn

An article entitled "Air Follies," by William A. Johnston, publisher of Motion Picture News, appears in the Saturday Evening Post for May 31.

The text describes the discovery of box office value of musical shows and the almost over-night reorganization of Hollywood production plans and talent to create the new and, for a time, extremely profitable form of entertainment.

Post readers are given the equivalent of a personally conducted tour of the sound stages, close-ups of giant camera cranes, sets appalling in size, deep breaths of the hectic ozone of executive offices at the studios, and an explanation of the frenzied but shrewd search for talent with which to feed the camera and microphone.

Full credit is given in the article to the many individuals, including production executives, writers, directors, players, composers and technicians, who have successfully weathered the nerve-wracking test imposed by the coming of musicals for speed, originality and cleverness under the burden and strain of production costs higher than any one in the closing days of silent production dared dream, even in nightmares.

U. S. Firms to Quit Austria As Result of Boycott

Vienna—Proposed boycott of American sound pictures by small exhibitors here may result in withdrawal of American distributors from the Austrian market. A boycott on American reproducing equipment has been declared, and the exhibitor association here is undertaking to buy silent films for its membership. The belief is that German equipment will be lower priced and more efficient than American apparatus.

Bulletins Puzzle Industry; Criticized as Aiding Reformers Also

A barrage of newspaper editorial comment on the new Code of Ethics has been laid down by the Hays office in a series of mimeographed bulletins captioned "This Is What They're Saying," but the purpose of the move gets no farther than a question mark.

The fact that unfavorable and condemnatory, as well as laudatory, opinions of the Code are included in the digest has caused the industry to wonder about the motive behind the stunt. Not only are they questioning the propriety of this procedure, because of the ammunition thus supplied gratis to the reforming ilk, but they are speculating concerning the necessity of this defense of the self-imposed restrictive measures.

While some attribute it to a sense of fairness on the part of Hays, planting the idea of giving both sides of the question a hearing, others see in it an outgrowth of the political processes of the General's mind. With favorable views predominating, it is construed in some quarters as a whip to lash recalcitrant members of the Hays organization, not in concord with the Code, into line and to demonstrate to them the urgent need of the picture "don'ts."

The first of the bulletins was issued April 10 and No. 15 went out on May 15, each containing two pages of single-spaced typing. A line on the identity of the persons and organizations to whom they are being mailed might inspire a close guess as to the secret behind the Hays strategy, but this information is not forthcoming.

"Mary" Dumps 200 Grand Overboard; Who'll Pay?

Hollywood—Pity the poor exhibitor who probably will be called upon to pay the 200 grand expected to be thrown into the ashcan, as a result of Mary Pickford's dissatisfaction with work to date on "Secrets."

She stopped the picture with but a few

In the Can

Sales messages next year will come to the sales force in cans, meetings to be held in exchanges where executives will address the salesmen from the talking screen, it is predicted. Pathe's success with its convention feature this year hinted at the development.

Mysterious Mike

Hollywood—There's a story current of a player who resorted to a loud outburst of profanity when a scene went wrong. Although women were present, no one took him to task. But when the rushes were run off the following day, the player found his tirade on the sound track.

He's been quiet ever since.

Speed Boys But They Travel in Dizzy Circles

Hollywood—They're traveling at a fast pace these days at Columbia, only it seems to be in circles, so much so that the studio is winning from some the nickname of "merry-go-round." Henry King recently was brought in to make a talker version of "Tol'able David," but it seems there must be a different treatment than King could savvy, so the director who filmed the vehicle to win the Photoplay Medal some years ago bowed out of the picture. Now the matter may be patched up, but it's going to take quite a bit more sugar if King is to be persuaded to megaphone it.

Gerritt Lloyd is the latest to take a fling at the story editorship, replacing Jo Swerling. In the publicity department, there is something of a tangle, the reason being that Alex Moss quit after a recent jam with Jack Cohn and Lon Young was brought in to replace him. Came the dawn and reconciliation, and now Alex is back on the lot, reported to have collected salary during the interim to boot.

The situation somewhat parallels the hullabaloo caused at the home office when Joe Gallagher was brought in "to coordinate" the advertising, publicity and exploitation departments with Hank Linet continuing as advertising and publicity director with the merry-go-round in full swing as members of the department tried to figure just where they stood.

Ostrers Here to Thwart Maxwell Sale to Warners

Efforts to maintain their hold as leaders in British exhibition by keeping out American companies is credited as the reason for the visit to New York of Isidore and Maurice Ostrer of Gaumont British.

THE WAR OF AGGRESSION GETS BLOODIER

THIS is the picture business, yet week by week you hear less of actual motion pictures and more of theatres. Paradoxical, but, take it from us, as true as any observation can be.

The whole industry is off on a new tangent. It's gone exhibition crazy. The major companies, almost to a man, have successfully whipped themselves into frenzies of foolhardy excitement over bigger and better theatre circuits. Bigger, numerically—without argument. Better, in point of the terrific investment and carrying load—a serious, most serious, question.

Today, the kings who sit on thrones that rest on cloud banks are plotting new moves, concocting new methods on how to capture the theatre crown of the nation. As usual, and with the same nondescript regard for the unfortunate non-combatants who get in the way of the advancing machine, a lot of innocents are being hurt. But that, if you like, might be ascribed to the fortunes of war. Everybody regrets it, waxes polite over its devastating consequences and turns to other matters.

But make no mistake about the bellicose aspects of the conflict that rages hotter and hotter as nineteen-thirty grows older. If ever a war of aggression has hit this industry, the set-to now current is that. It's bitter, it's acrid, it's rough. Vindictive, too, and smacking every bit of the intolerance and mail-fistedness that ruled across the pond in '17.

Swivel-Chair Strategy

Everyone is crashing in on everybody's territory. Cities and towns that are saddled beyond business salvation with theatre seats are facing additional thousands. The reinforcements in this bloody struggle are theatres and more theatres. Throw them up regardless of what is to come, but throw them up. That seems to be the dominant line of action.

Scouts are out everywhere lining up chain after chain. When the circuits are gobbled up then individual houses. Deals are being shoved through on snap analysis and hurriedly to beat the competing aggressor to the post.

Price seems to make no difference. Potentialities and actualities, less. The battle is one of numerical jugglery with generals who are expert in mathematics, not strategy, in the saddle.

Shooting the Bankroll

In one section of the country, a producer, full of Napoleonic hop, recently shot his offer for a certain chain up $1,500,000 because word had seeped through that a competitor was after it. This producer got the chain. Also a headache and a long, bitter experience before common sense finally dictated a revision—downward—in the terms.

Other executives, projected into the spotlight by the wizardry of their press agents and the gullibility of some trade papers, daily muddy those vaunted reputations by theatre purchases both indiscriminate and hasty.

It all looks well on paper. Twenty-two theatres acquired there; sixteen here. A grand set-up on a desk and the bankers are properly impressed. But what about the money to cover them? How much for repairs before those houses will return in actual dollars what the estimates say they will produce? How many more houses must be built or annexed to protect them? And what's going to happen when a competitive chain sneaks into the situation?

Some of the steadier heads, where common sense rides roughshod over visions of aggrandizement, are conjecturing plenty over this latest form of insanity. Whether the conjecture will crystallize into action rests with the future. The archives of industry history indicate full well that no moves will be taken until the dollar parade on the balance sheets changes its uniform from black to red. Then action will be swift, delirious and eventually effective.

In the meantime, the business, through lack of cohesion, is being permitted to rush headlong toward the brink of an economic precipice. Faced with the danger of overextension, withdrawal of credit if the returns don't back up each venture to the hilt, and the loss of confidence of the investing public, the only known factor in the entire picture is this persistent debauch in theatre expansion.

Showmen Fight Guarantees as 'Milking' Patrons; Demand that Losses Be Shared

And They're Hungry, Too

Hollywood—"If Florenz Ziegfeld is in Hollywood looking for new faces, he is going to be disappointed," predicts Screen Play Magazine, which reports that "out of 548 chorus girls who have applied for work in his screen version of 'Whoopee', 380 have appeared in his New York shows."

Sullivan Named Film Buyer for All Fox Houses

Sectional film buying for Fox theatres is out. Under the reorganization process to which the company's holdings have been submitted, the entire country will be welded into one buying group with Jack Sullivan in charge and Abe Blumstein handling the East under the former's control. Sullivan is former Los Angeles exchange manager for Fox and for some time buyer for Fox West Coast.

A film booking department under the new arrangement is in process of organization.

Fight on Credits Makes Fox Movietone Drop 'Em

Title credits for Fox Movietone News cameramen have been relegated to the scrap heap as a result of a controversy precipitated by camera reporters in the field for Hearst Metrotone News.

Full credit for Fox Movetone News men was decided upon almost from the inception of the release. When Hearst Metrotone came into existence, the credit system was not followed. In order to eliminate friction, all names now are being dropped.

Dust Off Reports Of Zukor Theatre To Plug Realty

Hollywood—The regular annual report that Paramount plans erection of a de luxe theatre in Hollywood is dusted off at this time apparently to assist a real estate boom that just won't get started.

As usual, Paramount's Hollywood house will be erected on property owned by the company at Sunset and Vine, the site of the old studios. Cost of construction has increased since last year—at that time it would run to about $2,000,000, but now it has jumped to $5,000,000, with the latter figure including cost of stores and office building. Paramount is said to own ten acres of vacant property in two blocks, with much of it yet to be sold to investors.

Distributors Counter With Charges of "Cheating"; Employ Sleuths

With percentage slated to be the general practice in the industry in sales plans now completed or being formulated by major companies, considerable agitation is in store over the guarantee and overage feature of percentage contracts.

Exhibitors generally contend that the guarantee and overage system is unfair, insisting that percentage contracts should be straight sharing agreements. By paying overage, it is asserted, exhibitors are at a disadvantage, for the reason that the percentage picture which garners overage money "milks" patronage, to the great disadvantage of succeeding days or weeks.

Plenty of Cheating

There is plenty of cheating in the matter of percentage contracts, assert distributors, who declare that this feature of the system is raising the ante for exhibitors. Various means to thwart this form of racketeering are under consideration, among them the employment of detectives and a system of bonding exhibitors.

Burns Detective Agency to Check 'U' Percentage Run

Universal has engaged the William Burns detective agency to check all future percentage runs.

RKO Planning Exchanges in Great Britain

Establishment of its own exchange system in England is planned by RKO, with Joseph I. Schnitzer slated to sail June 11 for England. Schnitzer now is en route to New York from the company's coast convention.

Radio already has a production unit in England, under direction of Basil Deane. Its contract with Ideal Pictures is to expire soon. Sol G. Newman, who has been representing RKO in England working with Ideal, recently returned to England, as did Simon Rowson, head of Ideal.

The "Immortal" Charlie

Europe has never heard of "Babe" Ruth, of "Al" Capone, or of "Amos 'n' Andy." But it is real familiar with Ford, Hoover, Pershing and Charles Chaplin, who, in the order named, topped the list of popular Americans in a contest conducted by European newspapers to establish the ten best-known of the U. S.

Charlie ran away with Lindbergh in the contest, and out-voted Edison, Dempsey, Senator Borah, Colonel House, and even John D. Rockefeller.

Critical Cuss

Eddie Conrad and Jack Benny were talking about rival comedians in Hollywood, confides Walter Winchell.

"Howz Frank Fay doing out there?" asked Conrad.

"Very good," was the retort, "but not nearly so good as he thinks he's doing."

Tank Showmen Crawfishing on ERPI Payments

Small town exhibitors are reported seeking suspension of equipment payments from "Erpi" during the dog days of summer. They are understood to be advancing claims that business is usually bad in the warm weather, making it impossible to meet the payments as per committments.

Western Electric is reluctant in discussing the situation. It is understood, from other sources, that there is little likelihood that exhibitor requests will be granted.

White Not in Charge of "U" Shorts, Jr. States

There is no truth to report that Jack White is to take charge of short subject production for Universal, according to Carl Laemmle, Jr.

Uncle Sam Leaves Coast Bad Chillun' All Well Spanked

Hollywood—Another schoolboy prank has been paid for, and Hollywood once again breathes easier, but feeling very much "in the red" after the tanning which Uncle Sam gave to certain bad little boys and girls for telling big, black fibs.

It all came about several years ago, when producers, directors, stars, cameramen, and whatnot, suddenly became ill with receipt of income tax blanks, and, calling in a few tax "doctors," sought relief in the form of an operation on their government payments. The surgeons were quite successful in most cases, and, taking plenty-large fees, departed.

Recently, however, eagle-eyed scouts of Uncle Sam, mailed a batch of pink slips to some of the biggest names in Hollywood. telling them that the tax "doctors" were nothing short of quacks and a bad job had been made in filing the returns. A most embarrasing situation to say the least, when the film folk were all hailed into court and ordered to pay up—or else. They paid.

The Insiders' Outlook

EXECUTIVE discord is on the wing again.

Fermenting in New York, the pot will boil over in Hollywood, unless the chain of circumstances linking the facts together cracks.

The rumblings pertain to a man who is considered rather an important gink out in the land where they make 'em. His studio has been identified with a number of successes in the past several years, a fact which you might think would save his scalp when the political headhunters hit the trail. Only in this case, the reverse may easily prove itself to be true.

This production executive's success has little to do with the case. What appears more to the point is the fact that he has politically crossed the man to whom he is responsible and, in this business, such a fatal mis-step is akin to business hari-kari.

There are a few who know how vigorously the stew has been cooking, but to most of the trade the severance of this chap's official head from his official body —if it does finally happen—will occasion a few long whistles and a couple of arched eyebrows. At least.

Chains By Another Name

Furrowed brows in many New York offices these days. Sam Katz is having plenty to do keeping pace with the Warner expansion. R-K-O is looking in on the Warner moves in Wisconsin. Fox, likewise, doesn't propose to allow Harry, Abe and Jack have too much of their own way in the Middle West. Then, you have Radio invading the Saenger towns in the South; that's something else for Messrs. Zukor, Kent and Katz to ponder over.

Big mystery figure in the present picture is Harley L. Clarke, well known in public utility circles and not so well known in picture circles. Nobody knows which way his ambitions will persuade him to jump.

Next is the box-office situation. Business is not so good. That's plenty of cause for worry in itself. When chains are hooked up in mighty links as they are today and business begins to slide even a little, the effect on the treasury is anything but cheer-inducing.

Add to that the growing legislative antagonism against all forms of chained up business, including theatres, and the reason for those furrowed brows becomes a trifle easier to understand.

Here and there, the sovereign states are sheathing their fists with a coating of steel, ready to grapple with the chain problem. The argument for the independents in industry, as usual, carries the emotional reaction for the underdog.

The result probably will be a series of legislative measures taxing the chains controlled by corporations foreign to the states in which they operate.

Like the foolish ostrich avoiding danger, the industry is burying its head in sand and hopes to circumvent the situation by dubbing chains, circuits. Just who will be fooled by such an obvious procedure is something which THE INSIDERS fail to get.

And So It Goes!

Floyd Gibbons was broadcasting a portion of The Literary Digest prohibition poll wherein enforcement was given the edge by several towns. Seeking comedy relief to climax the figures, he told about a German director, imported to Hollywood last fall, who loafed at his hotel through the winter, receiving his salary check from the studio regularly each Saturday by mail.

Discouraged with idleness, hurt by apparent indifference excepting for the checks, he packed and returned to Germany without notifying the studio. In Berlin his mother insisted he had made a serious mistake. Attention, pictures, megaphones to the contrary, the checks were big. Another few months and the family bankroll would be fat.

Persuaded, and rehearsing explanations and apologies every mile of the return trip, he sneaked into the hotel in Hollywood and registered, prepared to taxi to the studio and use his knees, if necessary, to emphasize his plea for forgiveness.

As he signed the register the hotel clerk handed him eight envelopes, each bearing the studio address. In each envelope was a check for a week's salary, including the week of his return.

Wondering Over Wunder

The induction of Clinton Wunder into the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences—a move laid at the doorstep of Will Hays—still rankles out Hollywood way. The facts leading up to his appointment as director of public relations—that's the title thrown his way—persistently concern the suspicion that Hays is a bit disturbed over the independence in thought and action that prevails in Academy ranks. After all, he carries the crown that dubs him head of the organized industry, which makes his slant on Academy affairs understandable, at least.

A few weeks ago, Empeenews ran the inside yarn of the Wunder situation. The story created an explosion in Hollywood. Anything but a mild one. It resulted in a general scurry to cover. Star chamber sessions within the Academy's portals were ruled out as a result and so another relic of mediaeval times finds itself relegated to the limbo of the useless.

Codes and Latitudes

Not much talk on the coast regarding the code of ethics. There was plenty in the beginning, but the conversationalists have ceased to chatter. The reason might be traceable to the growing opinion in Hollywood that all the latitude required is embraced in the provision of the text which lifts the bars on banned material if it is "done in good taste."

The Hollywood underground reports that writers and directors are not worrying. They see ways and means of doing what they think should be done without stepping on anybody's toes. In the meantime, the first crop of pictures made under the new regulations should be ready for theatres July 1 and thereafter. What they will contain is a matter for subsequent checking and should prove an extremely interesting commentary on producer pledges and studio behavior.

We Wonder—

If a certain big league executive will ever sign that contract binding him to the company he now heads? Or will he get a new hatrack for himself elsewhere?

Why Doug Fairbanks really made that hurried trip to Yurrop?

Just who those "startling" players to-be-announced are on the Paramount roster?

If, now that Waddill Catchings has stepped out of Goldman, Sachs & Co., he won't become a figure of even greater importance at Warner's? Has done much for the three musketeers, you know.

W. E. Not Hopeful for Foreign Patent Pact, Despite Zukor Efforts Abroad

A Chinaman's Problem

Did M-G-M wilfully take Shuberts' "Shirt" and give it to Lawrence Tibbett, the big uproar singer from New York? And, if so, what damages are Lee and Jake entitled to for their loss?

The Shuberts, like all good Chinamen, believe in that old adage, "No payee, no shirtee," and with that thought in mind, hied themselves to the Supreme Court in search of an injunction to restrain M-G-M from continuing the showing of "The Rogue Song," in which, it is claimed, M-G-M pirated an old Shubert musical number. The legit producers charge "The Narrative," in the Tibbett film, was taken from their "Shirt," used in 1924.

Robbins Music Co. is named co-defendant.

Feels German Group Cannot Deliver—Otterson Slated to Sail Shortly

Even though Adolph Zukor is credited with laying the groundwork in Berlin, Western Electric is not particularly hopeful that amicable settlement of the patent situation can be effected. Zukor returned Wednesday from Europe.

This is the inside and official attitude of "Erpi" officials, who still cast doubt on the authority of the Tobis-Klangfilm groups to deliver any deal which they say they can make.

Zukor, who returned to New York on the Europa yesterday, feels he has made considerable progress toward a solution of the situation which has kept all American companies except Warners out of the German market since the advent of sound. He went abroad as the authorized representative of all Western Electric licensed companies except the Warner organization to see what he could do to iron out the troublesome and complex problem. John E. Otterson has been planning to sail for the other side in a few weeks, but won't until he has had opportunity to discuss Zukor's efforts face to face with the Paramount chief.

In the meantime, Berlin opinion strengthens the reports published exclusively in Motion Picture News that the settlement, if one is reached, will result in victory for Tobis-Klangfilm and the barring of Western Electric from Germany, while American companies will secure the first wedge in that market via a licensing arrangement with the German patent owners.

W. E., on the other hand, takes the attitude that this slant is all wet.

Big Time Stuff

Paramount either put over a prize publicity stunt or received a great break in Saturday Evepost, when Norman Rockwell's painting showing Gary Cooper being made up for "The Texan" appeared on the cover of last week's issue. The tie-up was complete, even to the call board, on which was scribbled the title and the name of Director John Cromwell.

So far as the record shows, this is the first time that the invulnerable cover of the Post had ever gone that way. Gossipers in the trade are still wondering whether it was a deliberate tie-up, or whether the editors of the magazine had one slipped over on them. The Post was asked for permission to reproduce the cover, but turned down Motion Picture News on the ground that this was never done. Infallible rule and that sort of thing.

Mayor Orders Tear Bombs for Sunday Shows

Dover, O. — Rather than obey Mayor William Stuckey's orders to use tear gas bombs to stop Sunday shows at the Bexley, Police Chief William Byers resigned the office. His successor removed the hinges of the locked booth and arrested two operators and five other employes of the theatre who pleaded not guilty to charges of violating the "blue" law. They were held in $100 bond each for the grand jury. A local electrician asserts that city officials requested him to cut wires to the theatre prior to the mayor's orders. The management intends to carry the case to the state Supreme Court, if necessary.

RKO Small Town Invasion On With Ossining Lease

R-K-O's theatre activities extended to small towns is seen in reports that negotiations have started for a house in Ossining, N. Y.

According to report, an Ossining resident with business property on the main thoroughfare is negotiating with Joe Plunkett's staff at R-K-O on a plan whereby the owner will build the house and lease it to the film company for a term of years.

This direct invasion of a community classified as a "small town" in contrast to key points is held to be a definite indication of R-K-O's intention to get control of a widespread and well-diversified chain of houses.

Pantages Opening Delayed

Hollywood — The Pantages, slated for premiere May 29, will throw open its doors on June 4. Fox West Coast will operate.

German Circles Skeptical Over Sound Film "Peace"

Berlin—Film circles here are skeptical over a "sound picture peace" between American and German electric interests. The patent fight is only one side of the case, it is asserted, there still being the monopoly fight to be waged. The industry here is fearful of a sewing up of the situation in event the American Klangfilm-Tobis settlement is effected.

Under the terms of the agreement of the German firms, Klangfilm is to manufacture all apparatus, while Tobis will make only recording equipment and produce pictures.

Steffes Adamant

Minneapolis—Unless given a satisfactory explanation of the alleged connection of the Hays organization with published charges that he wanted Publix to give him a theatre, W. A. Steffes, chairman of Allied States Ass'n's contract committee, insists he will not participate in future conferences.

Electrics Urging Overseas Films To Sell Devices?

Ambitions of the electrics to sell reproducers abroad are seen a dominant factor in influencing important producers to extend activities to foreign countries.

Since the extent to which they capture markets abroad is contingent largely upon the number of theatres installed, those in the know are inclined to place considerable credence in the inside reports that the big electrical groups are swinging all the weight at their command to get producers started in their own or leased studios.

War of Multi Linguals Begins With Para. Plan

Ten foreign-language features and 72 shorts are included in Paramount's line-up for 1930-31, with plans completed for production of multi-linguals in every European country of importance. Pictures are to be made in French, German, Italian, Spanish and Swedish. The Hollywood and New York studios will co-operate with the studios abroad.

Foreign-language features in the new line-up are: Three in Spanish, two French, three German, one Italian and one Swedish. Some of them are foreign-language versions of English-speaking talkers, while others are being made with original casts. The shorts are: 52 in French, 11, Spanish; three Italian; two German; two Swedish; one Hungarian and one Japanese. Exhibitors in the United States who cater to a foreign-language clientele, may book the pictures also.

Jetta Goudal Recuperating

Fox and R-K-O, Aroused by "U" Buy in Wisconsin, Warring for Warner Scalp

Spirit Stuff

Hollywood — The hunt for story material often unearths some funny slants. For instance, all Hollywood knows about the producer who heard that Victor Hugo wrote great stories and sent a scout to Los Angeles to talk to Hugo who was reported running a restaurant as a sideline.

Eugene Walter at Pathe hit upon a new one recently. A New York firm of story brokers forwarded him a list of available material. On it were the names of two well-known authors who had died during the year.

Walter wired East, asking where he could communicate with the story scribes. The agents replied:

"You might try Conan Doyle."

Paramount Victor In Long Fight for Canadian Chain

Deal of Paramount Publix for control of the Famous Canadian Corp. has been declared operative, following deposit of more than the required 2,500,000 shares and voting trust certificates under the stock exchange plan. Paramount is giving four of its shares for every five of the Canadian company. The Montreal Trust Co. has been requested to issue as fast as feasible, stock in exchange for the Canadian shares.

The deposit of the required number of shares climaxed a bitter fight which has been waged since Paramount first made its offer of acquisition. The matter has been referred to the Canadian Parliament and civil and criminal court action has been promised by the Premier in event the combines law has been violated.

Tom Thumb Golf Racket Socking K. C. Business

Kansas City—Kansas City neighborhood houses are being faced with a new form of competition this summer with the rapid spread and popularity of the Tom Thumb golf courses. With approximately seven in operation within a radius of ten square blocks and more being started nearly every day, theatre managers are watching their patrons heavily patronizing this new sport.

One circuit manager declared that Tom Thumb links are hurting patronage and that with the addition of each new course the slump becomes more noticeable. More than ten courses are now in operation on the city's south side and each is packed to capacity whenever weather permits.

All Three Crashing Each Other's Towns—Plenty of Sparks Coming

Milwaukee—With Warners assuming much of the spotlight in theatre situation in Wisconsin and L. K. Brin and Universal fading out of the picture, Fox is determined to retain its control of the state with R-K-O also working to obtain a foothold. The situation is pretty hot.

Universal's seven Milwaukee and four state houses will swing to Warners June 15, according to Spyros P. Skouras. Theatres include the Downer, Venetian, Riviera, Lake, State, Juneau and Kosciusko in Milwaukee; the Venetian and Rialto at Racine; Kenosha at Kenosha and Sheboygan at Sheboygan.

In addition to the Universal theatres, Warners have purchased three theatres of the L. K. Brin Enterprises at Appleton, Neenah and Menasha.

Fox Digging In

Fox, it is reported, is dickering for the Parkway and Eastwood in Madison. The former is leased by Brin and the latter by Madison business men. Warners are out of that town, although Fox now operates the Strand in that city.

R-K-O, operating the Orpheum in Madison, has taken a long-term lease on the Capitol there. This theatre is controlled by Oscar Bachmann, Walter Schroeder and Thomas Saxe, all of Milwaukee. By this transaction, R-K-O attains control of almost half the theatre seating capacity in the city, since the Orpheum and the Capitol together contain approximately 4,500 seats.

Warners, through the acquisition of the Milwaukee Universal houses, will have a combined seating capacity of more than 15,000 in Milwaukee alone, including the new theatre now under construction downtown. It is also reported that Warners are contemplating the erection of a $350,000 theatre in West Allis, a Milwaukee suburb, which is now served by Fox's Paradise exclusively.

R-K-O Gives Libson Chain To McCurdy; Ike Retires

Cincinnati—John L. McCurdy, district manager for R-K-O at Minneapolis, has been transferred here in similar capacity. He will look after the houses here, and in Columbus and Dayton, recently taken over from the Libson interests. McCurdy, who ten years ago was local manager for an independent film company, is studying the situation under Ike Libson, retiring executive head. He assumes concurrently with formal transfer of the properties. No changes are contemplated in present personnel, McCurdy says.

Height of Smallness

A Singer midget with an inferiority complex.

Well, He's a Producer

John Barrymore once took the script of "Peter Ibbetson" to A. H. Woods, the legit producer, according to Sid Skolsky. Woods asked, "What's the play like?"

"O, you wouldn't like it," replied John. "It's full of dreams. It's by a guy named DuMaurier. I'm to play Peter and Lionel is to play Colonel Ibbetson."

"That's pretty good. I can see myself losing plenty. Can't you tell me anything about the play?"

"Well, there's one scene in which Lionel calls me a b——, and I hit him over the head with a club and knock him cold. It's the end of the second act."

"You're on, sweetheart. I'll take it!" shouted Woods.

Writers Turn to Freelancing to Avoid Politics

Hollywood — Latest gag among writers here is to divorce themselves from studios where politics and headhunting usually go hand in hand in favor of offices or workshops of their own in which to do their writing.

Those under contract can't break down the studio shackles and have to continue under the well-grooved, accepted system but others determined to freelance which makes them lone agents in determining when and where they write their stuff.

One of the disciples of the plan is Joseph Franklin Poland who has just finished an original for M-G-M and has opened an office of his own.

Newsreel Parade Catches On in 3 Mid-West Houses

Milwaukee—Thirty-minute newsreel parades are meeting with success in the three Wisconsin Fox theatres where they are being featured. The Wisconsin in Milwaukee was the first Fox house to adopt this policy and is since being featured by Fox theatres at Green Bay and Appleton.

The newsreel parades are featured twice daily and at the last show Saturday nights. They are advertised in newspaper copy by each of the three houses and the copy is changed each day to make mention of some topic treated in the parade.

Fox Movietone and Hearst Metrotone are featured in the parades, which are shown at 12:30 noon and 5:30 P. M. daily.

"Hell's Angels" Packs Air Thrills but Story Disappoints at Coast Premiere

Big Budget

Hollywood — New season's program of Radio Pictures will involve an expenditure of $20,000,000. President Joseph I. Schnitzer declared in a speech closing the R-K-O convention here. In addition to its feature budget, Radio is to spend $2,000,000 on shorts, according to Schnitzer. The R-K-O president said that "Radio City," to be built in New York, is to cost $300,000,000, and be completed in about two years.

Equity Hoping To Force Entry Into W. C. Studios

Actors Equity Ass'n has not abandoned plans to bring about adoption of the Equity Shop in film studios, President Frank Gillmore indicated at the annual meeting of the organization in New York. The fight may be reopened at an early date, it was indicated, the association pointing to the better working conditions on the Coast, which were declared due to its efforts.

In connection with the agency fee agreement, the statement issued said:

"Except for personal representatives who guarantee actors at least 20 weeks' work a year over a period of years, the commission remains 5 per cent a week up to the first ten weeks of a play's run. If the actor desires special services in addition there is an intermediate class of personal representatives who guarantee to give personal assistance to the actor in securing engagements, negotiating salaries and building the actor's future.

"If these services are requested and the salary negotiated is more than $125 a week, these representatives may ask 5 per cent of the actor's salary for the run of the play, but in all cases these special services are only to be rendered when the actor desires them."

The following officers were elected: president, Frank Gillmore; first vice-president, Arthur Byron; second vice president, Florence Reed; third vice president, George Fawcett; fourth vice president, Harley Sadler; treasurer, Paul Dullzell, and honorary president, John Emerson.

Pettijohn Due Soon

Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Hays organization, returns to New York from Los Angeles next week. While there, he worked out a new zoning plan for Southern California in conjunction with a committee of distributors, exhibitors and Film Board members.

Doug Returns from Europe

Douglas Fairbanks returned from his European trip this week and after spending a few days here will leave for Hollywood.

Outlook for Howard Hughes' Ballyhooed Production Seen as Dubious

By WALTER R. GREENE

Hollywood—"Hell's Angels," world-premiering here after thirty-eight months of production and an expenditure of about $4,000,000 in real money, looks dubious for Howard Hughes, the producer.

Leading men and women, who were playing juvenile and ingenue parts when "Hell's Angels" first went into production, swarmed to the opening at the Chinese. They saw a fair story, laboriously long, as the overture to the one phase of the production wherein Hughes got his money's worth and set a peak for thrills that will be extremely costly and difficult to equal.

The real entertainment in the production, which for years has been a by-word in the industry, is in the air sequences. They are de luxe.

Within film memories no production has equalled the Hughes creation in the amount of publicity, printed and spoken, preceding its opening. It has been the stock resort of columnists, humorists, photoplay editors and gossipers when copy or talk ran short.

Atmosphere Authentic

Hughes has a realistic story of the World War from the air angle and has gone to extremes in order to obtain authentic atmosphere throughout. But what was shown on the screen justified neither expense nor time spent in production.

Hughes crossed up the folks by giving them a straightforward story of the war with the air stuff interwoven. There is no doubt of the effectiveness of the air sequences, but these only consume about 20 per cent of the picture's two hours and fifteen minutes' running time. Undoubtedly wholesale cutting will snap up the story whereby it will run faster and smoother than at the opening.

Introduction of the story consumed exactly 45 minutes before anything was shown in the clouds with every one waiting anxiously for the air stuff to start. But when Hughes takes to the air, he presents what are admittedly the greatest thrills ever photographed above the earth. His sky introduction is a sensational air raid on London by a Zeppelin, with the climax showing the burning Zep dashing to earth.

After some time is given to story development again, Hughes presents his awe-inspiring and magnificently staged air battle with 100 planes fighting it out in a sea of clouds. That air battle is the last word in thrills, suspense and realism. It's going to be a long time before any other producer tops that one sequence in the sky.

The atmosphere and correct war background for production have never been equalled, even down to the smallest details. When Germans talk during several sequences, they converse in native tongue; with translation titles flashing on to inform

A Newsreel Birthday

Sound newsreels last week observed an anniversary of their leap into a leading place on theatre programs. It is just three years ago that Lindbergh's epochal flight to Paris was caught by Fox Movietone News. The record of the start of the hop proved what many consider to be the most important individual contribution to the quickened interest of the public in sound as applied to newsreels.

"U" to Distribute Tiffany, Gaumont Films in Canada

Physical distribution of product of Tiffany and Gaumont British Co. of Canada is to be handled in Canada by Universal, effective June 30, according to Oscar Hanson, general sales manager of Tiffany. Previously Educational has handled Tiffany's physical distribution in the Dominion. Universal has been handling the Gaumont product's distribution and will continue to do so, but sales are to be in charge of Tiffany, which will maintain its sales organization. James Foy, who headed the Gaumont sales, is to be Toronto branch manager for Tiffany.

Gaumont's long-term contract for physical distribution in Canada through Universal was one of the determining factors in the new arrangement, which places physical distribution of Tiffany through Universal in the Dominion. As Tiffany's contract with Educational was expiring and the firm wanted to consummate the deal to handle Gaumont in the Dominion, the switch was made. Gaumont controls "Journey's End" in Canada, which also was a big factor in swinging the deal.

Wobber Quits Publix to Head Para. Western Sales

San Francisco—Herman Wobber is not out of Paramount, as first reported. He is, however, severing duties with Publix to become general representative in all Western States of Paramount's distribution.

Wobber, an old reliable in the Zukor organization, was coast chief for the distributing department for eighteen years. He relinquished those duties a year ago to become director-general for Publix in this section.

The switch was announced by Sidney R. Kent at Paramount's western sales convention. The 'Frisco session was a rehash of the Eastern meetings.

Anna Nilsson Plans Return

Hollywood—Lying in a local hospital with a broken hip held in a plaster cast, Anna Q. Nilsson is mapping plans for her return to the screen next winter.

Radio Films Being Broadcast by 30 Television Stations Throughout U. S.

Steady Development of New Field Predicted to Rival Radio

Thirty television stations are now in regular operation, broadcasting radio movies from 20 strategically located spots throughout the United States. This indicates a steady movement toward the development of this field, which, it is predicted, will occupy as important a niche in the air as that now held by radio, boasting of an audience of 52,000,000 in this country alone.

The country is overrun with radio broadcasting plants, it is indicated by copyrighted results of a survey made by the George F. Cram Co., Indianapolis, which reveals the existence of 623 stations in 438 U. S. towns, 77 Canadian stations in 42 spots, 14 in Mexico operating in nine cities, and 13 in five Cuban cities.

Columbia and National, only two units operating coast-to-coast hook-ups, have a combined total of 134 stations. Columbia, owned and operated by Paramount-Publix, now controls 60 in as many key spots, while RCA's National Broadcasting system has 74 in 73 towns, the survey shows.

A complete compilation of the short-wave television stations (standard television scanning, 48 lines, 900 R. P. M.) follows:

Param't Plans "Fighting Caravan" in Wide Measure

Hollywood—Early in July, Paramount will launch production of its first wide-film Western story, "Fighting Caravan," by Zane Grey.

Television Far Away, De Forest

While practical television may be just around the corner, "it's a mighty long corner and there's lots of wind blowing around it, insofar as theatre owners are concerned," according to Dr. Lee DeForest, who told a group of Midwestern exhibitors recently that television for the home is imminent, but he predicted that it will have little or no effect on theatres.

DeForest believes that "within 10 or 20 years probably we shall be sending motion pictures by wire instead of by film."

Wide-Film Effect With 35mm Stock Makes Its Bow

Wide pictures with 35 mm film is the newest development to wrinkle the brows of technicians who have been struggling these many months to arrive at standard—and economically sound—measurements for the industry.

Complete elimination of wide film's two toughest problems—special-projector costs and a general mechanical changeover—is claimed for the new process, which, sponsored by Arthur Tobin, made a sudden and unheralded appearance this week in New York, where Eastern film and technical chiefs attended a demonstration.

Following the showing, MOTION PICTURE NEWS made a poll of executives who witnessed the performances. Those interviewed were unanimous in their praise of the process. They claimed it might offer the solution to present wide film problems, one executive stating "a careful study of the device while in operation, from all angles, revealed less distortion that is found with most present day wide film processes."

The process uses a special camera and standard 35mm. stock. A special lens is the only requirement for the projector, and a wide screen the only other equipment necessary.

Newspaper Planning Television Station

Washington—Permit to erect a television station in Milwaukee was granted the "Milwaukee Journal" by federal radio commissioners, who authorized operation in the 2,800 kilocycle television channel, in the continental short-wave band. The paper now operates broadcasting station WTMJ.

Coast Executives Calm On Television Progress

Hollywood—Developments of television are being watched by eastern production forces rather than Coast executives, who still are struggling with sound. The general feeling is that the introduction of television will be more orderly than the sound onrush, which turned the industry topsy-turvy.

Television to Be Theatre Aid, Declares Wizard

Schenectady — Development of a new technique of entertainment as the result of successful television demonstration in Proctor's theatre here is forecast by Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson, General Electric radio wizard, who developed the set used.

An orchestra conductor led the theatre musicians from the screen, although he was located in the laboratory a mile away, and the singing of a vaudeville player was broadcast to the theatre, synchronizing from the screen with the work of his stage partner.

"Whether the general public will be enough interested or get enough satisfaction out of television to make it possible to commercialize home sets for television is still to be seen," said Dr. Alexanderson. "A new technique of entertainment will be required. As a supplement of broadcasting it can make a reality of the radio drama. Political and educational speakers may use it as a medium and entertaining personalities like Will Rogers will tell the latest wisecracks and comment on the news of the day. It is likely that every moving picture theatre in the large cities will have to be equipped to give a short television act."

Visualizing the future, the inventor forecast the day when an airplane with news reporters will fly to see whatever is of interest, and theatre audiences will be able to see just what he sees.

Benefit to Industry Is Visualized by Laemmle

"Not having seen the recent television demonstration at Schenectady, naturally I cannot comment upon it first hand," said Carl Laemmle. "Until television is perfected to the point where pictures of standard screen size can be projected in theatres with absolute clarity and the same effectiveness in every way that is now achieved through present sight and sound devices, I would regard it as a stunt—wonderful, to be sure, but nevertheless a stunt.

"However, anything in the nature of a great technical advance, such as television may prove to be, cannot help but benefit the motion picture industry as a whole."

Merger of RKO, Pathe, Denied at Sales Meeting

Chicago—Emphatic denial that there is a deal in negotiation for the merger of Pathe with RKO was made by Pathe executives to the company sales force at the convention here.

Rumors have been shunted about for months that a merger was imminent. It is definitely known that negotiations were conducted between principals for both concerns early in the year, but for reasons which have not been made public or hinted from sufficiently responsible sources to warrant publication, the plan was abandoned.

Last of Pathe Meets Wind up In San Fran.

San Francisco—Pathe on Thursday concludes its fourth and final sales convention of the series which began last week in New York. E. B. Derr and Phil Reisman were principal speakers, with J. H. MacIntyre, division manager, presiding. Reisman, his assistant, J. F. McAloon, and E. W. Ballantyne, manager of exchange operations, attended the four sessions, which were featured by talks made in a convention film of 13 reels, offering means for the sales force to get acquainted with the studio executives and players.

Pathe Considering Plan To Make Talkers Abroad

San Francisco—Plans for production of Pathe talkers in England and possibly on the Continent are reported under consideration in discussions between Thomas S. Delehanty, vice-president of P. D. C., Pathe's English subsidiary, and E. B. Derr, executive vice-president of the Paramount company.

Old Lasky Act to Be Made As a Talker by Pathe

Hollywood—Talker version of "Lasky's Beauties," one of the acts produced by Jesse L. Lasky before he entered pictures, will be released as "The Beauties," second Rainbow comedy on the Pathe 1930-31 list. John C. Flinn has assigned direction to Frank Davis.

Valley City, N. D.—Forbidden by his associates to sell his two theatres here to Paramount Publix, John Piller is planning six additional North Dakota theatres.

"Committee" Urges "New and Able Leadership" in Surprise Maneuver

Reported secret interest of H. J. Yates, head of the laboratory combine known as Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., in the bomb-like fight which broke this week for control of Pathe looms as an added mystery in an already mysterious outbreak. MOTION PICTURE NEWS learns reliably that Yates is concerned with the plans and efforts of a group headed by R. A. Rowland, former general manager of First National Pictures, Inc., which is attacking Joseph P. Kennedy's management of Pathe, and calling for proxies from preferred stockholders "to provide new and able leadership of the corporation."

Pathe's forty-nine percent ownership of the stock of the DuPont-Pathe Film Manufacturing Co. is regarded in well-informed quarters as possible reason for Yates' reported interest. Added to this is the rumor that Setay, an investment corporation headed by Yates, owns a substantial amount of Pathe stock.

Summarized, the explosion, starting in the form of an attack on the Kennedy regime addressed to preferred stock holders of Pathe as paid advertising in New York daily newspapers, was debated along film row as a question:

Are Dick Rowland and Joe Kennedy being pitted against each other in a fight for control of Pathe by two groups of bankers battling with the usual financial weapons of appeals for proxies?

The question loomed as a quick aftermath to the opening gun in another stockholders' war, and found added cause for bewilderment in the fact that some of the ammunition was wet.

Information from reliable sources is that the committee headed by Rowland is determined to make a fight to the finish, which, if true, promises another orgy of laundry-and-linen for the industry before the final vote is counted.

New York dailies on Tuesday published as paid advertising a statement signed by Rowland, as chairman of a "committee" which alleged, among other things, that "it is of the utmost importance to the corporation (Pathe) and all its stockholders that immediate action be taken to provide new and able leadership of the corporation." Other names signed to the statement as members of the committee were Robert W. Daniel, chairman of the board of the Liberty National Bank & Trust Co.; Frederick W. Ryan, secretary of McCombs & Ryan; W. V. A. Waterman, of Waterman, Bonn & Co., members of the New York Stock Exchange, and Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantine, as counsel.

Inventor Appeals Technicality in Stanley Co. Suit

Philadelphia—Appeal of the alleged technicality which prevented a monetary damages award has been taken by Mrs. Mary Hallock Greenwalt in her suit against the Stanley Co. for alleged infringement of patents held by her in the employment of light-color play in connection with music. The case probably will be heard by the U. S. Court of Appeals in fall. The district could held that Mrs. Greenwalt is the inventor of the interpretation in colored light of musical themes, but that a technicality prevented award of damages. This latter feature of the decision is being appealed.

Meanwhile decision has been reserved at Wilmington upon suit for alleged infringement of sound reproduction patents by the Stanley Co. This, in reality, is a suit against Western Electric, whose equipment is involved.

Associated British Cinemas, second in importance to the G. B. group and controlled by John Maxwell, may swing to the Warners. The Ostrers, understood to have been tipped off that Maxwell's recent visit to New York was timed to discuss the possible sale to the Warners, came over ready to guarantee the Warners proper representation over their English circuit without the necessity on the part of the former to buy a competitive chain.

Disposition of the deal is hanging fire. The next step will probably be taken when Harry M. Warner arrives in London the end of June.

London—The Warners are determined to secure a slice of British exhibition. If the deal for the Maxwell theatres, 100 strong, fails to go through, other means will be adopted, it is understood here.

Whether or not the Warners are behind the theatre buying activities of Arthur Clavering, managing director for the company in Britain, is not definitely established. It would appear logical, however, that this is the case. Clavering has been proceeding quietly in his purchases in association with Sir Gordon Craig, of New Era Films.

Acquire 62 Houses in Past 14 Months; Expansion Program Continues

With 62 theatres added to the chain throughout the United States and Canada during the last 14 months, Radio-Keith-Orpheum is continuing its expansion program. During the week announcement was made of the acquisition of the Bratter-Pollack circuit in New Jersey, New York and Connecticut. Negotiations now are understood to be under way or completed for the Wilmer & Vincent chain in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and an interest in the Robb & Rowley circuit of Texas.

Theatres of the Bratter-Pollack chain will be taken over July 5. They are: the Rahway and Empire, Rahway; Rex, Irvington; Lincoln, Arlington; Ritz, Lyndhurst, in New Jersey; Embassy, Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., and the Pickwick and Playhouse, Greenwich, Conn.

R-K-O recently started its southern expansion through acquisition of the Interstate chain from Karl Hoblitzelle. Now a part of the R. & R. circuit is declared being sought.

Wilmer & Vincent have at various times been reported dickering for sale of their chain to Warners and R-K-O. This deal now is regarded as set.

Tent Showings Of "Ingagi" Set To Buck Publix

Minneapolis—Tent show opposition to Paramount Publix throughout the Northwest is the answer of local distributors of "Ingagi" to the alleged Hays association ban on the picture. Publix and Radio-Keith-Orpheum tried to book the picture, it is said, but Congo Pictures cancelled showings after May 10. Exhibitors here point to alleged faking in producer-distributor pictures such as "Weary River" and others, in fighting charges of alleged faking in this picture.

Trenton Blues Run Wild; Axe Swung at Films

Trenton, N. J.—Advocates of "blue" Sundays went cockeyed this week and brought such pressure to bear on the police that all available members of the force spent last Sunday taking the names of citizens "violating" the law, passed in 1798. They will be called before the Grand Jury, it was announced.

The previous Sunday, rebelling at the tyrannical restrictions of the "Sour Sabbath" law, passed when the New Jersey capital was only a cross-roads tank town, the merchants opened their shops and did a brisk business. The eleven picture houses followed suit in the afternoon. The police did nothing, but the ministers went into action during the week and served the public safety commissioner with a demand that he enforce the law. So on Sunday the cops got busy. However, instead of making arrests, they merely took names of those making purchases of any kind.

The lowdown on the motives of the ministers is tipped off in the following excerpt from a story in the New York Times:

"It is generally understood that the ministers really have no objection to Sunday sales by delicatessen shops, confectioneries and similar establishments and that they are not aiming to prohibit such pastimes as Sunday golf and Sunday tennis, although they might do so if they carried the campaign to extremes. The general opinion in Trenton is that they seek only to compel the motion picture theatres to remain closed on the Sabbath because they are a menace to church attendance."

weeks to go on production, is having the story completely rewritten, and is reported to have given the air to Marshall Neilan as director and Benjamin Glazer as supervisor.

She dismissed the cast, taking a chance of getting them back when the picture is restarted June 15. It is probable that most of the film shot so far will be junked. The revised story calls for a 22-day shooting schedule. Her new director hasn't been chosen yet.

Fox May Force Wide Film Issue, Order For 40 Grandeur Cameras Indicates

Once is Plenty for Us

Hollywood — Dorothy Mackaill once told Ruth Bierry, fan scribbler: "If at first you don't succeed in matrimony, there is no reason why you should not try, try again."

"Why?" Miss Bierry asked.

"Because marriage is a matter of human nature—not love," replied Dorothy. "You can fall in love a dozen times — and fall out again. But only one time, or possibly twice, can you find a nature so compatible with your own that you can live with it forever. There are few natures which, combined, spell contentment for more than a short period!"

Firm Prepares for 70 mm Films Despite Alleged Pact to Lay Off

Fox is going ahead with plans for wide film pictures and is set on 70 mm as its standard, in what may prove a coup to force that as the uniform size of wide film. This is shown by the manufacture at Syracuse of 40 Grandeur cameras in work at the J. W. Wall Machine Co. here.

Presumably, there has been a truce called on wide film, chiefly because its general introduction would involve an outlay of $30,000,000 for the industry, now burdened by the cost of sound installations. However, manufacture of the cameras, indicates that Fox intends either to force the issue or be on the ground floor when the wide film development is ready for introduction.

First Batch Ready

The Grandeur process is controlled by General Theatres Equipment, Inc., which also controls Fox. It is possible that the parent company feels that with the 1,200 theatres under its control it can force the general adoption of large-size pictures through its strategic position. Competitors, it is said, would be forced to go to wide film if Fox does, in order to successfully compete with the Fox theatres.

Eight Grandeur studio cameras and four Grandeur field cameras already have been manufactured by the Syracuse firm.

Paramount Publix and other producers have been experimenting with a 65 mm film and there is supposed to have been an understanding between producers to lay off wide film for the present.

And They Hang Pictures!

Irving Hoffman's latest quip, told in the N. Y. Daily News, concerns the case of the two big Australian theatre owners who arrived in Hollywood recently. The purpose of their visit was to arrange for the booking of new pictures in their theatres.

On their second day there they made a tour of several studios. At one they were introduced to the movie magnate, who asked them where they came from.

"From Australia," they replied.

The producer gazed at them in amazement. "You've been here only two days and speak the language already!"

Revival of Allied Theatres of Mass. A Crack at Myers?

Boston—Revived activity by the Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, Inc., after a dormant period of several years, may be attributable to the influence of producer-owned chain organizations moving against the Myers affiliates in New England.

Approximately 75 per cent of the state's houses are declared to be members. In existence for several years, the opening of offices at 60 Scollay Square with J. J. McGuiness as executive secretary is the first move to maintain permanent headquarters.

Heretofore occasional meetings have been held. The organization has, however, been of little interest to most of the exhibitors as formerly operated.

With the establishment of permanent quarters, there has been a decided increase in interest and many new members have joined. The association seeks the membership of both chain and independent theatres and operates solely within Massachusetts. It is not in opposition nor in conjunction with any other existing organization, according to statements of officers and members, but wholly for the benefit of the exhibitors within the state. It is described as a Chamber of Commerce for Massachusetts exhibitors, handling legislation and making itself of value in every way to the exhibitor.

Seeks Repeal of Fight Films Transit Law

Washington—Abolition of the Federal ban imposed upon interstate transportation of prize fight films is provided for in a bill introduced by Rep. Britten (Ill.). In introducing the measure, the congressman called attention to the fact that the present law does not prohibit showing of fight films, banning only their transportation across state borders.

Rembusch States Hays Suit Aims To Kill Monopoly

Indianapolis—Suit for $2,744,250 triple damages of F. J. Rembusch Enterprises and Capitol Amusement Co. versus the Hays organization and a number of its distributor members for alleged boycott, is an effort to break "the monopoly which is seriously injuring independent exhibitors of the country," Frank Rembusch told Motion Picture News over the telephone from Shelbyville.

The two companies involved control 11 theatres in Indiana, two of which are the Capitol and the Rialto, both in this city. Rembusch for years has been a firebrand where contracts with distributors are concerned.

Through the uniform contract system, and because the Hays group controls 95 per cent of the producing companies and 98 per cent of the distribution in the industry, it is in a position to dictate terms to the independent exhibitors, Rembusch said. If the Hays group desires, he continued, it can virtually close independent exhibitors' houses by refusing them pictures or demanding such high forfeits that the exhibitor must close.

Church Mag Turns Deaf Ear on Plea Of Carl Milliken

The attempt of Carl E. Milliken secretary of the Hays organization, to defend charges against the industry which appeared in a series of articles in "Christian Century" proved unsuccessful when Charles Morrison, editor of the magazine, refused to accept Milliken's lengthy statement in defense of motion pictures.

Following a hostile "ex parte" attack by the publication, Milliken authored a paper in which he took exception to the points raised against films by "Christian Century." Morrison returned Milliken's article, however, with a curt note in which he said that the periodical's readers "are not interested in the progress of the motion pictures, as such"; this despite the publication of the attacking articles over a period of many weeks.

United-Gaumont Merger Held Up by Stockholders

London—A terrific battle by stockholders to prevent United Picture Theatres from merging with Gaumont-British has resulted in postponement of the final okay until a committee of five stockholders of United can meet and study other offers for the chain. Associated British is also after the circuit.

Lack of United Front in Chi Seen as Reason for Censor Annoyances There

Lawyer Who Handled "Alibi" Case Says Trade Pulls At Cross Purposes

Chicago—Negligence and lack of co-operation among picture interests are responsible not only for present irksome censorship difficulties, but for the recent adverse decisions of the Illinois courts affecting pictures, it is charged by Myer H. Gladstone, Chicago attorney.

This opinion might easily be one of those things were it not for the fact that Gladstone represented United Artists in the "Alibi" case, which created a lot of fuss here and, therefore, presumably knows what he's talking about.

Gladstone referred to a decision handed down by the Appellate Court on May 1, in the case of "Party Girl" (Tiffany), which held that mandamus proceedings, not injunction, are the proper legal resort of distributors whose product has been denied a permit by the censors. Describing that decision as "inconsequential," however, Gladstone stated that it could never have been rendered if a semblance of accord among local distributors existed, since the state Supreme Court had handed down an earlier decision in the case of "Alibi" in direct contradiction of the lower court's later finding. The Supreme Court held that injunction is the first and proper resort in the exhibition of pictures denied a permit.

Takes Crack at Tiffany

"The Tiffany interests are at fault," Gladstone said, "in that they did not contest the city's Appellate Court action in the 'Party Girl' case. They had merely to call the court's attention to the earlier finding of the higher court in the 'Alibi' case and the Appellate Court would have ruled accordingly. As it was, all Tiffany had to answer was a poor bill of complaint and the decisions which were discredited in the Supreme Court case. Tiffany, however, filed no brief when the case was before the lower court. The city's case remained uncontested and the previous ruling of the Supreme Court was not called to the attention of the lower court at all."

The Appellate Court's finding stands until a similar case is heard, when, Gladstone says, the higher court's decision should prevail over the Appellate Court's ruling regarding mandamus.

The injunction, as a restraining order, is effective immediately. Mandamus is a "last resort" order compelling the authorities to license a production denied a permit, and as such requires time enough to kill a picture's earning power before it is finally obtained, if at all.

Sees Organization Needed

Gladstone believes that an organization of local distributors and exhibitors would solve censorship problems and prevent the recurrence of just such court eventualities as made the adverse "Party Girl" decision possible. In the latter instance, he said, legal talent representing a hypothetical organization of distributors would have called the court's attention to the earlier ruling of the higher court and made the "Party Girl" decision an improbability. He, likewise, believes that the influence of such an organization would be sufficient to "control the political aspects regarding the appointment of a censorship board."

"It seems to me," Gladstone said, "that the distributors in Chicago are not working in accord. They should be well organized, ever watchful of their interests before the censorship board and the courts. The reform element is always on the job, and no results beneficial to the distributors can be expected if their affairs are handled in a slipshod manner as they have been in the past.

"The distributors, with their connections among the exhibitors, ought to be in a position to control the political aspects regarding the appointment of a censorship board. As it is now, the city has turned over the censorship to a narrow-minded reform group in the same manner that the Federal government has turned over prohibition affairs to the discredited Anti-Saloon League."

Bureau Addresses Salesmen

"You are a good salesman because you are a success. You have learned the invaluable lesson that falsehood never sold any merchandise permanently. You have learned that it pays to play square with your customers. You have learned that temporary profits gained by concealing truths or twisting facts are never permanent gains. You have learned that your customer's best interest is your best interest. You have learned that you can best serve your employer by serving his customers. You have learned not to knock your competitor, nor disparage his merchandise.

"That is why you are a good salesman and that is why you applaud the Better Business Bureaus in their fight against the salesman who has not learned these things."
—"An Open Letter to Good Salesmen" in the Bulletin of the Better Business Bureau.

Washington Unit Girds for Fight On Tax, Censors

Seattle—Plans for combatting proposed censorship and admission tax bills understood to be in preparation were discussed at the meeting of the Allied Amusements held here to inaugurate the monthly luncheon of the association. The legislature is to meet in fall. President Leroy V. Johnson and Jim Hone, executive secretary, addressed the meeting.

Howard West for Parties

Hollywood — William K. Howard, Fox director, after a quick trip East, returned ahead of the convention special in order to be on hand for social phases of the convention.

Miss. Exhibs Worried Over New 10% Tax

Jackson, Miss.—With many theatres in the state already suffering from seasonal and general business depression, their owners are considerably upset over intake reaction which they expect will follow enactment of the new 10% tax law on all amusements, due to become effective Sunday.

The new measure, in addition, taxes all gross sales and puts an added levy on chains.

Everybody operating amusement resorts of any type are in line against the measure, which taxes all paid admissions to theatres, public bathing places, dance halls and the like.

Report and payment for each month must be made between the first and tenth days of the succeeding month.

The sales tax is payable quarterly within 10 days after the close of each quarter; the first payment, however, covers only the month of June, 1930, and must be made on or before July 10.

A deduction is permitted for all privilege taxes paid to the State under the provisions of the privilege tax law of 1930 or acts repealed by said law, the deduction being prorated by months in the case of taxes paid prior to the enactment of the 1930 law. A flat deduction of $5,000 for each year is also permitted, which deduction may be prorated to the quarterly payments.

Annual report adjusting the deductions and any erroneous estimates in the quarterly return must be made within 30 days after the close of the calendar year, or the taxpayer's fiscal year, providing he has obtained permission to use one.

Domestic corporations may not be dissolved and foreign corporations may not withdraw from the State without a receipt showing the tax has been paid or that no tax is due.

An additional tax is imposed in the case of individuals, corporations, etc., operating more than five stores in the State, at or from which any tangible property is sold at retail.

Tight Spot for European Exhibs In Sound Costs

Washington—Exhibitors throughout Europe find it difficult to secure sufficient silents, and are hesitant about installing expensive sound devices until they can be sure the additional revenue will offset the outlay, according to Director William L. Cooper of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

At the end of 1929, however, there were 1,670 European houses wired for sound films, and several hundred more are planned for 1930, Cooper states. Most of the apparatus installed is of American origin, but European producers are turning out much equipment in that line, he said.

A gradual disappearance of the preponderant small-size cinemas was evident during the year, the trend being toward larger and more modern houses. The new houses were constructed purposely with a view to the exhibition of sound and therefore more intensive consideration was given to acoustics.

It is estimated that 171 theatres were constructed in England during 1929. An average of about 1,200 new seats was installed in the new theatres, making a total added seating capacity of approximately 200,000. This compares with approximately 70 new theatres in 1928 with an added seating capacity of about 90,000. Approximately 250 theatres were reconstructed during the year in Great Britain.

Aside from the innumerable petty problems involved in the distribution of films, censorship, music rights, and patent litigation, the chief problems of the American film industry in Europe were the language barriers and legislation inimical to the film importer, it was said. This latter problem is probably the more important, inasmuch as it is impossible to foresee market conditions when these indefinite restrictions remain, just as it is extremely hazardous to make financial investments in an attempt to strengthen demand for pictures.

Restrictions Invoked

In some instances, it was stated, it is felt that existing film restrictions have been invoked in order to compel, or at least attract, American investments in local units. In any event, American investments in Europe on film projects, especially on the Continent, are a hazard so long as the film quota or contingent system, with its susceptibility of alteration to the needs of local industry, remains a factor.

There is very little doubt in the minds of European film leaders that the United States will eventually be able to furnish enough satisfactory sound films for European audiences, though the question of production cost of foreign-language films, in its relation to possible yield, induces the thought that America will be unable to compete with European production, it was said. This, however, resolves itself into a matter of bookkeeping and experiment. Attractive play dates will continue gradually to expand, and as new distribution policies attended by reduced overhead expenses enter into the situation, these should contribute to profit in the continental market.

Viewing the outlook as a whole, 1930 gives promise of raising the film business to a new peak of prosperity in Europe. From the American standpoint, Europe should prove to be a distinctly better, though a highly competitive, market, it was said.

A Hollywood Legend

In Carl Laemmle, Jr.'s, excellent chin-ema version of "All Quiet on the Western Front," the grandest of the spellbinding thrillers, to hear Walter Winchell tell the yarn, Raymond Griffith, one of the better Hollywoodmen, has a small part.

He plays the role of the dying French soldier. A legend from the West Coast has it that Laemmle, Jr., sent for Griffith and said: "It would please me greatly if you would play an unimportant role in this film. I want you because I know you will play it right. How much would you want to do it?"

"Just $2,500 a week," said Griffith.

"Oh, we had no such price in mind, Raymond," said the stunned producer: "I couldn't pay that much for a small part."

"Then I'll do it for nothing," Griffith is supposed to have gallantly answered. And, according to the tale-tellers, Griffith worked sans fee.

Only to serve as target for the New York critics, some of them pointing out that "Raymond Griffith, who very recently was a great star, has slipped and is now playing minor roles in pictures."

When almost anyone'll tell you that the very fine movie's outstanding few moments are those supplied by the dying French soldier.

Business Slated To Improve This Fall, Say Experts

While there has been a gradual improvement in general business conditions during the past two months, the Conference of Statisticians in Industry, in its monthly report made public through the National Industrial Conference Board, Inc., "sees no reason to expect any vigorous upswing in business before fall." However, it adds, "if the recent rate of progress continues, the general level of business activity should return to normal by that time." The report continues:

"General business activity has been improving slowly and irregularly during the past two months, but continues below normal, considering the season and the usual year-to-year growth, and far below the levels of a year ago.

"General trade improved considerably in April and early in May, but hardly enough as yet to offset the slackness in the earlier months of 1930 as compared with last year. Distribution of goods by railroads still lags considerably behind recent years. General business, as reflected in commercial loans, check payments and currency in circulation, is relatively low in value but not far below normal in volume because of the generally lower level of prices.

"Current agricultural purchasing power is lowest in some years, but crop prospects indicate that some improvement in agricultural prices is likely before fall. The most unfavorable influence on trade prospects at present is the disturbed conditions and diminished purchasing power of foreign markets. The world-wide and drastic easing of credit at primary sources, however, is a favorable factor for gradual recovery."

Ind'p'ce in Color Sought by Fox; to Train Own Crews

Hollywood—A special corps of cameramen for color photography as part of the regular producing organization will be organized immediately, the Fox conventioneers were told here.

The move is seen as a part of a plan to divorce the Fox organization from outside factors in the use of color. Practically all other studios are using Technicolor today, which means special cameramen have to be brought on the lot to handle the work. Fox apparently intends to do away with this.

The new color process, a development of Kodachrome first developed some years ago by Eastman Kodak, will be known as Fox Nature Color. Equipment to handle it has already been shipped from the East and is being installed by a crew now here from New York.

The camera is special in construction, taking pictures at twice the speed of the ordinary camera. It makes use of two lenses instead of one, and makes two frames simultaneously. The two lenses are colored, one red and one green. The red and green images which appear in the two frames, respectively, are, in the final operation, printed on opposite sides of the color positivo.

Lonsdale to England

Frederick Lonsdale has sailed for a short visit to England, returning from Hollywood, where he wrote his first original for Samuel Goldwyn. Ronald Colman is to be starred. Between now and his return in July, Lonsdale will complete the dialogue and finish production details of the play. On his return, he will direct the dialogue, scheduled to begin late in July.

Kansas Exhibs to Meet

Kansas City—R. R. Biechele, president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas and Western Missouri, announced that the annual convention would be held some time in June. Biechele is calling a meeting of the directors to set a place and date. Salina, Kas., has been suggested for the convention city.

German Units Sign Peace Pact

Berlin—After two years' negotiations between the German Musicians' Ass'n and the Reichsverband (exhibitors' Union), an agreement was signed for general tariff regulations and the institution of a court of arbitration to deal with all economic questions concerning the two organizations.

Ufa Opens New Studio

Berlin—Ufa's new sound-studio at Neubabelsberg is completed. Four recording sets are installed in the centre and each can be switched to any of the four stages.

Return from Europe

Adolph Zukor, Joe Brandt, John Raskob and Douglas Fairbanks arrived from Europe Wednesday aboard the Europa.

Clarke Tells Convention Fox Will Not Sell Holdings; Important Buys Planned

Franklin Honored

San Francisco—Motion pictures have been officially recognized as one of California's basic industries. They will have a representative for the first time on the directorate of the State Chamber of Commerce, Harold B. Franklin, president of the Fox West Coast Theatres, being the new chief director.

Walsh Hopes to Nick Roxy for New Automobile

Hollywood—Whether Roxy knows it or not, he is in line to buy a new automobile for Raoul Walsh, according to Walsh. Some time ago, when the Walsh-directed "Cock-Eyed World" broke the Roxy Theatre record, Roxy waxed enthusiastic. In front of several witnesses, he agreed to present Walsh with a new car if the latter ever gave him a picture to beat the "Cock-Eyed World" gross at the house.

Walsh is now in Wyoming directing "The Big Trail" for Fox, with picture already spotted to open at the Roxy late in August. Walsh figures the production will easily top the present house record, and expects Roxy to come through with his promise for the new machine.

Fanchon to Handle Vaude For Entire Fox Circuit

Los Angeles—Fanchon and Marco have taken over presentations of all theatres in the Fox string. This means the Fox Booking Offices will be amalgamated with the F. and M. offices in Los Angeles with an office in New York maintained under Jack Loeb.

Kutinsky Becomes Theatre Scout; In Field for Fox

Morris Kutinsky has been relieved as division manager for Fox in Northern New Jersey and will hereafter act as theatre scout for the eastern division.

Baxter in "Renegades"

Hollywood—Warner Baxter will play the principal role in "Renegades," an original by Jules Furthman. Victor Fleming will direct for Fox. Kenneth MacKenna, J. M. Kerrigan and Mitchell Harris also are in the cast.

Buckley Makes Coast Trip

Hollywood—An enthusiastic visitor to the Fox convention is Chris Buckley, Harmanus Bleecker Hall, Albany, who plays Fox product first run.

Grainger Increases Company's Gross 400% in 5 Years; Promotions Slated

Hollywood—Important purchases in various fields "to retain Fox leadership" is planned by Fox Film Corp., President Harley L. Clarke told the sales convention here this week in assuring his organization that none of the company's assets will be sold.

"At no time and under no circumstances will we sell or relinquish any branch or subsidiary of the present Fox company or its holdings," he asserted.

James R. Grainger, general sales manager, has increased the company's gross 400 per cent in the last five years, it was brought out at the meeting, which winds up here Saturday. Grainger's plan during the coming year will result in promotion of seven exchange managers to home office duties, with consequent stepping up of worthies all along the line.

Chicago and New York Regional Meets Planned

Hollywood—Regional conventions will follow the annual Fox meeting. These are scheduled at Chicago, June 4 and 5, and New York, June 6 and 7. The delegates entrain Sunday night. James R. Grainger and others will fly to New York after addressing the Chicago meeting.

Balsly Gets Post

Hollywood—Lee Balsly, formerly with Universal, has been placed in charge of the Fox accessory department.

Roxy and the Fox, B'klyn Switch to Day and Date

Roxy in New York and the Fox in Brooklyn are now operating on a day and date policy with all Fox pictures. The switch started with "The Arizona Kid."

Money Names In '29 Mainstays of Fox 30-'31 Lineup

Hollywood—Mainstays of the Fox program of 1929-30 are to furnish the major portion of the 1930-31 line-up, augmented by a number of newcomers.

This is emphasized by the new list made public at the annual sales convention of the company here. It shows that Will Rogers, Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor, Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe, Warner Baxter, El Brendel and De Sylva, Brown & Henderson are to be called upon to furnish the major portion of the program, with their

Switch Rogers' Next

Hollywood—Unconfirmed reports state that Fox is again delaying "Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur Court" as a Will Rogers starring talker and that the comedian's next will be a dialogue remake of "Lightnin'," stage play of the late Frank Bacon.

Fox produced a silent version of "Lightnin'" about six years ago.

Eastern Chain in 1 Group Under 6 Divisional M'g'rs.

Fox theatres from the Mississippi to the Atlantic have been consolidated by Harry C. Arthur, general manager of houses in the eastern half of the country.

The plan results in six divisions, divided and managed as follows:

New England .....Herschel Stuart
New York State...Harry D. Goldberg
Brooklyn .....Samuel Rinzler
New Jersey.....H. M. Kendrick
Bronx .....Rudolph Kramer
Midwesco .....H. J. Fitzgerald

The Brooklyn division has been revamped to include all theatres in that part of New York City with Long Island now thrown in. The Bronx division embraces the Crotona, one of the original and first Fox theatres, the Manhattan and houses in Westchester county as far north as Ossining. Goldberg's New York state division embraces 33 houses with more to be added shortly to offset activities by Warners and Publix. Stuart's division, as well as Fitzgerald's, remains unchanged.

As noted, the de luxe theatres in St. Louis, Brooklyn, Detroit, Washington and Philadelphia are to be handled by an advisory board composed of Oscar Oldknow, John Zanft and H. C. Arthur.

New England and N. Y. to Witness Fox Theatre Push

New Haven—An expansion splurge to meet the activities of Warners and Publix in its stronghold is to be launched shortly by the New England division of Fox theatres.

Albany—Fox, according to Film Row conversation, will not sit idly by while Publix and Warners dig into the theatre situation in the northern and western portions of the state.

Harry D. Goldberg, New York state division manager for Fox, is busy surveying a number of towns and is known to have forwarded recommendations for new acquisitions to Harry C. Arthur in New York.

Utica, N. Y.—New York state divisional headquarters for Fox will be moved to Buffalo shortly.

Hollywood Sees Fox Sales Clan Work and Play

Hollywood—The Fox gang did plenty of work while conventioning here, but it wasn't all that way. The crowd arrived Monday morning and was escorted from Pasadena into Los by "Volunteer," the Goodrich dirigible which was, in turn, flanked by a coupla planes.

Monday night was held open for individual wanderings on the part of the boys. They wandered.

Tuesday the delegates attended the boxing bouts at the Olympic Auditorium. Ace Hudkins and Dave Shade were the sluggers.

Then Wednesday, which was designated as Fox-West Coast Night at the Roosevelt Hotel. Harold B. Franklin was the daddy of this function. Formally, it was a dinner-dance.

Tonight (Thursday) is free lance night. The boys will continue their wanderings through Hollywood's canyons.

Tomorrow (Friday) a wow party is slated at George Olsen's club in Culver City.

And on Saturday the week approaches its crescendo, or what have you, with a private party at which Winnie Sheehan will be host. Sol. M. Wurtzel will be honorary reception committee chairman, with duties composed of this and that.

Sunday will be devoted to sleep and the continuation of individual ramblings. The odds have it the boys will spend most of the day up to 6 o'clock, when the Fox special starts East, in snoozes.

Not on the official schedule when the train left New York, but very much present here, was Joe Johnson, former commissioner of public works of New York, who is now a Fox-ite bearing the monicker of executive secretary to Sheehan.

When the east bound train pulled into Cleveland, Izzy Schmertz, Cleveland manager, and Ira H. Cohen of Pittsburgh were there, bags packed for the trek west. David Davidson, Sam Wheeler and Joe Hanna made up the rest of that party.

Many of the boys from the Middle West jumped rattlers from their respective cities and joined the big party in Chicago. This bunch included W. C. Bachmeyer of Cincinnati, Lester Sturm of Detroit, A. Knapp of the same burg, B. L. Dudenhefer of New Orleans, J. H. Huber of Winnipeg, George Landis of Indianapolis, M. A. Levy of Minneapolis and Harry Melcher of Milwaukee. All Clyde Eckhardt had to do was make the hop from South Wabash Ave. to the Dearborn St. station—just a coupla blocks.

When the section pulled into Kaycee on Saturday morning, the following were waiting to hop aboard:

W. E. Scott and R. A. Higdon of Kansas City, Clarence R. Blubaugh of Omaha, H. Gottlieb of Des Moines, C. E. Hilgers of Dallas, Stanley Mayer and H. Reigelman of Des Moines and W. A. Ryan of Oklahoma City.

At La Junta the same night, R. J. Morrison and Ben Dare of the Denver office joined the party.

The boys heard a [illegible] were pictures. "The R[illegible] [illegible]. They were told the company was going to do this one on a scale never before attempted, bearing in mind "What Price Glory?" and "The Cock-Eyed World." Walsh expects to spend six months shooting it.

Lee Balsly got a break. Still fresh on the job as head of the accessory department and almost before he knew it, he found himself on the convention special, Hollywood-bound.

Lots of excitement over the winners of the $75,000 prize which goes to the record-smashing exchange. Jimmy Grainger has the boys hopped up plenty. The competition closes August 16.

Joe Johnson, former commissioner of public works in New York, and now executive secretary to Winnie Sheehan, certainly received a big send-off when he left New York on the Fox convention special. Among those who came to the station to see him off were Charles Brady, Humbert Fugazy, Frank Prendergast, his veteran secretary, George Butler, and Joe Deegon.

Jack Sullivan, in New York for his annual buy of product for Fox West Coast, met the gang as they were leaving.

Other New York stay-at-homes were Oscar Oldknow, who recently became general manager of Fox Theatres, and Harry Arthur, new operating head of Fox houses in the East.

Walter Green, National Theatre Supply Co., vice-president, was another enthusiastic conventioneer at the take-off.

Roger Ferri, who was in charge of arrangements, was the busiest guy in the gang, from the time the special pulled out of New York until the final curtain.

So-Long

Albany — As the Fox convention special passed through en route to the Coast. Alec Sayles, general manager of the C. H. Buckley Theatrical Enterprises, bidding his boss good-bye. Buckley is convention-bound. Jimmy Grainger is the middle figure.

Own Reel in Australia

Hollywood—Australian Movietone News is the latest development of the Fox sound newsreel. The subject is produced in Sydney.

Whopper from Fox

Milwaukee—Fox Midwesco will build a 4,500-seat theatre on Wisconsin Ave. Work is slated to start at once, H. J. Fitzgerald declares.

This will add plenty to the local competitive situation and is another indication how tough the strife between Fox, Warners and R-K-O is getting.

Fox to Expend $30,000,000 on Films and Plant

Hollywood—Twenty-five millions will be spent on production of the 48 pictures on the new Fox program and $5,000,000 on plant expansion, according to President Harley L. Clarke, who is here attending the annual sales convention.

"This is my first visit, since purchasing the Fox interests, to the capitol of the world's motion picture business," he said. "Naturally, I have come to observe and to learn rather than to talk and to direct. But through long and intermittent association with motion pictures I have firm convictions concerning some of the broader aspects of our work.

"I believe that the motion picture industry is the greatest of our public service organizations uniting the highest standards in quality, service and organization. The products of this industry come closer and closer every day to the hearts of the American people than those of any other industry. It is my purpose that we may always serve the American public with an increasingly better type of amusement and provide in one form of another all of the amusements for all of the people. The talking picture is only in its infancy and properly nurtured will grow rapidly into a giant economic force for good. Seldom, if ever has any industry been blessed with an opportunity for directing a force of such rare importance. This is a trust that we will not take lightly.

Working on Improvements

"The Fox Film Corp. will spend about $25,000,000 on next season's production and about $5,000,000 in capital account for additions and improvements for plant structures. The laboratories of both the General Theatres Equipment, Inc., and the Fox Film Corp. are working full blast and in co-operation with others on many devices and processes for better projection, sound, lighting and colors. It is my belief that the industry is entering a new epoch and one in which new heights will be attained in quality and in economic values of its pictures."

Another Legit Player to Films

Hollywood—Spencer Tracy will make his screen debut in Fox's "Up the River," John Ford's next directorial assignment. Tracy, a stage player, was appearing in "The Last Mile" in New York when he was signed by Winfield Sheehan, before the Fox production chief came West.

Jane Keith Signed

Hollywood—Jane Keith has been selected by Alfed Santell, Fox director, for the leading feminine role in "The Sea Wolf." Milton Sills has the title role with Kenneth MacKenna as the juvenile hero.

Green to Remain with Fox

Hollywood—Howard J. Green is writing the continuity on Rube Goldberg's story, "Soup to Nuts." Green's option was taken up by Fox two months ahead of schedule.

Hollywood Turns Out En Masse to Welcome Sheehan

Hollywood—Winnie Sheehan's homecoming!

And what a reception! Staged in a specially constructed rancho setting at the Roosevelt Hotel. Everyone present the invited guests of Harold B. Franklin, Sol Wurtzel, Louis Mayer, Joe Schenck and Irving Thalberg.

The setting cost over $5,000; just how much will not be known for a week when all the bills come in. It represented a California outdoor scene, with orange trees loaded with fruit, massive palm trees, blue sky overhead with a typical tropical moon. Perhaps never before had Hollywood witnessed such a transformation. Jack Schulze, Fox art director, transformed the dining room with aid of 50 workmen.

The several speeches by outstanding figures in the motion picture and California business worlds were highly laudatory and brief. Schenck hit the keynote of the evening in his speech in which he said:

"I did not know, being 3,000 miles away, just what Sheehan did while in the midst of the financial reconstruction in New York, but knowing Winnie as well as I do, whatever he did was fair and just and for the best interests of both the Fox companies and the motion picture industry."

Others pointed out Sheehan's reputation as a square-shooter who is loyal to his friends and workers.

Give Sheehan Jade Figure

Fred Niblo presided as toastmaster and presented Sheehan with a beautiful jade figure indicative of sincerity. Speakers were Harold B. Franklin, Will H. Hays, Schenck, Father Joseph Sullivan of Loyola University, Louis B. Mayer, Harry Chandler, Florenz Ziegfeld, and Joseph Scott.

Rube Goldberg made his first public appearance in Hollywood and scored heavily. Rube encountered trouble in getting under way, however, due to an argument with a prop parrot used for atmosphere. The polly continually gave Goldberg the razz, and Will Rogers later remarked that Rube was the only speaker who had forethought enough to bring a straight man along to the party.

Goldberg provided plenty of laughs, opening with a history of his first picture story which he stated had already been re-written seven times with studio executives still liking it. He explained that he first told the story to Sheehan in New York that the latter liked it and put his okay on the yarn. When Rube told it to Wurtzel the latter expressed his satisfaction but instructed Goldberg to re-write it. When the author explained he had not yet put the story on paper, he claims that Wurtzel told him to write it and then do a re-write!

As his offices were right next to the executive quarters, Goldberg explained that he had heard nearly all conversations during the past few months and had discovered there were only two expressions in Hollywood: the men all said "yes" and the women always said "no."

Goldberg finished his Hollywood stories with the statement that Fox was now producing "The Big Trail" in five different states. The only trouble so far encountered by Walsh, according to Rube, was the fact that song writers walking back from Hollywood kept walking into the scenes of the picture.

Collier Supplies Some Wit

William Collier, Sr., told the gathering about his experience in supervising the dialogue for "Cock-Eyed World." At one time, he was informed that the phrase "Oh, gee" could not be used on account of the censors. When Collier asked for suggestions on a change, they gave him "Oh, nuts" as a substitute.

Al Jolson brought his jubilee singers along to accompany him in three song numbers. Jolson's first remark was "I want to know whether Jack Warner is in the room." He then explained he had just finished three years at Warners and was currently under contract to United Artists. For this reason, he did not intend to pay tribute to Winfield Sheehan but would say something about Joe Schenck, which he proceeded to do aplenty.

Rogers Panics 'Em

Will Rogers goaled the gathering with his few minutes. Rogers carried a sheaf of prop telegrams supposed to have been written by Sheehan from New York to the studio officials. Rogers started with 1898, and gave a humorous history of the business. Everyone present rated the Rogers turn as one of the greatest pieces of humorous expression about the business—and it was later discovered that the cowboy comedian had ad libbed through his whole routine with blank sheets of telegraph blanks for props!

A Dirty Crack

"You say you've come clean from Hollywood?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then you're the only guy who ever has"!!!

Hollywood Notables Crown Winnie Sheehan

Hollywood—Will H. Hays, Louis B. Mayer, Sam Goldwyn, Joseph M. Schenck, Irving Thalberg, Cecil B. DeMille, Flo Ziegfeld and a good many others literally sat at Winnie Sheehan's feet at a dinner given that executive upon his return to the Coast after his long-drawn battle for control of the Fox companies. The function was sponsored by Harold B. Franklin, Mayer, Sol Wurtzel, Schenck and Thalberg and was attended by many of the film colony's great.

work to be bulwarked by J. Harold Murray, Beatrice Lillie, Constance Bennett and others. John McCormack's picture, "Song o' My Heart," also goes into general release.

Headed by Raoul Walsh's "Big Trail," the list includes McCormack in one; Will Rogers in two, one with Beatrice Lillie, one co-starring Gaynor and Farrell, three others starring Miss Gaynor, four starring Farrell, one co-staring Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe in a Raoul Walsh production by Laurence Stallings and Maxwell Anderson, three starring McLaglen, in two of which Fifi Dorsay plays opposite. Lowe and Warner Baxter in a sequel to "In Old Arizona," two starring Lowe, El Brendel in six, Warner Baxter in four, J. Harold Murray in three musicals and one De Sylva, Brown and Henderson musical.

20 Directors to Contribute

Among the directors who will contribute the new schedule are: Frank Borzage, Raoul Walsh, John Ford, David Butler, Victor Fleming, Irving Cummings, John Blystone, Alfred Santell, Benjamin Stoloff, William K. Howard, Borthold Viertol and A. F. Erickson.

Writers of the new vehicles include: Franz Molnar, S. N. Bohrman, Laurence Stallings and Maxwell Anderson, Jack London, Mark Twain, O. Henry, Hal G. Evarts, Owen Davis, Homer Croy, Tom Barry, Maurino Watkins, Rube Goldberg, Ben Ames Williams, Zane Grey and Ernest Pascal.

Many Newcomers

There will be nearly two score of newcomers recruited from the operatic stage, legitimate, radio and vaudeville. Among them are a new tenor, Michael Bartlett and stage players headed by Beatrice Lillie, Rose Hobart, Louise Huntington. From vaudeville came Ted Healy, Luana Alcaniz, Althea Henly, Leslie Mae and the Keating Twins.

The list of 48 productions follows:

"The Big Trail," Raoul Walsh production, written by Walsh and Hal. G. Evarts. The cast is headed by John Wayne, Marguerite Churchill, Tully Marshall, El Brendel, David Rollins, Tyrono Power and Ian Keith.

"Women of All Nations," with Raoul Walsh directing Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe in a story by Laurence Stallings and Maxwell Anderson, with Claire Luce and Luana Alcaniz in support.

"Men On Call," with Edmund Lowe, in a story written for him by Tom Geraghty and directed by John Blystone. The four leading women are Sharon Lynn, Mae Clarke, Leslie Mae and Althea Henly.

"Scotland Yard," starring Edmund Lowe in a screen adaptation by Edward Childs Carpenter of the stage play by Denison Clift. Directed by William K. Howard, with cast

Do You Mean . . . ?

Blame Leo Heatley, New York Journal columnist, for this one:

"He is a well-known playwright, but success has pushed all the fat above his ears, and he was telling some acquaintances just why he is so much like William Shakespeare, when a wag cracked:

"'You and Shakespeare have just one thing in common: you're both dead!'"

Swing to Outdoor Films a Highlight Of New Schedule including Lillian Sand, J. M. Kerrigan, John Garrick and Louise Huntington.

"Renegades," Warner Baxter heading a cast including Kenneth MacKenna, Mitchell Harris, Luana Alcaniz and J. M. Kerrigan. Directed by Victor Fleming from screen play and dialogue by Jules Furthman and novel by Andre Armand.

Warners Refuse to Drop Score Charges; 18-Month Contract Omits Arbitration

10% Cancellation Clause Is Eliminated Also; Prior Run Rights Reserved

Atlantic City—Warners have no intention of abandoning score charges despite exhibitor agitation on the subject, it is emphasized in new contract form drawn up for the 1930-31 season. The firm's 35 new season pictures will be sold on four separate contract forms, the Jolson, Barrymore and Romberg-Hammerstein pictures being sold separately, and the remaining 30 on one form.

The next contract does not provide for arbitration, all claims arising under it slated to be turned over to the legal department. It also eliminates the 10% cancellation feature, and must be lived up to in its entirety at full rentals. The contract is for 18 months, instead of being limited to one year, as is the case with other contracts. Failure of a prior run is not to be considered grounds for refusal to run a picture, the company reserving optional right to serve the exhibitor ahead of prior runs in the contract. This is to protect the firm where the first run is not sold or dates cannot be obtained.

These and other changes in the new contract were outlined at the annual Warner sales convention which is winding up its sessions here Thursday.

Continental Supply Is Warner Subsidiary

Atlantic City—Continental Theatre Accessories is listed as a subsidiary of Warners in the list of 22 controlled companies represented at the Warner convention here.

Others are: First National Pictures, Inc.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Ltd. (England); Continental Lithograph Corp.; The Vitaphone Corp.; Warner Equity Theatres, Inc.; Harms, Inc.; De Sylva, Brown & Henderson, Inc.; Remick Music Corporation; M. Witmark & Sons; Skouras Bros. Enterprises, Inc.; St. Louis Amusement Co.; Stanley Co. of America; Stanley Crandall Company of Washington; Stanley-Davis-Clark Corp.; Stanley-Mark-Strand Corp. Stanley-Fabian Corp.; Brunswick Radio Corp.; Famous Music Corp.; Warner Bros. Broadcasting Station.

The Warner Lineup

Atlantic City—Fifteen roadshow pictures and 20 program offerings comprise the 1930-31 Warner line-up. These are: One Jolson, "Big Boy"; two John Barrymores, "Hamlet" and "Moby Dick"; two Romberg-Hammerstein operettas, one of which is "Viennese Nights"; ten other roadshows, including "Fifty Million Frenchmen," "The Life of the Party," with Winnie Lightner, and George Arliss in "Old English," by John Galsworthy, and ten other pictures.

Originals From "Scribes"

In an announced "effort to establish a new and fertile market for talking picture scripts," Jacob Wilk of Warners' story department has sent to newspapers throughout the land a bulletin asking reporters and other members of editorial staffs to submit scripts and ideas. The request leads off: "For years reporters have threatened to write the 'great American Movie.' Here is their chance." The time limit set is Nov. 22.

Warner Bros. to Hold 4 Regional Sales Confabs

Atlantic City—Beginning Saturday, sales representatives of Warners and its 22 affiliated corporations will hold regional conventions. The following branches will be represented at meetings to be held in New York: Washington, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Boston, New Haven, Buffalo, Albany, New York and New Jersey.

The meetings in Chicago will be attended by delegates from Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha.

At San Francisco, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, Seattle and Portland will be represented, and the New Orleans convention will cover the Charlotte, Atlanta, Oklahoma City and New Orleans branches.

Gleichman Leads Warner Theatre Fight In Ohio

Cleveland—Warner expansion in this territory is to be carried out under direction of Phil Gleichmann, former Detroit showman. Gleichmann has been named district manager for the Warner houses here and at Akron, Canton, Youngstown, Lorain and Mansfield. The company has purchased a plot here from Lee Warren James for more than $1,000,000. A $2,500,000 theatre and building will be erected.

Harms Sues Cincy Theatre Alleging Music Violation

Cincinnati—J. H. McDonald, proprietor of the Tripoli, also known as the Tip Top, has been made defendant in suit filed in United States District Court here by Harms, Inc., of New York, who claim that a copyrighted musical composition was rendered in McDonald's theatre without a license. The music publishers ask for an injunction and judgment for $250 as damages, in addition to attorneys' fees.

Warner Bros. Open New Office in Porto Rico

Atlantic City—Warners have opened a new office in San Juan, Porto Rico.

Nat Liebeskind, Cuban manager, who returned to New York after opening the San Juan office, is attending the convention here.

To Invade All Spots for Outlet, Warners Warn

Atlantic City—Warner pictures will not be kept out of any territory in the United States, with the firm prepared to buy or build anywhere it may be necessary to secure an outlet for its product.

This was the defi sounded here by H. M. Warner, company president, in assuring his organization that the company intends to continue the expansion program on which it has embarked, which has resulted in the acquisition of theatres at an amazing speed.

His speech highlighted the convention, which is winding up here on Thursday, with announcement of the 35 pictures to comprise the new season's line-up. A number of theatre deals slated to be announced were withheld because negotiations are not quite complete.

Two hundred executives from Warners and its 22 subsidiary corporations were on hand for the sessions, which were held simultaneously with sales meetings of First National.

Display New Brunswick Model at A. C. Meeting

Atlantic City—New combination model of radio and phonograph manufactured by Brunswick, which will be featured in all theatres controlled by Warners, is on display here at the First National-Warner conventions and is occasioning considerable comment from the assembled forces.

The machine holds 18 records which play automatically, supplying a total of one hour and five minutes in music.

Warners Award Contracts for Music Building

Warners have awarded contracts for the erection of its new music subsidiaries building at 619 W. 54th St. to the White Construction Co. Frank S. Parker is the architect.

Seek 4 at Santa Barbara

Santa Barbara, Cal.—Seeking to further entrench its holdings in this territory, Warners are now negotiating for acquisition of the city's four houses the Mission, California, Rose and Granada.

Warners' Sales Force Captures Atlantic City

Atlantic City—Led by the doughty Three Musketeers, Harry, Abe and Jack Warner, the convention captured Atlantic City without a struggle.

"The Evening Union" devoted its entire front page to the affair, using layouts and stories in the convention edition. The stunt was the work of A. P. Waxman and his gang of go-getters.

Sam E. Morris, popular vice president and general manager, was wreathed in smiles, as he thumbed figures of the Morris Month drive, a practical testimonial from his men. It's an annual Warner custom and how the playdates roll in.

Spyros Skouras, Warner theatre chief, was on hand to tell of his ambitious expansion plans. Spyros has built up a real organization since taking over the reigns. His scouts surely are busy throughout the country.

George E. Quigley, vice president and general manager of Vitaphone, promised a banner year for Vitaphone Varieties in his message to the delegates.

C. C. Ezell, sales manager, says that Warners' position in the industry will be enhanced and consolidated during the new season.

M. Dreyfuss, who shares with Herman Starr, First National president, in administration of Warner musical enterprises says that the firm next year will continue to scout for the best the musical world has to offer.

Paul J. Swift, Vitaphone sales manager, was plenty busy during the sessions, extolling the quality of Vitaphone shorts.

There were 200 in attendance, representing Warners and its 22 subsidiaries from 45 branches in the United States and Canada and 57 foreign countries.

Special festooning of lamps and posters along the Boardwalk were authorized by the Chamber of Commerce to celebrate the said occasion.

The conventioneers came out of the West on a special train which started at Seattle and picked up delegates at all important keys en route.

Max Milder and J. V. Allan, central and southern and western sales heads, respectively, demonstrated their oratorical ability at Tuesday's session.

Delegates were free to enjoy an evening of leisure on Monday in preparation for the hard work which was to follow.

Tuesday night, the gang got a load of "The Song of the Flame," shown at the Warner.

H. A. Bandy spoke on the great record being made by the Warner sales force in the foreign field. He is helping to work out plans for production of European talkers.

A. P. Waxman had plenty of figures to cite as to the amount Warners is spending to help sell pictures to the public.

Herman Starr, music chief, told of the tremendous strides being made in that field, where Warners is "supplying songs to the nation."

National advertising was gone into in detail by Myer Lesser, president of Blaine-Thompson Co., which has been handling the firm's copy.

What enthusiasm Albert S. Howson expected to draw Thursday when he outlined the new season's product. H. S. Bareford was on the same bill slated to analyze the new contracts.

Word was received from the Coast of the naming of the tallest peak in the Hollywood mountains, Mount Warner, as a tribute to the intrepid brothers, who revolutionized picture business.

Vitaphone put on a lot of dog for the Warner and First National conventions, with 12 shorts playing Atlantic City theatres during the week.

Another radio hook-up also was under discussion. It is a Wednesday broadcast of "Hollywood Songs," over 72 stations of the Columbia chain. Warners has a 45-station National Broadcasting hook-up on Saturday nights.

Lewis Warner is being placed in the theatre department under Spyros Skouras.

Harry L. Charnas, pinochle player (phooey) who, between games, manages to manage the Warners' Greater New York houses, drummed up a game en route from New York and, as usual, took an awful socking—that is, if we can believe the boys.

George Balsdon, one of the Warners' division managers (New York territory), is "among those present," looking great after his recent brief illness, and "rarin' to go."

Lou Brager, the rotund diplomat of Waxman's staff, who proceeded the conventionites by a few days, just to see that everything was comme il faut (there's a mouthful, mister), is one of the busiest men around these parts. He's got plenty to worry about—press arrangements and a million or so other details.

Joe Hummell, who, next to shooting, likes yachting, drove down from New York with Jim Allen. Maybe they had a great time driving, but they didn't brag about it.

Max Milder, the minute he and Joe Hummell got together, sold Joe an idea of a Wop meal with trimmin's. The trimmin's (if you know what we mean) were great, according to reports.

1,000 Is Goal

Atlantic City—One thousand theatres is the goal of Warners, it was stated at the convention. After that figure is reached, the expansion program will be discontinued.

Broadcasting the Highlights of The Convention

Warner Theatre Aggression To Blanket Nation, Convention Told

First National to Have Shorts on New Program to Be Produced by Vitaphone

Both F. N. and Warners To Sell Vitaphone Varieties, Under New Plan

Atlantic City—First National will add short subjects to its 1930-31 line-up, offering complete service to exhibitors. This is the company's first excursion into short subject distribution, the shorts supplementing the 35 features on the firm's program. They will be Vitaphone Varieties. The firm also will distribute Vitaphone trailers.

This was the highlight of the company's annual sales convention, which is terminating Thursday with a banquet, at which the First National force will join hands with Warners in the Renaissance room of the Hotel Ambassador.

Under plans formulated here by Warners, parent company of First National, 400 Vitaphone Varieties will be produced for next season. Sales forces of both companies will sell these shorts, an innovation in distribution.

Combine Annual Drive

As part of a combination sales drive to be launched in August, and to be held during that month every year thereafter, First National will inaugurate a big push with the Warners in what will be boosted nationally as the Warners-First National-Vitaphone drive.

Ned Depinet, general sales manager, delivered a two-hour address on Wednesday and was followed by Gradwell Sears and A. W. Smith, Jr., his territorial sales managers, after whom S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, spoke. A. W. Schwalberg delivered a talk, as did Sam E. Morris, general manager of Warners and mentor-in-chief for First National, and Harry L. Charnas, who is in charge of the Warner theatres on Broadway.

On Wednesday Jack L. Warner discussed product and the new policy which calls for fewer stars and better stories. H. A. Bandy, recently returned from a European sales trip, spoke, as did R. W. Perkins, head of the legal department, and Schwalberg did a repeat on his Tuesday performance, devoting Wednesday's discussion to exchange management.

Lewis and Campeau Signed

Hollywood — George Lewis and Frank Campeau have been signed by Warners for roles in a forthcoming picture. Julia Swayne Gordon was also signed.

"Kismet" for Farnum

Hollywood—"Kismet," the Otis Skinner starring vehicle, will have William Farnum in the role of Jawan. Francis Dillon is directing at First National.

Beaudine East for Warners

Hollywood—Harold Beaudine, film director and brother of the elongated Bill Beaudine, goes East to direct Vitaphone shorts for Warners.

Aid to "Little Fellow" Ordered By Ned Depinet

Atlantic City—The small exhibitor must be kept alive, and every possible break extended to him in order to keep him in business, Ned E. Depinet told the First National sales force gathered in convention here.

Depinet said the little showman is important to the prosperity of the business and stressed the fact that his company will take all measures in its power to carry out this policy. Depinet's stand follows the one taken by S. R. Kent at the Paramount convention held here and the RKO meeting held in Los Angeles.

First National Tripling Capacity of Its Studio

Atlantic City—Tripling of the facilities of First National studios is scheduled, first step in which is an appropriation of $3,500,000, according to Jack L. Warner. Buildings to be completed by Jan. 1, raise the studio total to 132, with an aggregate floor space of 1,500,000 square feet, he says. A new administration building is to contain 500 offices. Several buildings will be for Vitaphone recording, a number of shops and 42 cutting rooms. Sixteen stages will be added to the 12 now in use.

1st Nat'l Plans "College Lovers" as 1930-31 Special

Hollywood — First National will film "College Lovers," from a story by Earl Baldwin as a special on next year's program. Grant Withers will be featured.

Drops Vaudeville Acts

Ottawa—Vaudeville acts have been dropped for the summer at B. F. Keith's.

11 Preparing At First Nat'l's West Coast Plant

Atlantic City—Indicative of an early start on new season's product, First National conventioneers assembled here for the company's sales meet were told that eleven pictures are now in active preparation at the Coast studio and will go into production within the next few weeks. The first will be "Little Caesar," with Edward G. Robinson. Otis Skinner's first all-Technicolor screen starring vehicle is also nearly ready to start, as is Richard Barthelmess's next picture, "Adios," which will be directed by Frank Lloyd. And Jerome Kern and Otto Harbach are supervising casting of "Call of the East."

Four are in production this week. Two will be finished within the next few days, "Widow from Chicago," starring Alice White, with Neil Hamilton; and "Bad Man," with Walter Huston, Dorothy Revier and others. "Queen of Main Street," with Lila Lee, Ben Lyon, Louise Fazenda, Lucien Littlefield and Emily Fitzroy, is about half finished, as is "Broken Dishes," with Loretta Young, Grant Withers, O. P. Heggie and Emma Dunn. The next to start will probably be "Little Caesar."

Warner Music in One Bldg.

Warners' music publishing subsidiaries will be housed in one ten-story structure, contracts for which have been awarded to White Construction Co. The site is at 619 W. 54th St., running through to 55th St., New York. About $1,000,000 will be spent.

28 in Dickinson Chain

Kansas City — With purchase of the Auditorium at Slater and the Alamo at Fayette, the Glen W. Dickinson chain now numbers 28 theatres.

First National FUN and NEWS

There are plenty of tall men at this convention, but Andy Smith can always be picked out of the crowd. He is two inches taller than Depinet, and Ned is six feet, one, in his stocking feet.

One of the smallest men here is Tom Spry of Boston. But what Tom lacks in height he makes up in weight. Tom drove in from Situate Beach, outside of Beantown, then made the 7 A. M. special for N. Y., the 5:20 limited for Atlantic City and the 10 o'clock sleeper to Dreamland. He arrived at his destination as spry as only Tom Spry can be.

Martin Keleher of New Haven knows the latest Amos 'n' Andy story. He told it on the train and had all the boys roaring. His ready wit was in great demand.

Foreign business, according to H. A. Bandy, has doubled in the last year. He is seeking new worlds to conquer and predicts an even greater increase this year.

"Hello, Doug. How's business," says H. D. Hearn of Memphis to Doug Rathbone of St. Louis (left) as they meet on the boardwalk.

Joe Vergesslich of New Jersey brought his three supervisors with him—Harry Hummel (Winken), Howard Levy (Blinken) and Gus Solomon (Nod). These three wise men of Gotham are much wiser now. They've heard a few new notes about the sales end of the picture industry that they won't soon forget.

Arthur Sachson, home office, kept mumbling incoherently about a girl. Upon closer observation it was discovered that Arthur was talking about his eight months' old daughter who (according to Mrs. Sachson) is the brightest, best-looking, cleverest baby in the world.

* * *

One of the mysteries of this contention is what A. W. Schwalberg's Christian name is. This home office dynamo has never let the secret out. George Bilson of the advertising department was finally delegated to ask Schwalberg point blank what "A. W." really meant.

"What's your Christian name," asked George determinedly.

"I have no Christian name. I'm a nice Jewish boy", was the reply.

Benjamin Kalmenson is one of the newest First National managers. Only a few weeks ago he took over the bossing of the Albany exchange, but he was right in the spirit of the convention like a real old-timer.

Ned Depinet's glad hand that mitted the conventioneers.

Fred M. Jack says Atlantic City is all right, but it doesn't begin to compare with the weather down Atlanta way. N. H. Brower of Los Angeles soon got into this argument with a kind word about the Pacific Coast climate. These two fellows went at it hammer and tongs until they heard the dinner gong. They both agreed, however, that Atlantic City chefs are worth having around in any kind of climate.

As the conventioneers walked into the hall on Tuesday morning, many kind words were said about the decorations. Too bad Joe Tisman and Bert Perkins, Charlie Einfeld's advance men, were not on hand to hear the praise. Joe had to hurry back to New York and his poster brushes, while Bert was out telling the mayor that only half the boardwalk was decorated with First National banners. "But the other half has Warner Brothers' banner", said the Mayor.

Buffalo was ably represented by Frank J. A. McCarthy. Mac blew in on a zephyr, stayed on through the gale, and wound up in a storm of enthusiasm. He's a peppy guy, this McCarthy fellow.

Carl Lesserman looks like the youngest man of the bunch, but he isn't. He's the manager of Chicago branch and claims he has to run so fast in the Windy City that the exercise keeps his weight down. "Gotta step in any city when you're in the motion picture business", remarked Paul Krieger of Cincinnati.

The first time he ever got the air. Floyd Brown of Indianapolis in a boardwalk baby carriage.

And you should have seen Paul Krueger and Luke Conner chatting about New Orleans. Paul managed the N. O. office for a number of years and many of his old exhibitor friends sent their good wishes through Luke.

Floyd Brown of Indianapolis was one of the first men to arrive at the Ambassador. Floyd seems to be in first place in other ways, too. He was one of the first salesmen First National hired back in the days of "There'll Be a Franchise Everywhere". He wears octagonal glasses just to be different.

Charlie Kempke of the home office sales department was on hand to greet the men he writes to every day in the week. He was the only one of the h. o. sales department that didn't wear a straw hat.

Carl Lesserman of Chicago says "howdy" to Luke Conner from Noo Orleens.

Hung around the convention hall were pennants reading, "Welcome, Mr. Soandso". Through an error, the "L" in Charles Muehlman's name was omitted. "Nobody can knock the "L" out of me and get away with it", roared Charlie. The mistake was immediately rectified.

A lot of news photographers were ready with their cameras to photograph any man that poked his head out of the hotel. George W. Tait of Omaha was their most desirous subject. One cameraman "shot" him no less than three times. "Wait till they see me in a Jantzen", said George.

And talking of Jantzen, the tie-up effected between these bathing suit manufacturers and First National's publicity department has made a hit with both salesmen and exhibitors. According to the men in the field, this tie-up was great stuff for the exhibitor. They cheered the news that Loretta Young has been chosen as the Jantzent Girl for 1931.

U. S. Firms Move To Levy "Music Tax" in Canada

Failure of the present Canadian Parliament to amend the copyright law repealing the section which requires that grant of an interest in copyright either by assignment or license must be registered, does not affect rights of American copyright owners to enforce performing rights on their own works in Canada, states the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The American firm recently joined with the Canadian Performing Rights Society, Ltd. The latter was reorganized and the following officers elected: Henry T. Jamieson, president; Holmes Maddock, secretary; Gene Buck, vice president, and Louis Bernstein, treasurer. The first two are Canadians, the last two Americans. The plan is to alternate the presidency between Canada and America. The association will place the Canadian firm in position to demand music licenses from Canadian theatres, as assignments of works are registered by the American owners.

Canada is a member of the Berne copyright convention and unless she repeals the present law on assignments by 1931, she will lose her standing as a member of it. Under terms of the convention, copyrights are automatically registered in member companies. The United States is not a member, but Congress has pending the Vestal Bill, which provides for membership.

Stage Shows Needed to Bolster Missouri B. O.

St. Louis—Stage shows will again be a part of the Missouri bill. The house was one of the first in the country to offer presentations, and dropped them at the first indication of a change to straight sound picture policies.

Harry Rose will probably start as m.c., in an attempt to offset heavy business with stage shows at the Fox.

Ayres, Rawlinson in Legit

Agnes Ayres and Herbert Rawlinson have gone legitimate and head the cast of "Jungle," which Bunyea-Beall Prod. has in rehearsal. It opens June 9 at Detroit. Fred Herendon wrote the play which K. Marston Scoville is directing.

30 Per Cent of Gross They Sell Needed, Rodgers Emphasizes

Assured that their services "always will be required," M-G-M branch and sales managers have returned to their respective territories getting the drive on the new season's product under way.

This assurance was given to the sales force at Chicago by William F. Rodgers, eastern sales manager, who declared that while the salesmen turn in only 30 per cent of the national gross, they are indispensable.

"This situation, and other present day considerations, place new responsibilities on the company's representatives, foremost among which is production," Rodgers said. This implies a sales efficiency which must be evidenced in maximum results from a minimum of sales calls.

Average Must Be Raised

"We cannot longer be satisfied with a general average of sales in the ratio of about one out of every four visits made," Mr. Rodgers told the sales forces. "Such a method is too costly," he continued. "We have an outlay of approximately $1,000,000 yearly in salesmen's salaries and expenses. With new conditions demanding more work in each situation than heretofore, our only hope of keeping this cost within reasonable bonds is to effect sales with fewer average calls."

Rodgers advised salesmen to be sure of appointments before traveling long distances to visit a prospect, and to be fairly certain, as well, that the prospect can be interested.

"We want now, and will continue to want, recognized producers of business," he said. "There will be no need for a man who is producing to be concerned regarding his future with us. Your work should be more than just selling. It should be constructive, as well. For every closed outlet, you are expected to endeavor to develop a new one," he concluded.

Salesmen to Trap Unfair Exhibitors on % Dates

Angles from which salesmen can aid in protecting the producer's revenue were discussed at the M-G-M convention in Chicago by Alan F. Cummings, manager of exchange operations. Unscrupulous practices, he said, can be detected by the salesmen frequently, and the producer must rely on him to report all instances of irregularities that come to his attention.

"Percentage selling, in particular," he said, "offers the unscrupulous exhibitor opportunity to defraud. Recent investigations have disclosed that in some instances exhibitors are sending in box office statements for fewer days than the actual engagement. Also, on pretext of getting pictures for rehearsal, unscrupulous exhibitors obtain them a day ahead of engagement and play them an additional day, pocketing the entire proceeds. Salesmen can do much to detect this," he said.

Other instances in which the salesman can be of assistance to his manager and home office are in reporting changes of theatre ownership that come to his attention, and urging upon new owners the necessity of immediately answering the Credit Committee questionnaire, Cummings stated.

Such irregularities as an exhibitor who owns theatres in deluxe and small classifications buying pictures for the smaller house and playing them in the larger, can also be detected by the salesmen, Cummings pointed out.

Hollywood—"Red Dust," starring Greta Garbo in the new M-G-M lineup, presents the Swedish star in the role of a Parisian girl transferred to the background of a Chinese rubber plantation.

Indiana After Admission Tax; Theatres Oppose

Indianapolis—Fight against a proposed state tax on theatre admissions has been launched by the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana. Charles R. Metzger, attorney for the exhibitor unit, and Frank J. Rembusch of Shelbyville protested against imposition of any tax on amusements at a hearing before the tax survey commission.

They contended that entertainment offered "at reasonable prices" is not a luxury, "but a necessity for the great majority of our citizenship under the stress and strain of the modern complex economic and social system."

Theatres pay a real estate and personal property tax, license fee, county tax, special industrial board license, and music tax of ten cents per seat, and so should be exempt from further levies.

Would Force Closings

Imposition of the tax would force closing of a large number of smaller theatres in the state, Metzger said, since most of the theatres provide a return of only 5 per cent on their investment. Approximately 200 theatres have been closed in Indiana during the last three years, he said, and not 10 per cent in the state have operated at a profit during the last two years.

In place of the tax, theatre owners propose an income tax or a sales tax on sales of all kinds. Metzger said that only about 45 or 50 theatres in the state, out of 550, were owned by out-state interests.

Albany Business Tops Last Year, Showmen Report

Albany—Business in the majority of the first runs here is "away ahead" of the corresponding period last year and everything points to an excellent summer. Just how much the weather plays in the business thus far this spring and just what part the booking of better pictures is playing, is open to guess, but the fact remains that the houses are playing to within ten per cent of mid-winter business and that in the face of daylight saving, which has heretofore proved extremely costly. Some of the first run houses last week were playing to S.R.O. business at 7:30 o'clock, which is exceptional even in winter.

There is one thing that the exhibitors of Albany are learning and that is that it pays to play good pictures throughout the entire year rather than to give meager programs during the summer months under the false supposition that people will not come during daylight saving and hot weather no matter how attractive a program is offered. It was not so many years ago that in Albany exhibitors played all their poor pictures during the summer months with results that probably didn't meet the overhead. This spring they are playing the best pictures obtainable and plan to continue the policy throughout the entire summer months.

Wilbur and M-G-M Part; Disagreement Reported

Hollywood — Crane Wilbur, one of the early stars of pictures who later gained prominence as a playwright and author, has cancelled his writing and directing contract with M-G-M by mutual agreement. Wilbur came to the coast nearly a year ago with a term contract with M-G-M, but it is understood he asked for his release to work on several plays he has in mind. Disagreement between playwright and the studio is reported, but unconfirmed.

Fox W. C. Circuit Building 21 New Houses on Pacific Slope

San Francisco—Theatre business is better on the Coast than anywhere in the United States, according to Harold B. Franklin, president of Fox West Coast Theatres, who says that six new theatres, involving $4,500,000, are to be built by the circuit in the Bay Region.

Business is off 11 per cent in the East, but this percentage "gradually lessens as one moves west and is not felt here," Franklin asserts.

Fox West Coast is building here and at Oakland, Berkeley, San Jose, Porterfield, Bakersfield and Stockton. In addition, 17 theatres are being built in southern California and four in the Pacific Northwest.

Recent acquisitions, it is said, have brought to 535 the total of theatres in the company's chain, compared with 125 three years ago, Franklin says.

Boston—They were ready to send out an "S.O.S." to get Mike Simmons off the boat when his steamer docked here. Mike, en route to Beantown to exploit "What a Man," sold attendants the idea of inviting the 1,500 passengers to the showing at the Park, via telegram blanks which were free. Then he sniped a herald into each menu and got a bridge tournament under way in the cardroom, giving autographed photos of Reginald Denny as prizes, as well as ducats for good measure. In the bulletin board by the purser's office headed, "What to do in Boston," he inserted a bold "First Visit the Park and See 'What a Man'." He was expected to be put in irons before he raffled the ship.

Lynch, Bob Welsh Head Firm Making Porter Pictures

Hollywood—American Motion Pictures Corp. has been formed to produce talker versions of Gene Stratton Porter novels, and other series from popular novels. A. H. Alexander organized the company with John Lynch as president and Robert E. Welsh as vice president and general manager. Leo Meehan will supervise and probably direct the Porter series.

Pictures to be made are: "The Girl of the Limberlost," "The Keeper of the Bees," "Laddie," "Freckles," "The Magic Garden," and others. Six of the novels were filmed for FBO as silents by Meehan and chalked up some of that firm's biggest grosses. Lynch formerly supervised for Paramount, while Welsh was general manager of Universal City.

"Angels" Packs Air Thrills But Story Is Weak

the audience of the dialogue going on. Hughes was well repaid for engaging his large staff of technical advisors and thereby obtained real and authentic color of the war background throughout.

Ben Lyon and James Hall are brothers. Lyon is a typical ladies' man and plays the field without reserve. Hall is devoted to his sweetheart and spurns his brother's attempts to get him out of the straight and narrow. Then Lyon meets the girl, Jean Marlow, and the pair fall heavy for each other. She takes Lyon to her apartment for a rather hot sequence, just before the boys go over to France. At the front Lyon shows his cowardly streak with the entire squadron realizing it. Hall shields him at every opportunity. Then the commander calls for two volunteers to take a captured German bomber out to destroy an ammunition warehouse behind the German lines. Lyon steps out, followed by Hall. They push off at dawn, successfully complete their job, and start back. Richthofen's circus gets on their tail for thrilling running fight. The squadron escort picks them up and engages the Germans in a spectacular battle.

Climax Tragic

When the pair feel themselves safe they are shot down in flames, with Hall making landing, so the two escape from burning plane. But they land in the German lines and are marched to headquarters. The German general demands they talk, giving fifteen minutes to decide between that and a firing squad. Lyon weakens, with Hall finally stating he will talk to the general and tell the British plan of attack. Hall gets a gun with one shell and returns to Lyon. When the latter still wants to squeal, Hall shoots him and then tells the German that he will not disclose British plans. He is marched out for the firing squad, and finale.

Lyon gives a splendid performance as the life-loving weakling, closely followed by Hall, with Jean Marlow particularly fine as the girl.

"Hell's Angels" is not the epic of talkers, notwithstanding the fact it is thrilling, realistic and effective. It carries plenty of audience appeal and wealth of entertainment. At the two-dollar scale it will enjoy plenty of business. Likewise, later, when it hits the regular price runs, it is certain to hit heavy grosses at all box offices, but whether or not Hughes gets back his tremendous investment is something for him to worry about, rather than exhibitors. In justice to Howard Hughes, it must be stated that the picture will be cut further and such cutting should enhance the tempo and general values 100 per cent.

Rowland Heads Kennedy Attack In Pathe War

statement. One part of it referred to Kennedy as former president of Pathe, with the industry generally aware that Kennedy is chairman of the board of Pathe and has never occupied the office of president. The statement further referred to J. J. Murdock as chairman of the board and as having resigned that office. Murdock is president of Pathe and has not officially resigned.

Pathe Contradicts

A statement by Pathe, signed by Lewis Innerarity as secretary, was issued late Tuesday, contradicting the information contained in the circular prepared and sent earlier in the day by the committee to preferred stockholders of Pathe, urging them to give proxies to the committee.

Observors recall that Kennedy succeeded Rowland when the latter resigned from First National, and made a deal with the executive committee of that company to "reorganize" it. Certain of Kennedy's actions in the very limited time he remained with First National as an advisor were regarded then as reflections on policies conceived and followed by the former management.

The published statement signed by Rowland and his committee associates says, in part:

"Committee's" Statement

"At the annual meeting of the stockholders of Pathe Exchange, Inc., called for April 29, 1930 (which meeting has been adjourned to June 9, 1930) Mr. Joseph P. Kennedy, the then president, described the condition and prospects of the company as highly unsatisfactory and stated that unless the board of directors procured sufficient funds to carry out adequate production and distribution programs immediately, he would promptly resign as the president of the corporation."

The foregoing is regarded as being based on information supplied to members of the Rowland committee by directors or others present at the April 29 meeting. The statement issued by Pathe does not contradict the alleged ultimatum from Kennedy to the board, and avoids any reference to the present management by saying "While Mr. Kennedy's retirement from active management of the corporation has been announced, he remains as chairman of the board."

Kennedy Makes Changes

Management history of Pathe has been marked by a series of sweeping changes under Kennedy's direction. In February, 1928, bankers with heavy financial interests in Pathe engaged Kennedy as business adviser in handling the company's then-difficult position. This was less than a year after J. J. Murdock had been elected president and chairman of the board of the merged interests of Pathe and Producers' Distributing Corporation.

In April, 1928, Kennedy named Colvin W. Brown executive vice-president of Pathe, and from then until April, 1929, Kennedy had no official connection or position with the company. Pathe affairs were administered entirely by Brown, with Kennedy absent from New York a substantial part of the time on trips to Europe, Florida and Hollywood. It was during that interval that he become producer for Gloria Swanson.

From April, 1928, to April, 1929, Pathe affairs greatly improved. At the end of the first quarter of 1928 the company had a reported loss of $400,000. At the end of 1928 the loss had been wiped out and the company had a net profit of approximately $250,000. The first quarter of 1929 showed a further net profit of $250,000.

Executives Resign

In April, 1929, Kennedy stepped in and assumed active management as chairman of the board, with Murdock resigning that office, but continuing as president. Between April, 1929, and September of that year there was a radical change in the executive personnel under Kennedy. One resignation followed another by those who had handled the company during '28 and the early part of '29. Brown resigned as executive vice-president, William Vogel resigned as foreign manager. Arthur Roussea resigned as assistant foreign manager, Harry Scott stepped out as short subjects sales manager, and the production staff at the studio underwent changes with the resignation of William Sistrom, in charge of Pathe's western studios, and Barney Glazer and Paul Bern, supervisors.

The present situation presents several surprise angles. Rowland has frequently announced his complete retirement from the picture business. Elisha Walker, head of Bancamerica-Blair & Co., is a heavyweight financier with a large interest in Pathe, shared by Jeremiah Milbank and others.

Surface indications are that it is a fight between two banking groups, one with Rowland as its film expert, and the other maintaining its allegiance to Kennedy. One point of particular significance in the Pathe statement to preferred stockholders urging them to ignore the call for proxies in the statement by the Rowland committee, is the allegation that neither Rowland nor any other member of the committee is a stockholder of record for any of the stock for which they seek proxies.

Danny Finkelstein, grand mogul of the Warners' Atlantic City theatres, was kept busy welcoming the conventionites and smoothing things out for them, at the same time keeping a weather eye on his theatres and seeing that everything is as it should be.

And while we're writing about Danny, let's mention the entire Atlantic City staff which has been working 23 hours a day with him to see that everybody in town knows that the Warnerites are here.

Ralph Wilk, Vitaphoning in the sales end, is here, too. He has recovered from the illness that made him limp for quite a while.

* * *

Seen around the Ambassador was Arthur Brilant, formerly of the home office, but now handling exploitation for the Atlantic City zone of Warner theatres. Arthur has a 42-foot cabin cruiser which he sails up and down the coast broadcasting news concerning the Warner theatres to the visitors promenading on the boardwalk. This stunt is a local sensation. More of this anon.

Labor Trouble Holding Up Warner Youngst'n House

Youngstown—Work on the $1,000,000 Warner theatre has been halted here because of labor trouble and refusal of Heller Bros., general contractors, to meet wage demand of carpenters. Pay checks were $1 per day less than carpenters demanded, with result that they walked out.

Warners in Dayton

Dayton—Warners has paid a reported $1,000,000 for a site on which a $2,500,000 theatre and business project are to be erected.

Lytell Admits Income Tax Charge; Gets Time to Pay

Los Angeles—Bert Lytell is going to work for the government. He is not forsaking picture work, however, but the old U. S. is going to take a slice of his future earnings because of Bert's carelessness concerning his 1925 income tax. He pleaded guilty to a charge of having failed to pay adequate taxes for that year, when his income was $66,000. Agents testified that he paid $1,381, which was $3,582 less than the required amount.

When Lytell pleaded that he expected to sign a $3,500 weekly contract soon, Judge William James delayed sentencing until October. In the meantime, the actor promises, he will settle his debt with Uncle Sam.

AMPA Readying for Election

Nominating committee for the annual Fall election will be named at today's weekly meeting of the A.M.P.A., New York.

HITTING THE HOLLYWOOD HIGH SPOTS

KING VIDOR took his "Billy the Kid" company over to the New Mexico desert rim. It's a fact—they ran into a snow storm!

Funny how these boys leave various companies on account of ill health, and then immediately jump over to another organization. Monta Bell cancelled his contract with Paramount in New York because of his health, but seems to be in fine shape out this way. Maybe the cast was rather warm, especially with the summer coming on.

Cleveland Unions Settle Dispute With Showmen

Cleveland—General average reduction of $10 weekly for operators, on the basis of seven nights and one matinee, plus agreement to employ seven stage hands are embraced in the new working agreement made between the local exhibitor association and the operators and stagehands. This ends a year's fight over employment of stagehands, who have been out of members' houses. Following the agreement, it is understood, operators abandoned efforts to nullify the permanent injunction against an operator strike secured by local exhibitors.

PRESS AGENT PUFFS

"One of Jean Colbert's great secretary, Miss Colbert, minister of finance of Louis XIII. Making two dollars grow where one grew before was the enormous task in order to meet the extravagant whims of the French monarch.

"Now Jean is in the talkie movies, trying to make two fans spend their money for short features where one had popped in hitherto.

"Miss Colbert has been signed to play the femme lead in Louis Brock's Clark and McCullough short feature, being directed by Mark Sandrich.

"To let you into another dark secret, Miss Colbert represents that vast army of school teachers who teach the young idea to sprout. She's a graduate of French schools and Hunter College and taught school. But she is not the proverbial schoolmarm by any manner of means. Not with them eyes, those hair, that gesture! Non! Non! Non!

"She has broken the hearts of press agents by refusing to admit she is a countess, a duchess, or even a princess, despite her illustrious ancestry!"

"There was no mistaking Stepin Fetchit's daily arrival at the Pathe studio during his appearance in 'Swing High,' the musical circus romance in which he has an important comedy role.

"The colored star was preceded by a shiny roadster from which emerged a liveried footman to open the door of Fetchit's imposing limousine as it arrived directly behind."

"George Sawley, chief of the property department of the Tiffany Studios, was unloading big bunches of bananas on the 'Paradise Island' set. It was fifteen minutes before shooting time but Director Bert Glennon was on the set, and so were eighty native players. Kenneth Harlan, Marceline Day, Paul Hurst and one or two other members of the cast had arrived. 'Oh, kill that ugly spider!' screamed one of the bronze-limbed extra girls, covering three yards in one leap. Sawley slapped a flat board on the insect with such venom that the sound engineers objected to the unexpected hard explosive noise. "That was an 'ugly spider,' all right, lady, but in some places they call 'em 'tarantulas'."

Resale of Story Rights Boosts Ince Estate Value

Hollywood—A decided gain has been registered in the estate of the late Thomas H. Ince, according to final accountings made by executors in probate court. The estate now shows a total of $930,732; a gain of $57,790 over report filed at the last accounting.

Much of the increase is due to the sale of story rights on material formerly produced by Ince as silent pictures, and it is expected that the estate will be further increased through this revenue. Film rights resold during the past year include: "Anna Christie," "Those Who Dance," "Hottentot," "Behind the Door," "Aloha," and numerous others now held on options by various producers.

Sue Chatterton on Clothes

Hollywood—Ruth Chatterton will have to explain in court her failure to pay $2,250 said to be due on clothes she purchased in New York from Frances and Co., in 1926. Suit was filed against the actress by Laura Lindsay, assignee for the modiste firm.

Close Big Deal In 11,000 Mile 'Phone Confab

London—British International Pictures and Union Theatres, Ltd., Australian firm, may join in production of talkers in Australia, under terms of a long-distance telephone agreement concluded by Arthur Dent, managing director of Wardour Films, and Stuart F. Doyle, managing director of Union. The pair discussed the proposal at a distance of 11,000 miles. The deal, it is said, would involve $300,000 yearly in rentals to the British company and covers 40 talkers.

Union is to take the entire output of B.I.P., including shorts, for a two-year period. The pictures will be booked in the 100 Union theatres and about 80 Hoyt houses, as well as a number of independent theatres. Dent now is closing a deal for playing of its product in another country.

S. F. Doyle Named General Manager of Australasian

Sydney, Australia—Reorganization of the company's laboratories at Sydney and Melbourne is well under way, following appointment of Stuart F. Doyle as general manager of Australasian films. While at present, the company does not intend to actively deal in handling of films, the firm is to take over many of Union Theatres' trading units. The sales department also is being reorganized.

Theatre Owner Fights Installation of Sound

Barrie, Ont.—The Dreamland is to be wired, despite the fact that the owner, R. G. Garrett, had obtained an injunction restraining the lessee from making a permanent sound installation. An agreement has been reached between the two whereby an installation is permitted on the guarantee that the theatre will be restored to its original condition at the termination of the five-year lease.

Canisteo For Sunday Shows

Rochester, N. Y.—Demand for action one way or another on proposed Sunday shows was made to the Canisteo, N. Y., Board of Trustees in the shape of a petition, signed by 104 backers of Sunday films, asking either an ordinance legalizing the move or a resolution looking to a referendum.

Princeton Prefers

Princeton seniors prefer pictures to other amusements and Greta Garbo and George Bancroft are their favorite players, the annual balloting of the graduating class of the university reveals.

Runners-up to Greta are Ruth Chatterton, Norma Shearer and Joan Crawford, and to Bancroft, William Powell and John Barrymore. Favorite pictures, in order, are "Disraeli," "Wings" and "Women of Affairs."

The Stars Exit

"One year an actor—or an actress—may be the idol of a national. The next year, without warning, some one realizes they have outlived their usefulness and they drop out of the picture, moralizes Sid Skolsky in the N. Y. Daily News."

"The screen actor is not to be envied," he states, because "there is no fate more cruel than being popular—knowing what fame is—and then being thrown back into obscurity. Recall some of your former favorites. What ever became of:

"Stuart Holmes, that green-eyed villain (remember what a bad man he was?) is still in Hollywood. He refuses to believe that he is through and is still looking for work. . . . Nita Naldi who used to take men's hearts and break them in parts, is now married to a wealthy Frenchman and living in Versailles. . . . George Walsh, who used to jump over fences as well as Douglas Fairbanks, can be seen at the race track almost every day.

J. Warren Kerrigan, whose last big thing was "The Covered Wagon," sits on the porch of his bungalow in the heart of Hollywood and watches the monkeys go by. . . . Florence Turner (this is going way back), who was known as "The Vitagraph Girl," lives with her mother in Hollywood. She is another who refused to admit she was through. With the money she made, she went to England to produce her own pitcures and went broke. . . . Ethel Clayton, another old time favorite, still wants to be in pictures. She is married to Ian Keith and if you looked close you would have seen her in 'Hit the Deck.' She had a small part.

Katherine MacDonald. She was billed as "American Beauty." Today Miss McDonald is Mrs. Christian K. Holmes and owns a wholesale cosmetic establishment in Hollywood. . . . Theda Bara, the lady who made the word 'vamp' famous, is married to Charles Brabin, the director. Miss Bara is now making voice tests with a view to a comeback. . . . Eddie Polo, who was a red-blooded, fighting fool in serials, when last heard from was touring Germany with a circus. . . . Carlyle Blackwell, who made the feminine hearts beat a little faster back in those good old days, made pictures in England after he was through here. He is married to the daughter of a man who owns a diamond mine in South Africa. Mr. Blackwell has nothing to worry about. . . . Dorothy Phillips (remember her in "The Heart of Humanity?") is living in Hollywood, and has a daughter in her teens. The daughter is being raised near the studios so she can follow in her mammy's shoes.

Foreign Language Film Previews on West Coast

Hollywood—Previews, in which new pictures are taken to outlying theatres to be tried out on audiences, are complicating the screen industry with the arrival of foreign talking pictures.

Previews in Spanish, German and French have been held by the M-G-M studios, and an Italian preview is slated for the near future.

The studio finds theatres in foreign sections of Los Angeles or nearby cities, and uses these to obtain the foreign patrons wanted. Interpreters are placed in the audiences to get the reactions.

"Le Spectre Vert," Jacques Feyder's French picture; Victor Seastrom's German version of "A Lady to Love," with Vilma Banky, and "Estrellados," starring Buster Keaton, are among the new foreign pictures. "Monsieur Le Fox" was filmed in and will be previewed in five languages, English, Spanish, French, German and Italian.

Positive Film For Sound Tracks Saves Thousands

Hollywood—By using positive film for sound track negative, producers are effecting a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars annually. Positive raw stock costs one cent per foot, as against four cents a foot for negative stock, which allows studios to save three cents on every foot of negative sound track.

Because of its highly sensitized qualities for photographing, regulation raw stock negative costs more than positive. But in filming the sound track, the qualities of positive film are capable of recording the sound track just as clear as if negative stock were used.

Pathe Preparing for New Program; 2 Now All Set

Hollywood—Two plays by Eugene Walter are down on Pathe's schedule for early production. First will star Constance Bennett in "In Deep," while Ann Harding will have the top spot in "The Greater Love."

"In Deep" will be directed by Edward H. Griffith, with Forrest Halsey assigned to write the script and dialogue. Waldemar Young is carrying the dialogue and adaptation assignment for "The Greater Love."

Walter, former playwright, is now scenario editor at Pathe.

Four New Theatre Units Formed in Massachusetts

Boston—New corporations organized in Massachusetts include:

Natick Amusement Co., Inc., Boston. Capital 300 shares no par value. Charles F. Dunbar, Dorothy T. Matthews and Mary Havey, all of Boston.

Hippodrome, Inc., Riverside. $25,000. Harry C. Baker, 68 Vine Road, Larchmont, N. Y., Meta Baker and Raymond E. Oviatt.

P. & R. Amusement Co., Dennisport, Mass. $20,000. Wm. C. Purcell, Wm. B. Reading, 21 Court St., Woburn, and Florence D. Purcell.

B. & S. Theatre Co., Lowell. $25,000. Ira Brody, Simon Silverblatt and Lucille E. Silverblatt.

Dorothy Dwan Remarrying

Los Angeles—Dorothy Dwan, widow of Larry Semon, and Paul N. Bobbs, Jr., son of an oil executive, have filed notice of intention to wed. The date of the proposed wedding was not announced.

Restores Picture Policy

Cleveland—The Uptown, one of the local Warner chain, has discontinued vaudeville over the summer and is playing a straight picture policy.

Shades of Reichenbach

St. Louis—If local coppers were wise to the ways of film exhibitors, they would have ignored a certain emergency call which sent 20 of the force at breakneck speed to the hotel where a woman's voice had been heard to say: "Help! Help! Save me! There's a ferocious baboon at large! ! !"

Just a stunt for "Ingagi," but the cops failed to indicate in their report whether the woman was white or black. "Ingagi's" rape subject is black.

SONG OF THE WEST

line of least BOXOFFICE Resistance . . .

Triumph tops triumph with each new release starring TECHNICOLOR. On Broadway—and on the road—Technicolor pictures today are playing to "solid-capacity." They consistently attain Big Hit rating and record runs on all Broadways, in all cities . . . everywhere! Technicolor is the new big-money name of the industry, a standout in the minds of the millions. On the screen—in The Saturday Evening Post—in the leading fan magazines . . . GOLDEN DAWN

WALTER WOOLF, star of noted operettas, heads a distinguished cast, including NOAH BEERY and VIVIENNE SEGAL, in this gorgeous and thrilling musical play. A Warner Brothers Vitaphone picture, entirely in Technicolor!

Week after week, Technicolor pictures smash through to unprecedented Box-Office triumphs. Box-Office after Box-Office learns and re-learns by repeated experience that Technicolor is a Box-Office Name. Never in the history of screen entertainment has a Star won popular acclaim so completely and so fast. From coast to coast, on Broadways and Main Streets alike, come the same reports . . .

Another Technicolor "hold-over". . . more "repeat-engagements". . . week after week of complete Technicolor "sell-outs." In hundreds of theatres, every day, the Technicolor idea is out-pulling, out-starring, out-selling the B. O. standards of the old black-and-white days . . . often bettering by double the best "S-R-O's" of a generation. A rising tide of color!

In "On With The Show," sensational Warner Bros. success, Technicolor's "draw" became 100 headliners for 1930

DIXIANA

BEBE DANIELS, who triumphed in "Rio Rita," scores another mighty success in this delightful production from the studios of Radio Pictures. Technicolor plays an important part in bringing to life the beauty and lavishness of this tuneful love story.

One hundred of the industry's most pretentious productions in 1930 will feature All-Technicolor or Technicolor sequences. Here are just a few of the 100 "best-sellers" on this record-breaking hit list:

BRIDE OF THE REGIMENT, with Vivienne Segal (First National); BRIGHT LIGHTS, with Dorothy Mackaill (First National); BROADWAY, with Glenn Tryon and Evelyn Brent (Universal), Technicolor Sequences; CHASING RAINBOWS, with Bessie Love and Charles King (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer), Technicolor Sequences; DEVIL MAY CARE, starring Ramon Novarro (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer), Technicolor Sequences; DIXIANA, with Bebe Daniels (Radio Pictures); GENERAL CRACK, with John Barrymore (Warner Bros.), Technicolor Sequences; GLORIFYING THE AMERICAN GIRL, with Mary Eaton, Eddie Cantor, Helen Morgan and Rudy Vallee in revue scenes (Paramount); GOLD DIGGERS OF BROADWAY, with Winnie Lightner, Conway Tearle, Ann Pennington and Nick Lucas (Warner Bros.); GOLDEN DAWN, with Walter Woolf and Vivienne Segal (Warner Bros.); HEADS UP, all-star cast (Paramount); HELL'S ANGELS, with Ben Lyon, James Hall, Jane Winton and Thelma Todd (Caddo), Technicolor Sequences; HIT THE DECK, with Jack Oakie and Polly Walker (Radio), Technicolor Sequences; HOLD EVERYTHING, with Winnie Lightner, Georges Carpentier and Joe E. High and Low On Music Row

BEFORE leaving with the Fox contingent for the coast, Pat Flaherty, vice president and general manager of Red Star Music Co. arranged for the release and exploitation of several songs from forthcoming Fox productions. The new additions to the catalogue are: "Whisper You Love Me" from "Not Damaged," "Beware of Love" and "One Day," from "Women Everywhere," "Where Can You Be?" "The Scamp of the Campus," "When You Look in My Eyes" and "You May Not Like It but It's a Great Idea" from "Cheer Up and Smile," and another quartette of tunes from "One Mad Kiss," "Lament," "Oh, Where Are You?" and "Behind the Mask."

Al Dubin and Joe Burke, who gave Witmark "Painting the Clouds With Sunshine" and "Tiptoe Through the Tulips with Me," have again favored Witmark with a new tune, "Dancing With Tears in My Eyes," which is undoubtedly headed for the big time. Rudy Vallee (the fellow who wrote a book) is plugging this number, which should mean a whole lot. Look what he did for "The Stein Song."

Jack Robbins, just back from the coast, makes no secret of the fact that his intentions are of the best and that he means to publish bigger and better songs. Three Robbins numbers at present included in the list of best sellers are "Moon Is Low," from "Montana Moon," "Should I?" from "Lord Byron of Broadway" and "Blue is the Night." "Cheer Up, Good Times are Coming," written by Ray Klages and Jesse Greer, is rapidly coming to the fore, according to George Lottman, Robbins' director of publicity.

Lou Handman and Bernie Grossman are busy on the Universal lot, writing the scores for "East Is West." Handman, Kent & Goodman will publish the songs.

Sammy Fain and Irving Kahal, staff composers for Paramount, feel that Pete Wendling's song, "There's Danger in Your Eyes," hasn't as much appeal as it could have had had it been called "There's Merger in Your Eyes." Evidently they forget that "merger" sounds too much like "murder" and that would "kill" the song.

The catalogue of Edward B. Marks includes songs from Cuba, Hawaii and Europe, besides the American type songs. "Song of the Islands" (Na Lei O Hawaii) was originally published in Honolulu; "When You Give Your Heart Away" (give it to me) emanated from Germany; "El Manisero," originated from the land of cigars, Cuba, while "In a Different Way," "Lovin' You," "Dancing Butterfly" and "Toymaker's Dream" are native.

Pity the poor songpluggers. Although their way of chasing orchestra maestros is as hard as the proverbial "way of the transgressor," science now bids fair to make things yet harder for them. They run from radio station to radio station, from there to hotels featuring bands, then back-stage of theatres and back to radio stations in quest of the ever elusive orchestra leader for a plug on their songs. Sometimes they are successful in locating their men, but with television just around the corner, making it possible for the orchestra leader to direct his orchestra, though many miles away, things look black indeed for the boys with the orchestration envelopes.

PINCUS.

N. Y. Exhibitors Buck Carnivals; Win 1 Victory

Albany—Motion picture exhibitors in a number of cities and villages in New York state are taking a decided stand this year against carnivals and as a result they will probably find themselves money in the pocket between now and next fall. These carnivals have long been a bane to the New York exhibitor, arriving in town for a week or so and then departing with comparatively large sums of money, while the exhibitor is obliged to look on and say little or nothing.

But this year things have started off differently. In Watertown, N. Y., the exhibitors have put up such a protest that a move last week on the part of certain officials to permit carnivals this summer fell flat. Even a proposition from the Northside Improvement League of that city, asking permission for a carnival for the fore part of August, got nowhere.

Similar reports from elsewhere in the state indicate that carnivals will find it rather difficult this summer to get licenses. These carnivals have already started out but it is said that their bookings are no where near as large nor as extensive as they were last year.

Brings Back Picture for Free Midnight Showing

Tampa, Fla.—Midnight shows are going over successfully here. Several pictures have been started off lately with midnight pre-views, the latest being "Paramount on Parade." This week the Tampa is putting on a special free midnight showing of "The Divorcee," which played the house recently to good returns, and those who missed it can now see it free by attending the last showing each night of "Redemption" and then staying over for the showing of "The Divorcee" at no extra charge.

Bell Interested in Two Forthcoming N. Y. Plays

Hollywood—Monta Bell, who recently resigned from Paramount's eastern studio executive force, may return to New York for presentation of two stage plays in which he is interested. The plays now are in rehearsal. First, however, he plans a vacation at Palm Springs.

Moon Estate to Daughter

Hollywood—Lorna Moon's estate, totaling $8,650 in cash and an unknown figure in royalties on stories written by the deceased scenario writer, go to a young daughter under terms of the will filed for probate here.

New Paramount Exchange

Portland, Ore.—Mayor George Baker was the principal speaker at the ground-breaking ceremonies for the new Paramount exchange. Robert Blair, northwest division manager for Paramount Publix, attended.

Before the "Mike" In N. Y. Studios

THE Paramount New York studio personnel acquired an aquatic complex during the past week for three feature productions, "Animal Crackers," starring the O, O, O, O boys (Groucho, Harpo, Chico and Zeppo), "Heads Up," starring Buddy Rogers, "Up From Syracuse," Jack Oakie's vehicle, and even the short that Willie and Eugene Howard made, have nautical backgrounds, to say nothing of "The Big Pond," which was recently completed. Since there must be a theme song to every situation we'll give the struggling songwriter a break and adopt the old standby, "Sailing, Sailing, etc."

There were plenty of doubles played over at them thar studios in Astoria and we don't have reference to Helen Wills Moody's favorite pastime. Of course, the Unchristened Quartette had one each, with Harpo's boy friend, Jack Cooper, also doubling for Eugene Howard in the short subject, "The Last Card," Packy O'Gatty, who, eight years ago, was a strong contender for the bantamweight championship of the world, doubling for Chico, Tom Kelleher, who looks enough like Jack Oakie to be his twin brother, and Henry Van Bausen, who has a part in "Animal Crackers" and is a dead-ringer for Milton Sills.

Margaret Dumont, playing the wealthy society matron in "Animal Crackers," feels perfectly at home in the role, having lived the part in real life as the wife of the late John Miller, Jr., son of the sugar magnate.

Being shipwrecked and adrift in a stormy sea on a raft in "The Last Card" under Norman Taurog's direction held no terrors for Willie and Eugene Howard. Sues Velez Over "U" Deal; Wilson Claims $13,000

Hollywood—Although Lupe Valez, Mexican "it" girl, has not yet been signed to a long term contract, Harry Wilson figures she should pay him for services rendered in negotiating her deal with Universal. Wilson has filed suit in Superior Court, claiming that Lupe owes him $13,000 for his work in getting her that contract.

When United Artists decided not to continue Lupe on contract, Wilson says he entered into a verbal contract whereby he would secure engagements for her on a five per cent basis. Universal engaged the Velez for the featured lead in "The Storm" at a weekly salary of $2,500, and also took an option on her services for three years on salary ranging from $2,500 to $3,000.

Under this optional contract, Universal would pay Lupe a total of $280,000 of which Wilson would get $14,000, according to his alleged agreement with the player. In his suit, Wilson admits receiving $1,000, but contends Lupe declines to pay him the balance of $13,000.

It is expected that Wilson's suit will be held up on depositions of attorneys that the term contract has not yet been signed and consequently no part of the $13,000 is due until Universal has exercised the option on that term agreement.

Wilson is well known in Hollywood as a press agent. His dip into the managerial side of the business was a surprise to his friends and others in the business.

May Borrow Wheeler for Lead in "Charley's Aunt"

Now It Can Be Told

Destructive sex magnetism! That is what killed the beautiful Barbara La Marr, the beloved Wallie Reid and the fascinating Rudolph Valentino.

When they fell ill no expense was spared to save them from the dread destroyer—death. The best medical talent that the country could boast was called in, but all to no avail. They were young, rich and happy, yet they were struck down by an insidious foe and their lives went out as lighted candles succumb to subterranean earth-damp.

What destroyed them? D. S. M.—destructive sex magnetism!

Every motion picture star projects his or her aura on the screen. We have all become star-addicts. How many times I have heard, "Betty Compson for me! I make a point of seeing her in everything she does." But Betty gives out light and airiness and does not stir the lees in the hearts of men.

Janet Gaynor and Mary Pickford have appealingness. This does not mean that they are lacking in sex, but their sex magnetism is sublimated with something else. With Mary Pickford it is a cool, clear brain that can simulate anything. With Janet Gaynor it is a limpidity of soul that is greater than she herself knows. She gives herself up to it, and therein lies her greatness.

In Charlie Chaplin there will always be a misfit of which his funny clothes are a symbol. He has a forceful personality jammed into a small body. Little hands, little feet, no materiality to commandingly impress the eye with the power he has within.

Suit Halts Building Of Bucyrus Theatre

Bucyrus, O.—New theatre construction, which, when completed, will give the city a combined seating capacity equivalent to two seats for every citizen here, has been halted in part, at least temporarily, on account of litigation involving sponsors of one of the houses. John Seifert, of Dayton, Ohio, has filed suit against his partner, Arden Wisman, this city, and John Hoover, a Dayton contractor, engaged in building the Moose Temple and Theatre. Seifert alleges that the plans under which Wisman and Hoover are proceeding will result in the screen not being visible from many of the seats.

He further claims that the two defendants have let sub-contracts without his knowledge or authority, and refuse to alter their plans. Steel structural work is already in place, and the house was originally scheduled for September 1 opening.

Back to Grind

Cincinnati—Grand Opera House, devoted to Erlanger legitimate attractions during the regular theatrical season, after having completed a two weeks' road showing of "Journey's End" at $1.50 top, has opened as a grind house with admissions 30 cents until 1 o'clock, and 30 and 50 cents thereafter. It is reported that Tiffany has the house for the summer.

THE

Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

RECOGNIZING that all matter is electrified, we can proceed to consider the charged body. Suppose that we have two atoms, both of like structure as in Figure 4. Let us now assume that, due to some form of agitation, an electron from atom A is dislodged and moves to atom B. We now have two different states. Atom A, because it is shy one electron, displays a positive charge, since the positive charge upon that body is in excess of the negative charge. Atom B, on the other hand, displays a negative charge because the negative charge upon that body is in excess of the positive charge present in the nucleus. Atom A will now exert an attracting force upon a free electron, whereas atom B will exert a repelling force upon such a free electron and readily part with its surplus electron.

The Electric Field

Now, if these two charged bodies were connected or brought into contact with each other, the excess electron upon B would be transferred back to A and that motion of the electron would represent a flow of current between B and A. Under the circumstances, we can appreciate that a force is present between two unequally charged bodies. If the body A displays an attracting power, that attracting force must be present for a certain distance from the body. The same is true in the case of body B, except that in this case the force surrounding the body is repelling instead of attracting. This force which surrounds a charged body which can display an electrical effect, be it positive or negative, is known as the electric field. Experimental investigation shows that the field surrounding a charged body at rest is of a definite nature. First it extends in all directions around that body as in Figure 5, where the black dot represents the charge or the charged body. The arrows show the direction of the field surrounding charge and the circles show even distribution in a circle at a certain distance from the body.

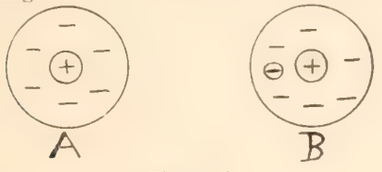

Figure 4

Referring once more to the illustration in Figure 4, the fact that the body A will attract the extra electron or that the body B will repel other electrons shows that the field surrounding the body is of a certain value of electrical strength, since its attracting or repelling force is such that it acts at a distance from the body. Now if the quantity of electricity upon an electron represents a certain charge, it stands to reason that the space surrounding a charged body is also subjected to a certain charge. If this were not true then the electron at a certain distance from a positive body could not be attracted to the positively charged body or repelled from the negatively charged body. This leads us to the subject of the relation between charged bodies. Coulomb developed a law which states that the electric force between two small charged bodies varies inversely as the square of the distance.

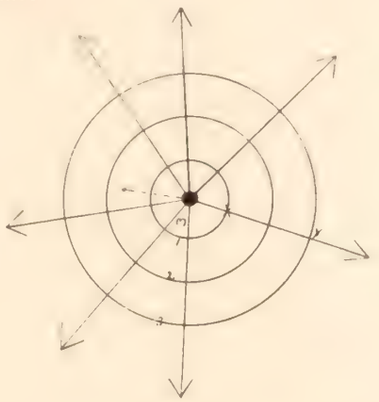

Figure 5

The relation between charged bodies is shown in Figure 5. Assume that the body M exerts a certain force at the point X on arrow O. Point Y in line with X upon arrow O is three times as far from M as X is from M. One would normally imagine that the force exerted at Y would be one third that exerted at X because Y is three times as far from M as X is from M. The law quoted above and expressed as shows that the force at Y due to the charge upon M is equal to one ninth that at X. In turn, if we considered first the force exerted by M at the point Y, and then considered the point X, the force at X because it is only one third the distance from M that Y is from M would be nine times that at Y. This law is very important in connection with the amplifying tubes employed in all talkie systems and explains why a vacuum tube of the three or four element type to be described later actually amplifies. We shall refer to this condition later in the text.

Referring once again to Figure 5, the relation stated is true in all directions from that charged body at rest.

Electric Potential

Let us now imagine that such a charged body, say charged positively, is located in the centre of such an electrostatic field. Let us further imagine that the charge at the point X in Figure 5 bears an arbitrary value of 9 and, according to the law previously stated, the charge at the point Y bears an arbitrary value of 1. There is, therefore, a difference in the intensity of the charges at these two points. The values of charges in an electric field as mentioned as electric potential and such differences in values of charges are quoted as differences is potential. One can readily imagine that any such difference in charges at two different points in a field will tend to govern or control the motion of electrons or the transfer of charges. The difference of potential between two points in an electric field is a measure of the tendency of charges to move or flow from one point to another. The same is true in the case of two charged bodies.

Suppose that we have the two bodies shown in Figure 4. There is a difference in charges equal to the surplus electron on B and the deficient electron upon A. There is, therefore, a difference of potential between A and B which would cause the motion of the surplus electron upon B to the body A. When this motion takes place, the charge upon B is reduced and the charge upon A is increased, so that both are again equally charged. When two bodies are charged to the same potential there will be no flow of electrons when they are connected by wire. This explains the parallel connection of sources which develop electric pressure and explains why in such parallel connections the potential of the sources connected in parallel must be equal.

Induced Charges

The transfer of charges mentioned so far have been associated with the use of a definite link, say wire between the two charged bodies. It is possible, however, to transfer charges by induction. Consider the electrostatic field of the charged body M shown in Figure 5. (Incidentally, the term "electrostatic field" is applied to signify the electric field of a charge at rest to contrast it with the reaction, to be discussed later, of a charge in motion.)

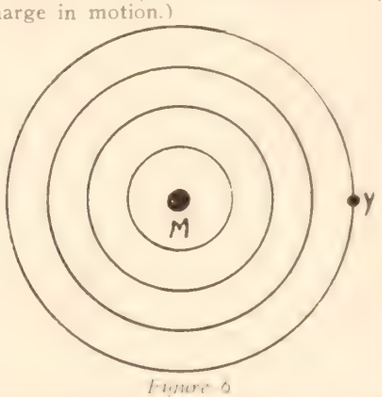

Figure 6

We stated that a difference of potential existed along points of the radii of the various circles surrounding the charge. At any rate a certain potential is present at any and every point in that field. If we now place an uncharged conductor into the field of a charge at rest as in Figure 6, say at Y in Figure 6, the conductor will assume

This is Lesson Four in the Rider series on sound projection

the potential of the field at the point to which it is brought. The intensity of the charge at that point in the field will act upon the uncharged conductor, altering the charge in the conductor. Consider the illustration in Figure 7. Here an uncharged conductor is brought within the field of a charged body. Apparently various parts of the conductor are located in different parts of the field that is subjected to different potentials. Since the conductor as a whole must have the same potential throughout, there will be a flow of electrons from one part of the conductor to the other until the potential of the entire conductor is the same throughout. Thus, we secure a transfer of charges in a conductor placed within the field of a charged body.

If the conductor is allowed to remain at rest, the moving charges will eventually arrive at a state of equilibrium, but a difference of potential exists along the rod during the transit of the charges. If the conductor is now moved, the action will be repeated and a difference of potential will again exist along the rod while the charges are in motion. The same condition may be secured by keeping the conductor stationary and moving the charged body or varying the charge upon that body. Thus, we can create a transient state of potential difference between a charged body and a conductor within its field by continually moving the conductor; moving the charged body with the conductor stationary or varying the charge.

It might be well to delve a little deeper into the subject of induced charges and explain the action within the conductor. Refer once more to Figure 7. The charge upon M is negative and we have the field represented by the arrows and the parts of equi potential circles. AB is the uncharged conductor, so placed within the field that its axis is along one of the lines of force. Since the field is negative, the free electrons within the conductor will be driven from point A towards point B within the conductor. This means that the number of electrons at A will be less than the number at B. Hence one end of the rod, A, will be charged positively and the other end, B, will be charged negatively. Naturally the excess of electrons at one end is equal to the deficiency of electrons at the other end. Now, the accumulation of electrons at the B end of the conductor will produce in that region an electrostatic field, which adding to the field due to the charge M (which is of the same polarity) will raise the potential of that portion of the field. On the other hand the A end of the rod, which is now positive will create an electrostatic field (electric field) opposed to that of the charge M and will, therefore, lower the potential of the field in that region. The consequence is that the difference of potential originally present because of the charge M, is destroyed because of the establishment within the conductor of negative and positive charges which create their own field to react upon the field of the charged body M. Eventually there is a state of equilibrium and further transfer of charges does not ensue.

As was stated, there is an interval, short of course, during which time the transfer of electrons within the conductor represents the flow of current. This ceases after the state of equilibrium has been reached. Thus we have induction of current.

Electromagnetic Field

The electrostatic field is set up around a charged body at rest. But what about an electron in motion? What is the effect of a moving charge? As the electron moves from point to point it naturally changes the electrostatic field. For example, in Figure 5, the circle 1 is in its position because the charge M is located as shown. The same is true of the circles 2 and 3. If however the charge M is moved toward the left, as shown by the dotted arrow line, the position of circle 1 will no longer be where it is now shown. Such motion will change the entire electrostatic field, at least, the shape of the field. This action gives rise to another phenomenon. Another field is created around the moving charge, known as the magnetic field, composed of imaginary lines of force, appearing in shape as concentric circles surrounding the moving charge.

One significant fact must be understood and remembered because it is of importance later. The magnetic field is set up when the charge moves. It is absent when the charge is at rest. Since a moving charge is electric current, we have magnetic lines of force surrounding all conductors which are carrying current. (These lines of force are frequently referred to as flux lines.) Thus, the motion of the electrons in the conductor placed within the field of a charged body resulted in the production of a magnetic field around that conductor. Since such a field is produced around the moving electron, it naturally is produced around a conductor within which electrons are moving under the influence of electric potential. If we now recall the conditions under which motion of electrons could be secured within that conductor located within the field of the stationary charge, it stands to reason that a magnetic field can be created around a conductor when the conductor is moved within an electric field; when the charge is moved or when the intensity of the field (this is the same as the intensity of the charge) is changed.

Continuing, since the motion of the charge produces the electromagnetic field, one electromagnetic field can produce another electromagnetic field because it will cause motion of electrons in the conductor, hence the production of magnetic lines of force.

Magnetism

In line with the attracting and repulsing properties of charged bodies, we find another form of attraction and repulsion phenomenon encountered in electrical circuits, but this time making use of other than our normal interpretation of charged bodies. A body which possesses the power of attracting iron is called a magnet and the state or condition of a body by means of which this attraction takes place is called magnetism. The power of attraction is made evident at certain points upon that body called poles. One pole upon that body is called the south pole and the other pole is called the north pole. These poles are designed S and N respectively.

Now, in line with what we shall discuss later, we find that this property of magnetism is associated with certain metals and further that in certain metals it assumes a transient state, that is, the body is magnetic or displays magnetic reactions only when under the influence of electric current. In addition, investigation shows that certain metals which do not possess magnetic properties may be changed to possess this property and that the state of magnetism becomes permanent. Such a body is known as a permanent magnet. A body which normally does not display magnetic properties but does so when under the influence of electric current is known as an electromagnet. We shall see later that such magnets play a tremendously important role in all talkie circuits.

A few words about the difference between magnetic and non-magnetic materials will not be amiss. These materials, like other forms of matter, consist of molecules and atoms. Neglecting the molecule for the moment let us consider the atom. Referring to Figure 3 in a previous lesson (Lesson 3) we note that the electrons revolve around the nucleus in various directions. The difference between a magnetic and non-magnetic material is the electronic activity in the atom. If the number of electrons revolving in one direction around the nucleus of the atom are equal to the number of electrons which revolve in the opposite direction, then that atom is non-magnetic. Such would be iron. However when this type of atom is placed within a magnetic field such as would be the case within a field of a moving charge or flow of current, the activity of the electrons is changed and the atom becomes magnetized. Such would be a piece of iron within another magnetic field.

In some instances, a body which does not normally display magnetic properties may be changed to possess such properties. Such is a piece of steel which has been subjected to magnetic lines of force. The atomic structure of the body is altered without further influence of an external body or magnetic field.

So much for magnetism at this time. We shall consider it later at greater length.

Germans Invent New Phonographic Disc

Berlin — Revolutionary development in phonographic discs is claimed in an invention brought out here by two Berlin engineers, Alexander Newman and Joseph Suchomski. They have applied for patents on the new apparatus.

The new invention, say its sponsors, will render obsolete the amplifiers which use valves. A plant for manufacturing the new apparatus is to be established in Germany and will have a capacity of 5,000,000 discs. The factory is slated to get under way in June.

Observers here are watching possible effect of the new equipment on other talking picture interests, particularly American firms.

Daylight Saving Voted in Canada After a Near-Riot

Cornwall, Ont.—There was a near-riot at a meeting of the city council when the question of daylight saving came up. The chamber was crowded with opponents of the measure who were armed with petitions against "fast time." Proceedings got out of hand several times and there was an uproar when Mayor Horowitz cast the deciding vote in favor of daylight saving after the councillors had split on the question. The council chamber was cleared before the meeting could continue with other business.

Starts Sunday Shows Though Clergy Protest

Burt, Iowa—Organized church opposition has been in debate with N. I. Morness, owner of the Belltone, over the showing of pictures on Sunday. Mr. Morness put on his first Sunday show last month and it has proved a success from the beginning.

There is no city ordinance against Sunday shows here, but no attempt had been made to put on Sunday shows previously. With the introduction of the Sunday shows in all the surrounding towns, Morness found it a good business move to inaugurate Sunday shows at Burt.

Portland, Me.—Agreement with distributors that the firm must be given first choice on product and the buying up of all worth while product to keep it away from the Empire are chief allegations of a $1,000,000 conspiracy action brought in Federal Court here against Paramount Publix by Empire Amusement Co.

When Publix acquired the Strand, State and Maine last December, it is alleged, an agreement was made with distributors that product for Portland must first be offered to that chain and that enough was and is being bought to sew up the situation. That enabled the defendant's theatre to fix admission prices and force the Empire into the second-run class, it is claimed. A few first-run films of poorer quality were offered the plaintiff, but at exorbitant rentals, the charges allege.

Soldiers' Sunday Shows Outside Virginia Ban

Richmond, Va.—Neither the governor nor state authorities have power to stop Sunday shows on government reservations in the state, as they are without jurisdiction in the matter. There is some agitation throughout the state on Sunday shows in various towns and recently fines were imposed upon exhibitors at Hampton and Phoebus. Complaints made to the governor have been referred back to the communities where alleged violations occurred.

This Explains Many Things

Hollywood—And here's how H. A. Woodmansee explains "The True Hollywoodite":

"The true Hollywoodite is an opportunist to his finger tips. Forever he has his ear to the ground and his eye to the keyhole, waiting for, watching for, fighting for a break. Believing in his heart that nerve is more important than caution, his motto is not 'Stop, look, and listen,' but 'Look, listen, and leap.'

"Filmland has developed the greatest race of opportunity leapers known to history. They're as agile as mountain goats. And one does not have to seek far for the reason. In movietown one may be sure of perpetual change; of sands shifting with every wind; of positions of safety suddenly changing to seats of peril; of opportunities unexpectedly flying open and snapping shut.

"Stay cautiously on a safe perch, as many a film celebrity has discovered to his sorrow, and Old Man Necessity will come along presently with a stout barrel stave and knock one off. Better leap while the leaping's good.

"The powers of filmland are always watching for the breaks; alert for the opportune moment to switch their style of production; vigilant as a broker scanning his ticker tape; studying the rise and fall of public interest in plays and players. Those obscure ones who hope to scale the heights, as well as those who have arrived, are wide awake, forever poised for the leap that may make or break them."

Sono Art Executives Confer on Production

Hollywood—Number and types of pictures to be included on the new season's program are subjects of conferences being held between Harry Thomas, vice-president in charge of production; Sam Zierler, production chief, and James Cruze, supervisor, of Sono Art-World Wide Pictures.

Harry Thomas

The company recently launched expansion of its exchange system which is to result in establishment of branches in additional cities. Sales forces of other branches also are to be enlarged.

Hoffman-Halperin Unit Ready to Start First

Los Angeles—Producing wide film features on 35mm. stock, as a licensee under the Douglas process, Liberty Prod. will make 20 talkers for 1930-31. The new company, headed by M. H. Hoffman, Victor and Edward Halperin and Herman Gumbiner, of Chicago, will market via the state rights market.

Hoffman is due in New York soon to sell franchises.

Only Four Grand For McCormack in 3-Day L. A. Run

Los Angeles—Exhibs here are blaming the low weekly intakes at first runs on the growing popularity of neighborhood stands, which continue to make inroads on downtown grosses.

Practically everything along the line took a severe nose-dive, with only two big houses showing high figures. "Divorcee" clicked for $23,000 at the Criterion, which sent the M-G-M Shearer vehicle away with a 230% rating, splendid for this house. Second honors were awarded Universal's "All Quiet" because of its $16,900 gross (135%), taken at the Circle.

The flops were plentiful, Fox's "Song o' My Heart," McCormack's song film, taking the booby prize with a $4,100 gross for the final three days of its five-week run.

"SONG O' MY HEART" (Fox)

Compton to Coast

Betty Compton, who has been appearing on Broadway, left this week for Hollywood to appear in Warner productions. She was given a swell send-off, with a band, flowers and everything.

Fans Turn Cards On Chi Critics; 40% for "Dr. Fu"

Chicago—In a week featured by four stand-out grosses, several red tallies and a lot of average business, the little girls who write about the pictures for the confusion of local theatre patrons took it on the chin again. That particular spot of their physiognomy, however, through constant shock is becoming calloused and nearly immune to pain.

The girls liked "One Romantic Night" (U. A.), but the public, apparently, was distrustful. The United Artists grossed a poor $16,500, for a rating of 55%, and then took in "The Bad One" (U. A.). The girls were cool about "Caught Short" (M-G-M), but the Chicago held them out all week. When it was over, it showed its best gross in months—about $54,500 (205%), and the picture, instead of going to the neighborhoods to be forgotten, as is the custom after they leave the Chicago, went to the Roosevelt for an indefinite run.

"All Quiet on the Western Front" (Universal) was sensational in its opening days at McVickers, coming in at a $6,000-a-day pace for the first four days. "Journey's End" (Tiffany) closed a three weeks' road show engagement at the Garrick with indications of building, doing $12,800 (185%). "White Cargo" bettered its fourth week record at the Castle by more than $3,000 for the fifth week, taking $9,600 (320%).

Weather: Cool and cloudy, fair and warm, rain and cool, then fair.

Opposition: "White Cargo" (5th week), Castle; "Caught Short," stage show, Chicago; "New Adventures of Dr. Fu Manchu," stage show, Oriental; "One Romantic Night," United Artists; "Hold Everything" (3 days of 2nd week), "All Quiet on the Western Front" (first 4 days), McVickers; "Texan" (2nd week), Roosevelt; "The Cuckoos" (2nd week), Woods; "Alias French Gertie," 5 acts RKO vaude, State-Lake; "Journey's End" (3rd week), Garrick; "Second Floor Mystery," Orpheum; "Men Without Women" (2nd time in Loop), Monroe.

"WHITE CARGO" (State Rights)

CASTLE—(300), 50c-75c, 5th week. Other attractions: "Daily News"-Universal newsreel. Up $3,000 over week preceding; good for at least two more weeks. Gross: $9,600. Rating: 320%.

"CAUGHT SHORT" (M-G-M)

CHICAGO—(3,910), 35c-85c, 7 days. Other attractions: Stage show, orchestra, comedy, newsreel, novelty short. Best business house has had in months, with another week of it in prospect with "The Divorcee" (M-G-M) in on a "pink." Gross: $54,500. Rating: 205%.

"JOURNEY'S END" (Tiffany)

GARRICK—(1,200), 50c-$1.50, 3rd and final week of road show policy. Bettered its second week slightly, but through here until McVickers is ready to take it at pop prices. Gross: $12,800. Rating: 185%.

"ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT" (U.)

McVICKERS—(2,283), 35c-85c, first 4 days. Other attractions: Comedy, musical short, newsreel. Critics were lyric; sensational start with holdouts daily. Gross (4 days): $24,300. Rating 200%. "Hold Everything" (W. B.) finished the last three days of a ten-day run with: Gross: $9,200. Rating: 70%.

"MEN WITHOUT WOMEN" (Fox)

(Second time in Loop)

MONROE—(982), 50c-75c, 7 days. Other attractions: Thirty minutes of newsreel. Gross: $4,200. Rating: 65%.

"NEW ADVENTURES OF DR. FU MANCHU" (Paramount)

ORIENTAL—(3,193), 35c-85c, 7 days. Other attractions: Stage show, organ, comedy, novelty short, newsreel. Another bad week for this house, but due for a come-back with a fourth anniversary by the spot's old draw, Paul Ash, and "Young Man of Manhattan" (Paramount). New bill opened big. Gross: about $21,500. Rating: 40%.

"SECOND FLOOR MYSTERY" (W. B.)

ORPHEUM—(751), 50c-75c, 7 days. Other attractions: Three Vitaphone acts and Universal newsreel. Gross: $5,400. Rating: 80%.

"TEXAN" (Paramount)

ROOSEVELT—(1,528), 35c-85c, 2nd and final week. Other attractions: Musical short, comedy, newsreel. Replaced by "Caught Short" (M-G-M), which came in after a big week at the Chicago with rents of display space in the Hearst newspapers. Gross: $[illegible]. Rating: [illegible]%.

"ONE ROMANTIC NIGHT" (U. A.)

UNITED ARTISTS—(1,728), 35c-85c, one week. Other attractions: Comedy, newsreel, novelty short. Poor and out; replaced by "The Bad One" (U. A.) Gross: About $[illegible]. Rating: [illegible]%.

Eats with Show

Seattle—At least two downtown theatres evidently believe that patrons must eat as well as see a show when they come into the theatre.

For several months, Jensen and Von Herberg have been serving free tea and cakes to women patrons at matinees at the Liberty. Now they have augmented their restaurant service to include gifts of candy to kiddies under 12 years of age—nice "crunchy" candy that will keep the nearby patrons awake when the kids start chewing.

The Seattle Paramount is not quite that big-hearted. They have installed a shiny, nickel-plated vending machine in the lobby, so that patrons may drop a nickel for their choice of gum or candy bars in "noisy" paper wrappers.

Cleveland Picks Up; Business O.K.; "Divorcee" Strong

Cleveland—First run theatres downtown picked up considerably last week and all of them showed a nice profit. "The Divorcee" went so strong in its third week that it is being held a fourth week, the first picture to play four weeks at the Stillman since "Hollywood Revue" last October. "Dr. Fu Manchu" and "The Arizona Kid" played to big business, and the other first runs did satisfactorily.

This week's Cleveland lineup is:

Weather: Cool and clear first part of the week; clear and warm last half.

First Runs: "Divorcee" (3rd week), Stillman; "Return of Dr. Fu Manchu," Allen; "Spring Is Here," State; "Lovin' the Ladies," RKO Palace; "The Arizona Kid," RKO Hippodrome; "Lord Byron of Broadway," Cameo, "The Big Party," Keith's East 105th St.

Balto Biz. Off; "Follies'" 14 Grand is High

Baltimore—Three very hot days and heavy rain Saturday hurt business considerably during the week, with only two theatres going over 100%, one hitting normal.

Judging by ratings, "Follies of 1930" took high honors with a gross of $14,000, on a rating of 140%, at the New. Next to that came the Little theatre with its 267 seats, which took in about $1,250 with "Applause." This was a rating of 125% for that house.

At Loew's Valencia, "Murder Will Out" did a 100% with gross of $3,500. The two largest grosses for the week were taken in by Loew's Century and Stanley. At the former "Return of Dr. Fu Manchu" was the attraction with a Loew stage unit; gross estimated at $18,500, or a 79% rating. At the latter, with "Song of the Flame," the gross was $15,800, with a rating of 91%.

Providence High To "Redemption", Grossing $20,000

Providence—Despite the annual Shrine Circus, baseball league openings and other outdoor distractions, exhibitors here had no kick with last week's business. The biggest money was taken in at Loew's State with John Gilbert's "Redemption," which hit about $20,500 for 100%.

Through a novel publicity ballyhoo, RKO's Albee likewise had a big week. In connection with the vaude attraction, "Golf Fiends," tie-ups were worked with golf clubs and advice on problems of the links were used in newspaper columns of "News-Tribune." Business was around $13,000. "Under a Texas Moon," at the Majestic, was good at $11,000, and RKO Victory likewise had a good week with "Arizona Kid," at $10,800.

Bologna ! !

Buddy Rogers' younger days were marked with continuous conquests, if we are to believe the following excerpt from a biography appearing in the current issue of a fan magazine:

"When Buddy Rogers was born in Olathe, Kansas, he embarked upon a boyhood typical of any red-blooded American boy. Some of his early life was spent in a desolate frontier town in New Mexico where, at a tender year, he had his first love affair. The memory of that boyhood sweetheart is still poignantly fresh and sweet with him. Returning to Olathe, Buddy entered the public schools. Despite his dislike for physical encounter, he became the champion fisticuff battler of Olathe when forced to fight for the right to show attention to a little girl schoolmate. From earliest memory he possessed a love for music. Joining a boys orchestra, he achieved a reputation in the vicinity of Olathe for his baritone solos. Later he developed a love for jazz and became proficient with drums and traps. In college his interest was divided between his work with a jazz orchestra and his efforts to establish himself as the best-dressed boy in school."

$9,070 in 3-Day "Young Man" Run At Des Moines

Des Moines—This town gave a warm welcome to "Young Man of Manhattan" at the Paramount, which during a three-day run did a 200% business. The requests are said to have been legion for a return of the picture, which might easily have been put on for a record as an all-week feature. Popularity of the original Satevepost story was given as the reason for its success. Bad weather cut into business in general, with one day being very hot and the next very cold.

"Song of the Flame" was taken off two days early to start "Mammy." Several pictures were judged to be better than average business getters were it not for the downpouring rain.

Weather: Cold and alternating warm weather.
Opposition: "Young Man of Manhattan," stage show (3 days), Paramount; "Gay Madrid," stage show (4 days), Paramount; "Aviator" (3 days), Strand; "Lady to Love" (4 days), Strand; "Song of the Flame" (5 days), Des Moines; "Hello, Sister" (3 days), RKO vaude., RKO Orpheum; "Ladies of Leisure," RKO vaude. Downtown Seattle to Be 100% Wired by June 1

Seattle—With scheduled closing of John Danz's Winter Garden to install RCA Photophone, every downtown theatre in Seattle, including all first runs, vaudeville theatres, musical tab houses and second runs, by June will be equipped for sound. The Winter Garden will be dark for about a week, during which time it will be redecorated, refurnished and will have new projection equipment installed.

Wiring for Sound

Springfield—The Hippodrome, seating 300, has been closed by Chakeres Theatres Co., Inc., pending remodeling and installation of sound. The house has been playing Westerns at 10 cent admissions.

All Under Par in Mpls; "Big Pond", High at $34,000

Minneapolis—The Minnesota, showing "Big Pond," carried the biggest gross for the week. Chevalier brought the house $34,000, although the rating hit only 85%. "The New Adventures of Fu Manchu" was fairly beneficial to the State, the house registering $19,540, or 80%.

The Orpheum, ballyhooing "He Knew Women," was close on the heels of the State. The picture grossed $17,900, which gave the house 80%. A third rating of 80% went to the Century, which housed "Hold Everything." The offering did well, grossing $8,250.

Pantages registered 75% and a gross of $7,500 on "Call of the West." In the secondary class, the Seventh Street (RKO) showed "The Cuckoos," which had been shown the previous week at the Orpheum. On this picture, the house grossed $6,245, or 70%. The Lyric, boosting "Dumbbells in Ermine," rang up $3,000 to a 90% rating. The Aster showed "A Most Immoral Lady" to the tune of a 80% rating and a $2,680 gross.

Weather: Warm two days, chilly rest of week.

Let's Go Native

(Paramount—All Talker)

A Honey

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

THERE are plenty of laughs in this new Paramount comedy, which has a novel story and fine cast. It has three names to carry it, Jack Oakie, Skeets Gallagher and Jeannette MacDonald, and is well done from every angle. It's one of the new season Paramounts, and if it's a sample of the new line-up, the company is going to have a big year.

George Marion, Jr., collaborated with Percy Heath on story and dialogue and also wrote the lyrics. He did a whale of a job, for the picture has several catchy numbers which should be hits. Jack Oakie has been mounting the ladder of screen popularity steadily and this picture should help him considerably. Leo McCarey did a nice job of direction, getting all possible out of the many funny situations.

The story concerns the love affair of a young millionaire, whose father threatens to disinherit him if he doesn't marry the daughter of a rival soap firm, in order to effect a merger. The youth, however, is in love and when his father issues the ultimatum he sails for Buenos Aires on the same ship as his fiancee is traveling, only he goes as a stoker in company with a friend and a taxicab driver, who had to leave town on account of an accident. They are shipwrecked and make their way to a tropical island, head man of which is Skeets Gallagher. Skeets has taught the native girls to sing and hoof, and how! The island is fabulously rich in pearls and oil. When the hero's father arrives on the scene, he sanctions the marriage of his son to the girl, who since has come into possession of the island. In addition, he arranges to buy the island, but after closing the deal it sinks into the ocean.

This is comedy all the way and loaded with typical Marion gags. There is real kick in the casual way the riches of the island are brought out. For instance, the gang begins laying out a tennis court and drives a stake, with oil gushing out, or eats oysters only to find they are full of pearls.

The cast is uniformly good, but the work of Oakie and William Austin stands out. There are some fine settings and photography is excellent.

Midnight Mystery

(R-K-O—All Talker)

Novel Thriller

(Reviewed by Edwin Schallert)

A MYSTERY plot, wide open for the audience, but with the characters in the picture kept guessing—that's a fairly new twist in film melodramas and has a lot to do with spreading fascination in "Midnight Mystery." This picture would be better than it is if it got away to a quicker start. There is much conversation to begin with, atmospheric chiefly, smart-cracking, and calculated to throw the audience into the mood for the real story and make them believe it. One can't exactly deny that these scenes aren't necessary and clever, but they would benefit by pruning.

Locale of "Midnight Mystery" is Hawk Island, a weird place near Cuba, during a raging storm—the old dark and stormy night idea! The island home of Gregory Sloane is the scene. He is in love with Sally Wayne, writer of detective stories. Ambitious for a career, she is slow about going through with their contemplated marriage. So Sloane thinks he'll try the ruse of sickening her with mystery plots by pretending to be a murderer himself. And so he makes all the motions of shooting a sheikish foreigner over a seeming quarrel.

The two decide to carry the joke over to the morning, Sloane letting everybody in the house believe that he is a desperate man. The girl, however, is told by Sloane that the murder is a hoax, and becomes furious about the deception.

Meanwhile, there is one member of the house party who sees a chance for a "perfect crime" when he learns that the supposed victim of the tragedy is really alive, but that everybody thinks that he is dead. Jealousy enters into this situation, and the resultant murder and the unraveling of it yield a fascination to the very end. Even the girl is in doubt about who committed the crime because she only has the hero's word that he didn't do it, and naturally everybody else suspects him. Because of this question about who is guilty, the production is tense and clever in all the later scenes.

In all of this Betty Compson, Hugh Trevor, Lowell Sherman, Ivan Lebedeff, Rita La Roy and Raymond Hatton figure very importantly, and they comprise a thoroughly efficient cast. Sherman's performance is the top-notcher, Trevor does competent work, while Miss Compson is excellent in the amateur detecting scenes.

Courage

(WB—All Talker)

Splendid Woman's Show

THIS is excellent fare for women—only, lonely—or with husbands past, present or future.

It takes the much-used theme of mother-love from angles sufficiently different and human to make the production click wherever they want gulps, tears and laughs. In short, "Courage" is an emotional outing for women, and men won't be ashamed of the optical moisture. Belle Bennett, as the mother does quite as much to make famous her character of Mrs. Colbrook as the character of Stella Dallas did to make Belle Bennett famous as a mother. She troups a difficult role with impressive deftness and shading.

Second honors for providing top entertainment, if not equal division of first honors, go to Leon Janney as Bill Colbrook, the youngest son. (The part was erroneously credited in Motion Picture News for May 24 to Rex Bell). The screen version departs from the stage play of the same name in one major point. In the stage version Bill was an illegitimate child. The Code of Ethics may be responsible for Warner's action in giving the screen part legitimacy with Bill's spiritual parentage credited to the man his mother really loved, while his physical pater is Mr. Colbrook, legally the father of the six others in the brood.

Archie Mayo did well with the direction, especially in holding his players to their characters. They are human and believable. The added dialogue by Walter Anthony is in good mood, and his contribution of comedy lines clicks for several good laughs well-timed against the dramatic situations. One fault which may be charged to Mayo or Anthony, or both, or to the cutting room, is the absence of over-lapping action in several earlier sequences which end abruptly on quick fade-outs. There is nothing of story established in these sequences to carry over the thread to succeeding sections or "acts." It savors of an attempt at stage technique, but succeeds only in letting the audience down and compelling it to grope through the first hundred feet or so of each new sequency to pick up the action, geography and identification of characters. This, however, does not detract from the general entertainment excellence of the production as a whole. Once the menace appears, in the person of Blanche Frederici as Aunt Caroline, things move along smoothly with plenty of overlap to keep up the suspense and understanding of who, why and where.

Marian Nixon does the seventeen-year-old Murial Colbrook with enough realism to give any doting mother or pa-pa chuckles and groans at the dramatics of adolescence.

Richard Tucker as Jerome Rudkin, the banker, does a small part with the fervor and skill worthy of a principal role.

Warner's have heralded other of their product with more force than they have so far put back of "Courage," and with much less reason from an exhibitor angle. This one can be touted for women without risking a scientist's atom of patron confidence and goodwill.

Use good kid comedy with this. Other shorts not so important because feature is strong enough to carry the show.

The Fall Guy

(Radio Pictures—All Talker)

Fair

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

THERE is very little box office in this production, due to a threadworn plot and loose direction, but it is saved from being a total loss as entertainment by the wisecracking of Ned Sparks and the sincere acting of Mae Clarke. They deserved a better vehicle.

Jack Mulhall has the title role, but his voice is not ideal for talkers and he exhibits a tendency to overact throughout. Perhaps this was due to the fact that the story has little action in it. Based on the play of the same name, most of the footage is devoted to a living room setting with the characters engaged in interminable talk. However, Miss Clarke's portrayal of the role of the nagging wife was a delight to watch and Sparks' gags clicked many a laugh.

The story is that of a drug clerk, unable to find employment, finally agreeing to work for a shady character whom he suspects of being a bootlegger. He does not learn, until he is arrested, that his employer is a dope peddler. The arrest is made by the sweetheart of his sister-in-law while a dinner guest. But the long arm of coincidence is again brought into play to enable him to clear himself of suspicion.

Treat this as an average program offering and don't make any promises about its appeal.

Needs plenty of support in the way of good shorts.

Lacks Selling Angles

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

THIS is fair as a program offering, but it lacks selling angles. It has a fairly good, if far-fetched, story, which wanders considerably toward the climax, and a satisfactory cast that lacks big names. Accordingly, it probably is best suited for a double feature bill, or where strong short subjects will get over the program.

Buster Collier and Pauline Starke are the leads in this drama of a mythical Balkan principality. Buster is a struggling author who inherits $200,000, half of which he spends for a castle in Europe. He finds the place allegedly haunted, due to the efforts of its former mistress to escape detection as the kidnapper of her child, custody of which the courts awarded her divorced husband. He befriends the wife, an American, helps her to escape, is fined the remainder of his inheritance and returns to New York to win the girl.

There is some good comedy in this, supplied by the negro player, Clarence Muse. He is Collier's valet and does good work. Ullrich Haupt is good as Count Von Baden, although he hasn't much to do, and the rest of the cast is adequate.

As a so-so program offering, this will get by, but don't make any promises for it.

Musical shorts will help this.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Erle C. Kenton. Scenario and dialogue by Norman Houston. Edited by Gene Havlick. Photographed by Ted Tetzlaff. Length, 6,359 feet. Running time, 62 minutes. Release date, March 17, 1930.

Border Romance

(Tiffany—All Talker)

Entertaining

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

SEVERAL episodes and some of the dialogue in this picture indicate that the censors were caught napping or were too engrossed at the time to spot the liberties with good taste taken by the producers. However, the latter was probably the reason, for the picture is entertaining throughout.

It's a breezy romance, laid in old Mexico, and is both colorful and appealing because the director has not taken the plot seriously. He has given it a comic operetta touch, although the story apparently called for straight dramatic treatment, with the result that the picture is delightfully nonchalant.

Don Terry enacts the role of the hero with gusto. Armida, playing opposite, is a satisfactory Mexican spitfire, although not overburdened with histrionic ability. Wesley Barry displays some ham acting, while Marjorie Kane, playing a comedy role, works hard without much success. Victor Potel, ideally cast, lands many laughs. Terry and Armida sing several songs passably.

Terry, Barry and Potel, as American cowboys, travel to Mexico to sell their herd of horses. Terry falls in love with the little Mexican girl and after killing a Mexican who tried to shoot one of his pals, goes back to see her again. The Rurales set out to capture him, but he eludes them with opera bouffe ease. As they ride along the countryside the Rurales burst into song at every opportunity and the effect is impressive. The scenic backgrounds are gems of beauty.

One scene shows Potel going to the river for a bath, not knowing it is "ladies' day," and plunging into the midst of a group of naked women. In another episode he explains that he could not get a drink at the brook because "the horses were careless." Another censorable sequence cannot be described in print. "Border Romance" was the second picture directed by Richard Thorpe to be shown on Broadway in a week, and in both he has overstepped the bounds of decency. However, the Hays Code of Ethics probably will get him later. A fight between two horses provides several thrilling moments.

Be careful about playing this picture if you cater to family trade. It's okay for sophisticated audiences.

Spot in shorts of the domestic type.

In the South Seas With Mr. and Mrs. Pinchot

(Talking Picture Epics—Talker)

Mighty Interesting

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

DELIGHTFULLY different from the run-o'-the-mill celluloid records of exploration trips, easily adapted to a tremendous ballyhoo, which, if intelligently presented, should swell the coffers of almost any box-office. But, if presented cold without special handling it will fall as flat as a pancake; not that it deserves it, however.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Pinchot, a likeable old couple, brought back from their exploration trip to the South Seas one of the finest and most interesting assortments of wild-life camera shots ever gathered by anyone. The expedition, incidentally, was staged in cooperation with the natural history societies of New York and Philadelphia.

Not a single school child, regardless of age, should be deprived of seeing the wonders of land and water life of this strange land. And that's where your big exploitation possibilities lie. You will have to work hard, but, we are [illegible] go [illegible]

Enlist the cooperation of school authorities and leaders in historical and exploration fields. Give them a special showing—and they'll do the rest, recognizing immediately the splendid entertainment appeal and educational value of the production.

Adult audiences, too, will be thrilled, what with the numerous hair-raising episodes of the trip, the beauty of the South Sea landscape, the strangeness of animal and bird life, and—the most important factor of all—the refreshing simplicity and honest naturalness which stamps the entire record. There is absolutely no doubt that second thought was given to the commercial angles of the Pinchots' film. To this can be attributed the sincerity of the effort. Other exploration films have resulted directly from a desire to produce an expedition record with one eye on the box-office. Pictures of the latter type, almost invariably, bear all the ear-marks of having been staged. With the new Pinchot picture, this phase of production is absent and, we predict, it will live longer as a result.

The black, sweaty wild men with the inevitable monotonous study of their social and domestic capers, are missing from this record. Thanks to the Pinchots. Every foot contains something new, always of interest.

Howard Cleaves is to be highly commended for his fine camera work. And to the Pinchots, a medal for their splendid handling of material used to describe their mighty interesting trip, which they lightly elaborate upon in dialogue.

A snappy sound cartoon is just the thing to run with this.

Produced by Mr. and Mrs. C. Pinchot in the South Seas. Distributed by Talking Picture Epics. Photography by Howard Cleaves. Released Sept. 1, 1930. Length, 5,538 feet. Running time, about 62 minutes.

No cast, all being members of the expedition.

Call of the West

(Columbia—Talker)

Stupid

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

SLOPPY, sappy sentimentality!

An unconvincingly told cross between a Western and a backstage yarn, stupidly dotted with dialogue which is as meaningless and trivial as any one studio could make it. And acted as poorly.

A splendid example of factory type picture making. Slowness of the first three or four reels reaches the point of boredom. There is relief for a few hundred feet, during which an impressive sequence introduces a cattle raid by a gang of hustlers, but this thrill is soon over and the tempo immediately sinks back to a pitch more boring than at first.

Harry Cohn produced, Albert Ray directed and Dorothy Revier and Matt Moore are featured.

Sound job is okay. As a matter of fact, it's too good. A little distortion might have jumbled up the mess of banal dialogue, losing for the film much of its amateurishness.

Run it on your regular double feature bill, but be sure the support is extra strong.

Produced by Harry Cohn. Directed by Albert Ray. Story by Florence Ryerson and Colin Clements. Continuity and dialogue by Colin Clements. Photography by Ben Kline. Film editor, Ray Snyder. Release date, May 10, 1930. Length, 6,500 feet. Recording [illegible]

Light of Western Stars

(Paramount—All Talker)

Great Entertainment

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

IT'S too bad that the policy of the Publix houses on the main stem didn't permit this picture to get a break, for then it would have been launched under auspices in keeping with its quality. It's a great piece of entertainment, a western with he-man stuff, based on a strong story and excellently done.

The Zane Grey story from which this is adapted was a best seller and certainly will aid the draw of the picture. Richard Arlen heads the splendid cast which includes Mary Brian, Fred Kohler, Harry Green, Regis Toomey, William LeMaire and George Chandler.

Peculiarly, Green, whose comedy work is outstanding, is not included in the film billing. He deserves a big hand for his work as Pie-Pan.

The story concerns the efforts of a cowboy to win back for a girl the claim of her murdered brother and to solve the murder. He starts left-footedly by insulting the girl while drunk and then assumes the role of protector. After a series of events, he finds that the gold on the ranch was the motive for her brother's murder.

Arlen is going to win a lot of new friends by his characterization in this picture, which should result in future films teaming him with Mary Brian. Fred Kohler also does some outstanding work.

Throw of the Dice

(Hollywood Pictures—Synchronized)

Made in India—and Not Bad

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

WE suggest that you see this yourself to determine just how far it will get at your box-office. If they appreciate an elaborately told story of India, made right on the spot, where gorgeous pageantry plays no small part in the picturization of a battle between two Hindu kings for the possession of a beautiful girl, then this is the stuff for them. They spared no expense in its production, employing many hundreds of natives, and what looked like entire towns, for immense mob scenes; and all were well handled. In a few widely scattered sequences, however, the action slows down.

Probably the biggest flaw in the vehicle lies in its synchronization. This mechanical factor, if corrected, will undoubtedly enhance its merit tremendously. In the present state, the musical accompaniment is ruinous; and at times nerve racking. It sounds like a victrola sorely in need of winding.

Photography is commendable and the direction splendid. All told the production is impressive.

Very light comedy needed to balance. A cartoon and a good musical revue reel will go well.

Produced by Pro Patria Films, Ltd., London, in India. Distributed in U. S. by Hollywood Pictures, via states rights market. Length, 6,700 feet. Running time, 73 minutes. Release date, Dec., 1929.

Lady of Scandal

(M-G-M—All Talker)

Average Program Calibre

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

FREDERICK LONSDALE'S play, "The High Road," comes to the screen as a talker under the title of "Lady of Scandal," but there's little scandal in the lady and nothing of consequence in the picture itself.

As a program picture of ordinary strength, audiences will accept it as mildly interesting. It cannot hope to reach beyond that classification. The story has an English background, and the rather slow and draggy stage tempo has not been eliminated in the screen adaptation. But it is doubtful whether or not anything better could have been done with the material at hand.

Ruth Chatterton is spotted in the title role and provides most of the sparkle on the otherwise dull surface. Balance of the cast, including Ralph Forbes and Basil Rathbone, fit in nicely into their characterizations. Sidney Franklin had little chance to show anything in direction beyond regulation formula of translating a stage play to the screen, retaining the staginess thereby.

The story concerns a popular English actress who consents to marry a young nobleman. The latter takes her to meet his family, who are up in arms over his intentions. After piling insults on the girl, an agreement is reached whereby she will wait six months before marrying the boy.

The girl lives on the estate and gradually puts pep into the staid members of the family. In so doing, a secret love affair develops between the actress and Basil Rathbone, cousin of the intended bridegroom, who is rather noted for his way with women. The girl discovers Rathbone's affair with the wife of another and decides to forget him. But Rathbone makes ardent love and declares he will give up his current affair. Discovery is made the woman's husband has died in Paris, and Chatterton demands Rathbone make the trip to tell the widow of his new and greater love. While Rathbone is writing instead of going, Chatterton gets the widow on the phone and has Rathbone agree to come to Paris at once. Then the usual "it couldn't have been otherwise" parting.

Close comes soon after with the young son deciding to release the actress from her engagement; and she returns to her old life on the stage as the reigning favorite.

"Lady of Scandal" will probably reach those week runs where Ruth Chatterton commands drawing power. It is a weak programmer and is better geared for the one and two day stands where business stands up as a matter of routine.

Draw comedies are badly needed with this one.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. From play by Frederick Lonsdale. Directed by Sidney Franklin. Scenario by Hans Kraly. Dialogue adaptation by Claudine West and Edwin Justus Mayer. Photographed by Oliver Marsh and Arthur Miller. Length, 7,858 feet. Running time, 76 minutes. Release date, May 24.

So This Is London

(Fox—All Talker)

Splendid Entertainment

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

FROM the second Will Rogers' homely face reaches the screen and as long as he stays on it, "So This Is London" is first-rate entertainment. When the story veers to other characters, the drop takes on the speed of a plumb line hitting the ocean bottom.

With its directorial shortcomings, the picture is fine entertainment, replete with Rogerian drolleries and punctuated with many laughs. The witticisms of the comedian are, as usual, inimitable and the production all the way very much of a one man show. It follows that when the principal character isn't there for you to see and hear the proceedings inevitably sag.

"So This Is London" is the second in Rogers' international travels. In his first talker, family affairs and misadventures carried him to Paris. This time, he is a cotton mill owner, a dyed-in-the-wool American and death on any and all things British. When his business takes him to London where an important deal awaits his attention, he leaves Texas with considerable loathing and distaste. On the boat, his son meets an English girl, falls in love to his family's dismay and determines to carry the love match through to its inevitable conclusion. Rogers objects. Ditto, his wife, played with her usual charm by Irene Rich. At any rate, the boy conspires to have his parents at a week-end party to meet the girl's parents, Lord and Lady Worthing.

In an effort to prove to the boy that his judgment is askew, Rogers determines to live up to the English nobleman's conception of the uncouth, savage American. He and Miss Rich do, ruin a perfectly good dinner and almost break up the party and the match. But Rogers gets a peak at the girl (Maureen O'Sullivan), instinctively feels he has been all wet in his tactics and finally straightens out the misunderstanding. Interluded are a number of charming and wholly laughable sequences wherein Rogers, for instance, goes on a shooting match with Lord Worthing, dabbles humorously in international politics with him and, in general, provides the audience with many stretches of real entertainment.

Worthing (Lumsden Hare) is played in the typical Hollywood conception of an Englishmen: bored, slow-witted, left-footed, et al. The characterization is really ridiculous, practically a caricature, although it is entirely possible Director John Blystone insisted upon it as an obvious foil for Roger's witticisms.

Miss O'Sullivan as the girl is pleasing enough, but her voice registers stridently and often, with displeasing resonance. The boy, Frank Albertson, comes through with a routine performance, inocuous enough but entirely undistinguished. Owen Davis, Sr., is credited with the dialogue, but all the way it is obvious that Rogers, as is his usual wont, ad libbed.

Cartoons and musical numbers O. K. here.

Promotion for Hulan

A. G. Hulan, installation supervisor of RCA Photophone, has been appointed assistant manager of the installation and service department in charge of installations, being responsible for the activities of the department from the time the exhibitor's contract is accepted to one week following completion of installation. At the conclusion of that period, the installation will be turned over to C. L. Lootens, assistant manager in charge of service.

Opinions On Pictures

Fat Wives for Thin

(Mack Sennett Talker—2 Reels)

Fine

HERE'S a mark for all producers of comedy shorts to shoot at. It reveals more intelligence than many features, is expertly handled in all departments and is high-powered entertainment, proving that slapstick is not necessary to get laughs. The story centers about a wife who can eat as much as a dozen farm hands at a sitting, with the husband registering his disgust. Mother-in-law butts into the affair and helps the fun along. Complications are developed naturally, and the situations net many laughs. Marjorie Beebe, Andy Clyde and Aggie Herring play the leading roles with a realism that is a credit to them and the director. Running time, 22 minutes.

If you've booked a serial feature use this to save the show.

Station S-T-A-R, No. 12

(Tiffany All Talker—1 Reel)

Average

NOT as good as the majority of its forerunners. Lloyd Hamilton is the announcer in this subject and most of the footage is devoted to showing him trying on straw hats, a salesman having convinced him that the public is tired of the pancake cap that is his trade mark. And the audience gets tired of seeing him try them on. Carlotta King sings and Dorothy Burgess appears in a thin little skit, but you forget them in a hurry, as well as Walter Hiers' monologue. Leatrice Joy's rendition of a French song is the highlight of the subject. Running time, 10 minutes.

Satisfactory filler for any program.

Office Steps

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1002—1 Reel)

Okay

A PEPPY singing and dancing novelty short that will enliven any bill. The setting is a modern office, with six stenos in chorus girl costumes doing a little typing and a lot of singing and dancing, the boss dictating in rhymed patter as he hoofs. Solo dancers, a pair of cloggers, and a ham actor rendering "Singing in the Bathtub" the while he dubs in Shakespearean lines keep things going at a lively pace. The players include Harry McNaughton, the Phelps Twins, Billy Reed, Lou Duthers, Jack Thompson and Gertrude McDonald. There are four musical numbers. Running time, 10 minutes.

Will fit in nicely anywhere.

Short Subjects

Hearts and Hoofs

(Pathe—Talker—2 Reels)

Weak

CORNELIUS KEEFE makes a handsome cowboy and Mona Rico an attractive gypsy girl in the first of the new series of Rodeo comedy shorts, but they're not so hot when it comes to singing love songs to each other. The story is slight and the direction haphazard. The cowboy woos and wins the girl in short order, despite the obstacle of a stiletto-wielding rival, and carries her off. However, the subject is not intended to be taken seriously and it's a relief from the stereotyped Western short. It contains one raw piece of business—a boy shooting a squirt-gun at the back of a character while a monkey is perched on his shoulder. You can guess the rest. Running time, 19 minutes.

Use it with a society drama or comic feature.

Paper Hanging

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3972—1 Reel)

Amusing

ALTHOUGH the situation of an amateur papering his home has been done many times, this one clicked a lot of laughs, regardless. The frugal householder follows the usual line of covering doors, pictures, etc., with the paper, and then covering his handiwork with pictures. It moves along at a lively pace, Johnny Arthur having the lead. A youngster, cast as his son, nets some chuckles on his own hook by butting into papa's endeavors. Directed by Carter De Haven. Running time, 9 minutes.

Just the thing for a heavy feature.

The Grand Uproar

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1000—2 Reels)

Good Specialty

JIM McWilliams burlesques opera in this number, which is good for some laughs and offers good novelty entertainment. First he gags a politician's speech, then on the piano he gives his interpretation of repetitious lines of an opera. It's all very amusing and cleverly done. Running time, 8 minutes.

Will fit anywhere comedy turn needed.

Interest has been built up in the ascent of the glacier by a dramatic episode, well-handled and effective, centering about a hermit who has lived on the glacier since the day, forty years before, when his bride fell to her death in a crevice. Her body, frozen in ice, is his shrine. Running time, 10 minutes.

The sessions at Hollywood will, in addition to L. E. Tillman, western division manager, be attended by the following: From Denver: J. R. Beale, A. A. Bruce, K. L. Burk, B. T. Cale; Los Angeles: W. C. Riter, J. W. Drum, H. M. Lentz, M. J. McCarthy; Portland: C. E. Tillman, Clyde L. White; Salt Lake City: J. F. Baker, G. H. Warren, A. W. Baron, H. F. Matthews; San Francisco: P. Weinstein, H. J. Henrioulle, O. L. Olsen; Seattle: Neil Walton, W. H. Bloom.

Morris Safier has been appointed circuit sales manager. He first came into prominence as central division manager for United Artists and later as Warners' sales manager of long-run pictures.

Louis Weinberg, who has been associated with Columbia as a special representative for six years, has been placed in complete charge of the short product.

Hal Hodes, who has been in charge of sales promotion for the past year, has been appointed manager of a newly created accessory sales department.

Pictures Aid in Mental Health, Says Scientist

Washington—Viewing films helps a man's mental health, Dr. Frans Alexander, psychiatrist of Berlin, declared at the World Conference on Mental Hygiene.

"Motion pictures must rank in first importance and helpfulness among the instinctive measures of civilization to provide substitute satisfaction for adventure and excitement of which we have been robbed by the present-day routine of economics and mechanical existence," Dr. Alexander says.

"Man finds his lost individuality in the cinema," Dr. Alexander said, "if not in reality in imagination, if only for a short time nevertheless day after day and repeatedly. This makes for mental health, and the scientist who studies the human mind is grateful for the intensive development of the film industry."

Pathe Officials Arrested! Same Old P. A. Stuff

When Phil Reisman, J. P. McAloon and E. W. Ballentine of the Pathe home office stepped off the Advance Century, on their way to the company's regional sales meeting at the Blackstone hotel here last week, they were placed under arrest and bundled into a squad car before even the Pathe News cameramen could start grinding. With sirens shrieking, the squad car raced across town while the Pathe trio protested in vain. About the time they were beginning to get worried the car, with a final blast of the siren, pulled up in front of the Blackstone and was greeted by a bunch of hooting sales delegates, here for the meeting.

The stunt was Dan Roche's, of the local Pathe office, who arranged it with William Russell, commissioner of police. It was good for space in the straight news columns of the dailies, getting a better break than did Fox that rated only a paragraph on the financial pages when its execs came through town on their way to the convention city and were joined here by Harley Clarke, president.

Gets Silent Print by Mistake; Borrows Talker

The Adelphi was sent a silent print by mistake for a Sunday program recently. The manager, unable to raise anyone at the exchange on the Sabbath when he discovered the mistake that had been made, appealed to another manager of a near-by house to share a feature with him in order to prevent closing down entirely. The neighbor turned him down cold. House was about to fold when a third manager, hearing of the plight of the first, voluntarily offered to relay feature reels to the unfortunate one. Offer accepted.

Curfew shall not ring at Quincy tonight, or any other night, henceforth. The ancient local institution for the safeguarding of the city's youth goes down before the talking picture era. Patrons of local theatres complained that the curfew's blowing interrupted downtown talking picture programs and the city council abolished it, despite the protests of social workers.

Bud Rogers, Sono Art-World Wide sales manager, spent several days here this week preparatory to the naming of a new Chicago manager to fill the post left vacant by the resignation of Leroy Alexander last week. Alexander became branch manager for Columbia, replacing C. C. Wallace.

Announcement of the selection of a new Sono Art-World Wide manager will be made, Rogers said, when Harry H. Thomas, vice-president in charge of distribution, arrives here this week.

While here, Rogers completed local booking arrangements with RKO for his company's production, "What A Man," which will play all RKO theatres nationally. A similar deal for "Cock o' the Walk" is in prospect, he intimated.

Rogers is making a tour of the company's branch offices throughout the country.

Chicago Theatre Books 'Pink' as Policy Reversal

Loop theatres opened the week with some strange billing, but the public appears to favor the departures from custom, with the result that most houses are beginning the seven-day period with some unaccustomed prosperity.

The Chicago, recognized here as a family institution, is showing "The Divorcee" (M-G-M) in spite of the pink slip handed it by the local censor board. This is the first "pink" to play the house in a period that can be measured by years. Shubert's Garrick, on a picture policy since late winter, brought "Ingagi," jungle sensation, back again after three weeks' road-showing of Journey's End" (Tiffany). "Ingagi" did five weeks of abnormal business in the same house immediately preceding the entrance of "Journey's End."

The Oriental was on its way out of a prolonged period of depression with its fourth anniversary program headed by Paul Ash, the old favorite at this spot. Ash was met by a brass band and hundreds of local members of a Paul Ash club on his arrival in town. Here for one week. Feature is "Young Man of Manhattan" (Para.), and should help the draw.

The Roosevelt, a run house, took "Caught Short" (M-G-M) after it had played a week at the Chicago. Pictures usually go from the Chicago to the outlying houses, but the Roosevelt was doing fair business with it at the outset. The picture was helped considerably by lavish display ads in the Hearst papers here.

Chicago Branch Heads U. A. Clean-Up Drive

Cress Smith's mid-western sales forces took first place in United Artists' annual clean-up drive on old product, concluded recently. The Chicago branch was third in the same drive to dispose of 1928-1930 product nationally.

The Thacher decree may have been a boon to exhibitors elsewhere, but, it appears, the Chicago indie hasn't benefited much by it. The salesmen still hold the whip hand here, as is proved by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS cameraman who caught Exhibitor Freddy Gilford on his knees begging Salesman Al Hoffman for a break, while a group of apprehensive exhibitors await the outcome.

Chicago SMPE Chapter Holds First Meeting

The Chicago chapter of the S.M.P.E. was formerly instituted at a dinner meeting at the City Club. Joseph Dubray of Bell & Howell was elected chairman of the group, and J. Elliott Jenkins of Jenkins & Adair, secretary. O. F. Sphar and Oscar B. Depue were election managers.

The territorial limits of the Chicago chapter were fixed on the west at a boundary line 50 miles east of Denver, and on the east, 50 miles east of Cleveland. No north or south boundaries were fixed.

The following committees were named: papers and program, Joseph Dubray, Fred Kranz, E. S. Pearsall, Jr.; publicity, B. W. Depue. Dinner meetings will be held on the third Thursday of each month at a place designated in advance of each meeting.

Eleven active members, 12 associate members and 8 guests witnessed the institution of the chapter. A drive for a membership of 200 will be inaugurated at once.

"Unborn Child" Cleaning Up in Chicago Theatres

Louis Weiss, vice-president and treasurer of Windsor Pictures, spent a week in Chicago watching "Her Unborn Child" do record business at the outlying houses. Several big neighborhood spots, such as the Sheridan and Senate, are reported to have grossed above $10,000 with the picture. Usual gross for the houses is around $4,000 weekly. Dave Dubin reports that he has 125 prints of "Unborn Child" ready for distribution.

Goetz Loans Movie-Phone And Saves "Cargo" Sale

L. E. Goetz sold "White Cargo" to the Oliver at South Bend. The house was not wired, so rather than lose the sale when the exhib learned no silent prints were open, Goetz took his own Movie-Phone equipment and installed it in the Indiana house. Equipment comes out when the run is over.

The Davis theatre, Milwaukee, one of the oldest legit houses in the city, was recently wired and is taking "White Cargo" in the near future, according to report.

Seasonal Slump Gets Early Start and Exhibitors Trim Sails

The advance hot weather of recent weeks has already been felt by the small neighborhood houses. Several have folded for the summer; more are on a week-end closing policy, and still others are looking for new business-getting gags to combat the seasonal slump.

The usual bathing beauty contests and gift night gags are re-appearing, or continuing—as the case may be. Reduction of prices and withdrawal of stage acts are also going into effect for the summer. Decline in theatre advertising in the dailies is already noticeable.

Numbers of the neighborhood houses are co-operating with merchants in their vicinity in a two-way prize gag. The merchants give coupons with every purchase made. Lucky coupon draws a prize to be announced and awarded at the local theatre later. During the period of the coupon-passing, the theatre is running trailers calling attention to the store or stores at which they may be secured. Some merchants are donating the prize, but others insist on the theatre sharing a part of its cost. Radios or household utilities are the most popular decoys, with the gag helping the neighborhood's business as well as the theatre's appreciably.

Mechanical Circus for "Swing High" Publicity

A feature of the Pathe regional sales meet held here last week was the miniature mechanical circus which had been set up in the meeting room at the Blackstone, and which is to be used nationally in connection with exploitation work on "Swing High."

The mechanical circus is the work of a patient inventor of Hamburg, Iowa, who spent fifteen years building it. It is a complete reproduction of a "big top" in operation, and includes all appurtenances of a circus, such as side shows, animal wagons, ticket wagons, etc. Everything connected with it is mechanically operated. When the sales delegates entered the meeting room for the first business session they saw it in operation for the first time, "synchronized" by means of circus music and songs from "Swing High" played on phonographs.

The miniature circus may be rented by theatres playing "Swing High" for exploitation purposes, it was announced.

"How Do You Look At This?"

From Drug Topics we quote the following:

"It is the biggest mistake in the world to think that you are working for some one else. Try to realize that some one else is paying you to work for yourself."

Now, there you have a slant that is certainly applicable to the show-business as well as another line.

Suppose you sit yourself down, lean back, close your eyes and try to analyze your own individual opinion of that quotation.

Are you plugging along with the silly notion that you are working for some one else? Or are you taking the more sensible viewpoint that some one else is paying you to work for yourself?

After all it is a matter of individual viewpoint. But whichever way you have sold yourself, that's the way you are probably working.

Most men in show-business seem to go out of their way to convince themselves that they are just "employees." That they mean nothing in the lives of the men who employ them. Why? Can't you enthuse over the idea that you are working for yourself? Can't you figure out that the work you are doing, if you are doing it well, is a foundation for the future?

It has become altogether too common to hear remarks such as "I'm tired of working for somebody else." Or, "I've been making money for everyone but myself." These are just snatches of the conversation you get here and there and everywhere. But we wonder whether these men have the proper viewpoint.

True; there is nothing better than a man being able to establish himself in some business of his own. But how many have the means to do so? And since the great majority of us must earn livings working for some sort of an outfit, the least we can do is make the best of our situations and instil into our own feelings the latter part of the phrase we have quoted.

It is rather difficult to figure out the other fellow's situation, but the best we have ever tried to do is express our own honest opinion and let you dope the rest out for yourselves. Even in my own position, now that I stop to analyze it, the feeling that I am working for my own future towers head and shoulders above the thought that I'm being paid to work for somebody else.

The expression, "good men are never out of work," is not without foundation. They are never, or rarely, out of work because they are making a reasonable success of the work they are doing.

Harold Cummings Takes Over Reins At The Empress

It was with pleasure that we learned Harold G. Cummings had been installed as manager of the Empress Theatre in Danbury, Conn., because the well known "Hat City" has become equally well known as a "showman city."

While he was at the Capitol in Leominister, Mass., some fine work was turned out by Cummings and it is interesting to note that he is keeping it up in his new position. One of the first stunts he pulled was in connection with "The Vagabond King" whereby he invited all of the prominent city officials to witness a special pre-view showing, and used their hearty endorsements of the picture in his newspaper ads as testimonials. He also gained a few days of free publicity by announcing that the Mayor would be present at the pre-view. In addition to these two stunts on the picture he also pulled a good one by arranging a tie-up with a local automobile dealer. The dealer bannered several new cars with a sign announcing that "The (Car) Monarch of the Road had the privilege of escorting the 'Monarch' of the Screen' to the Empress Theatre." The stunt, as it hadn't been worked to excess, created a lot of favorable comment that re-acted towards the box-office.

When he played "The Texan," he gave a party to all the newsboys of the city on the opening day of the picture and managed to promote four days of advance stories in every paper. The boys paraded from the newspaper offices to the theatre and carried banners plugging the picture and announcing their destination. Another good angle he pulled with the newsboys was on "Office O'Brien" when he imprinted 1200 papers with copy on the picture. The newsboys gave the papers away free on the streets and hawked "Sensational gangster capture at the Empress Theatre." And how they talked about this stunt! In fact they talked to such an extent that business on the picture took a jump over the ordinary.

With these few activities already under his belt in the short time he has been at the house, it is our prediction that as soon as Cummings gets the "low-down" on the town we'll have a lot of interesting accounts of his merchandising to pass along. So keep us posted, Harold.

Schwie Flew High With His Campaign For "Young Eagles"

Some new slants were added to a stunt that has been used often by Club members, and for that reason we are going to pass along this idea that P. F. Schwie, manager of the Garrick Theatre in Duluth, Minn., put into effect to sell "Young Eagles."

He tied-up with the local merchants and promoted a co-operative page from them. The ads in the page informed the readers that on a certain date a number of balloons would be dropped from an airplane. The balloons were to contain passes, tickets to the amphitheatre, and many valuable gift certificates. The certificates would entitle the holder to permanent waves, chiffon hose, men's socks, scarfs, dresses, and other useful articles.

These bits of merchandise were promoted by Schwie from the local merchants and placed on display in a huge store window opposite the theatre. A card was placed alongside telling of the stunt. On noon of the opening day a plane flew over the city and dropped five hundred of the balloons and the value of the stunt was seen in the number of persons who were on hand to try and grab them as they came down. The entire stunt, including the services of the aviator and his plane, was arranged without cost to the house.

A tie-up with "The Sky Climbers," a local organization of young air enthusiasts, enabled Schwie to secure some more publicity for his house. He put thirty model planes on display in a vacant store window adjoining the theatre. The planes were built by the members of the organization. The display was made of compoboard and intended to give the impression of an airplane hangar. Stills from the picture were tacked about it as well as art cut-outs showing "Buddy" Rogers and plugging the picture. As Mr. Schwie is one of our latest members we certainly have to hand him a compliment for being right on the job and represented in our pages. The only thing lacking just at present, Mr. Schwie, is your photograph and a little dope about yourself that we'd like to have in order to give you a regular introduction to the rest of the bunch, so we hope you'll remedy the deficit and shoot them along to us.

Hyde's Showmanship Can Be Said to Always Click Well

On every picture that he plays at the Polk Theatre in Lakeland, Fla., you can depend on Bolivar Hyde, Jr., manager of the house, to turn out a corking campaign.

Bolivar set out, recently, to make the town conscious of "The Golden Calf" and the stunts he used had them sold on the picture the minute they got a flash at the gag. The group of photos we are running will give you some idea of the ways and means he used to plug the picture. The photo on the top shows a display arranged in the window of a local shoe shop. Shoes and stockings were placed on display in the window grouped about a card which proclaimed that any woman possessing a foot small enough to fit a pair of silver slippers on display, would be entitled to the slippers free of charge. The merchant whose window was used furnished the slipper and the stunt attracted a great deal of word of mouth publicity.

The second photo shows another example of Bolivar's noted art work. The piece was painted in gold and black and showed a small slipper placed on top of a silk stocking-ed dummy leg. The art work was placed in the shop of one of the leading shoe and hosiery dealers in the town and besides plugging the free pair of slippers gag plugged the picture and proved a good angle for securing publicity.

The tin can (pardon us, we mean model T flivver), in the bottom photo was a knockout street flash. It was painted entirely in gold and carried appropriate copy plugging the picture and playdate. The "fliv" was driven about the main streets of the town and also the suburbs, attracting a lot of attention wherever it went. In addition to the few angles we have set forth above, Bolivar used many other mediums to sell the picture, but since we are rather limited as to space we endeavored to pick out only what we believed the rest of the Club would find practical. However, since Bolivar is represented frequently on our pages we, no doubt, will have many more showmanlike accounts of his activities to report.

Ken Hoel Passes Along Some More Live-Wire Stunts

A short time ago we showed you a photo of the kiddie party Ken Hoel, manager of the Harris Theatre in Findlay, Ohio, used as an exploitation and good-will building stunt in the town, so this showman is not a stranger to you. However, we'd like to tell you about a couple of more little things he has been doing recently to boost business.

When he played "The Vagabond King," since exploitation in his town is necessarily limited, he decided that one of the best mediums he could use was the imprinted napkin gag. He made up a few thousand of the napkins and imprinted them, in blue, with an ad mat of the picture. The napkins were placed at all of the soda fountains and all of the restaurants in town. This angle did a lot towards establishing a more or less personal contact with the picture and most assuredly was of value in selling the film.

On "Young Eagles" he secured a tie-up with a local aircraft company and by giving them a break in his ad he was enabled to have a number of heralds, plugging the picture and the airport company, thrown from a plane. A great deal of comment was attracted by means of this stunt and the persons were well aware that the picture was playing at the Harris. The cost of the stunt was practically nothing and the publicity received was more than shown in the lines that formed about the box-office on the opening day of the picture.

We want to thank Hoel for taking so active an interest in the Club and we want him to know that we are always glad to pass along his activities to the rest of the Club in the event that they might secure one or two angles that would fit some stunt or campaign being planned.

U.S. Census Takers Were Given Help by Gordon McKinnon

Giving Uncle Sam's census takers a hand was one of the ways Gordon McKinnon, manager of the Chateau Theatre in Rochester, Minn., landed some good word-of-mouth publicity for his house.

The enumerators were just about finishing their task and the city council was very anxious that they slip up on no one as they wanted to make up their 20,000 quota. Thus, when McKinnon erected a booth in the lobby and installed a couple of census takers therein and offered a free ticket to anyone who had not had their census taken you can bet that they felt plenty kind towards him and the house. All persons having their census taken at the booth in the lobby were admitted free.

The tie-up not alone proved to be a wise move for good-will but also enabled McKinnon to crash the front pages of the local newspaper with the paper telling all about his generosity and mentioning the picture that the unlisted persons would see. Moves like these are done daily by alert showmen and whenever the opportunity presents itself you'll generally find that a live-wire is right there trying to help out the next man. Incidentally, this is Gordon's first contribution and we want to extend him a hearty welcome into the Club and let him know that we expect to pass along some more of his fine work in the near future because we feel that these stunts just can't be kept in the background.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

TIMELY—AND HOW!

Harry Marchand, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Mobile, Ala., has not overlooked the graduating class of the upper grade in high school in the city of Mobile and the towns adjacent to Mobile. Knowing that these young people were his greatest potential customers and would soon be out of school, he sent the following letter to each of them, and has already received sufficient replies to assure him that the idea was successful and timely.

Dear Graduate:

Another year rolls by and we understand that you are one of the fortunate graduates of the session 1930.

We note with pleasure that numerous parties are to be given in your honor, and naturally presume that you will want to entertain a few of your closer classmates; so we take this opportunity to suggest a theatre party at the Saenger. A party at the Saenger Theatre, besides being inexpensive, would eliminate all worries of decorations, etc., and we will be glad to reserve the boxes, or, whenever possible, a section of seats, if you will 'phone in advance.

Can you think of any better way to entertain your friends than to take them to see any of the following wonderful talking, singing, dancing attractions?

Starting Wednesday, April 30th, for four days: "Song of the West" with John Boles, the magnificent star of "Rio Rita" and "The Desert Song," and Joe E. Brown, and Vivienne Segal.

This letter was followed by his attractions which listed the star, title, and a brief sales message for the following month.

A Trio of Hustlers Accomplished This In Reading, Penna.

Some little time has elapsed since last we published an account of the work turned out by Paul E. Glase, manager of the Warner-Equity Theatres in Reading, Pa., but he has been very busy putting over a campaign on the personal appearance of a recording artist and consequently we have had to bide our time until the campaign was completed.

To his assistant, Clarence Latshaw and Earle Westbrook, Glase passes along all credit, waiving the part he played in laying it out. When Nick Lucas, who is known to many radio fans and movie goers as "The Crooning Troubadour" was booked into the house a campaign was planned that would give Reading an eyefull. You all perhaps remember Lucas in "Gold Diggers of Broadway," and since that picture made quite a hit in Glase's house, the Astor, it was only proper that the recording star be plugged big.

The first thing done in the campaign was to give him a big two-weeks advance play by means of the house organs, and to do this up well, almost every available bit of space was taken up to plug the records, pictures and other things Lucas has made. His picture was also inserted for two weeks in the programs. In addition to this medium, a broadcast was given over the radio and extra newspaper space was used. A week in advance, Latshaw and Westbrooke, promoted a Brunswick Panatrope and used it in the lobby to plug the Lucas song hits.

When the star opened his engagement, he willingly consented to go through with a bunch of publicity stunts in order that the house, as well as himself, derive a lot of publicity. He sang on the radio two nights during his week engagement. A special reception was given by him, for ladies on Thursday afternoon. Ten records were presented each day to lucky patrons. Lucas handed them out and autographed them. The records were secured through a tie-up with the local music stores. During the engagement a tie-up was made with a coffee shop and the lady patrons were served with free coffee in the lounge room. Lucas (without much persuasion), was prevailed upon to shoot a couple of rounds of golf at the local country club.

To give you an idea of the way the star came in for plenty of publicity we are showing a couple of photos of tie-ups arranged by Latshaw and Westbrooke. In one you will note the window display put out for one of the local music dealers and in the other, the front of the Astor Theatre. The record on the right of the box office was six feet in diameter. A cut-out of Nick Lucas was placed in the center and around the edges of the big record, twelve regular sized records were placed. This front and the window display did a lot to attract attention to the engagement as the handmade cut-outs made it almost impossible to pass by without looking at them.

In order to plug the feature "Hello Sister" which was being run in conjunction with the personal appearance of the radio star, Glase made up a number of gummed stickers about the size and shape of a silver dollar. The stickers carried copy "Hello Sister" and were distributed about the various high schools and other valuable spots in town where such things would more than be appreciated. And when the students started to paste them on hats, coats, slickers, autos, and every other thing that would stay still long enough to permit pasting, the picture certainly received plenty of publicity.

The engagement of Lucas proved a feather in the caps of Glase, Latshaw and Westbrooke for Reading had not been treated, for quite some time, to so complete a campaign, and since this one is only a sample of what is being done by them down there we know that when we receive their next campaign it is going to contain a lot of other valuable suggestions that we can pass along to the Club members.

Local Popularity Brought Lawrence Back Again to Lima

Whenever a theatreman can make himself so popular with a town that after a year's absence from said town, the townspeople request his reinstatement he's a showman. The first example of this that we came across was in the case of Bill Levey, live-wire of Port Washington, N. Y., who after a brief absence due to a transfer, found himself back at the house, upon the request of the residents. C. F. (Sid) Lawrence is the latest.

Nearly everyone in the Club is acquainted with Sid and his peppy work and in the past we have shown a number of accounts of the way he merchandises his attractions. And we guess its unanimously agreed that he knows his stuff. Well, to make a long story short, while he was in Boston, there came a request to Sid that he resume duties at the Ohio Theatre. And since we happen to know that he thinks a lot of the town, he agreed to go back there.

The locals gave him a great welcome and if Barnum's circus had been playing near the town that too would have been called into play to greet him. The local newspaper gave him a front page story that was a corker and for a couple of days he shook more hands than the President on an electioneering tour.

As his first contribution to the town, he featured a novelty herald in the form of a calling card. The herald was used as a plug on "Be Yourself" and carried copy, "Be Yourself," says Fannie Brice! The only other thing carried on the card was theatre and playdate in lower left hand corner. This made a decided hit, particularly since it hadn't been used before in Lima. And it was an inexpensive medium for getting in a valuable bit of advance publicity on the picture.

We want to compliment Sid on the fine record he is making for himself in the show business and we are sure that the future holds a lot more treats in the way of novel stunts that will be of value to his fellow members.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Ray Peterson Made Use of Many Gags To Sell His Show

A brief but intensive campaign on "No, No, Nannette" was put over by Ray Peterson of the Strand, Gulfport, Miss., when it played his theatre recently.

Peterson, in addition to his routine activities of merchandising such as trailers, lobby displays, etc., had heralds distributed in all New Orleans papers which have a large circulation in Gulfport. He also effected a tie-up with his local pastry shop to insert a herald into the wrapper of each loaf of bread delivered along the Coast.

In addition to the above he had the Gulfport Daily Herald, which serves both Biloxi and Gulfport, run the ad-a-line contest. (Manager Holscher of the Strand, Biloxi, also participated in this contest for his theatre.)

Just to play safe, Peterson had window display cards placed in twelve of the most prominent stores and the three best hotels. Then to top off his campaign he had announcements made over radio station WGCM and built a sixteen-foot illuminated shadow box, which was suspended in his lobby six days in advance of opening.

Front Resembled a Ship After These Showmen Finished

We've shown a great many atmospheric fronts in the past but here's one from J. H. Skiffington and C. M. Hurley, manager and assistant manager respectively of the Fox Theatre in Springfield, Mass., that is worth more than passing mention.

When they played "The Ship From Shanghai" these live-wire showman decided that the front should carry an effect that would have the residents of Springfield talking all during the run of the picture. So they set to work to construct a duplicate of a ship deck, that would be complete in every detail even to the ocean and skyline. By examining the cut closely you can get an idea of what the finished product looked like. The display even featured doors of the style to be found on the ships of to-day.

A special life-size cut-out of the stars occupied a prominent place in the center. Pennants, anchors and life-savers were used to dress up the set. The beauty of the whole lay-out did a lot to sell it to the residents of the town and anyone passing by the theatre was sold on the picture just by looking at the display alone. The special front was so constructed that after play-date it could be taken down and stored away for use at some future date.

We want to thank Skiffington and Hurley for letting us see this one in order that we might pass it along to the rest of the Club. These two showmen need no introduction, as they have been represented on our pages in the past and their fellow-members know that they are very active, and for that reason we're sure we'll hear more about their work in the future.

MARDI GRAS CARNIVAL A WOW!

Goldberg, Olsen and Starr Click

The New York State Division of Fox Metropolitan Theatres is leading the pack. In view of the May Movie Mardi Gras Carnival now current who is there bold enough to question the authenticity of the foregoing statement? Court is in session, gentlemen, and Tom Olsen, as counsel for the Division presents his case, a resume of which follows.

H. D. Goldberg

During the month of April, Mr. H. D. Goldberg, General Manager of the New York State Division, Herman Starr, District Supervisor, and Tom Olsen, Director of Publicity, plotted to inaugurate in May one of the finest campaigns ever to be conceived by showmen in Upstate New York. The Movie Gras Month campaign, they agreed, must be unique. It must combine gaiety with quality. Quality with quantity, and, above all, entertainment with value. Thus was May Movie Mardi Gras originated.

Each and every theatre in the Division was supplied with lobby decorations which consisted of canvas banners, thirty-six inches in width with support and tassel, and drapes nine inches long by three inches deep, to be used as marquee decorations. Copy on the decoration read "May Movie Gras," and to enhance the effect they were imprinted with a picture of a smiling clown beating a big bass drum.

A check was made of all theatres to find out how they stood in the way of stock decorations. To those theatres not boasting any surplus, a gala display of extra pennant streamers was given. All of the houses were furnished with balloons which were hung around the theatres to carry out the Mardi Gras tones. The balloons were in assorted colors and bore appropriate copy. Special sixteen inch, string attached, diamond shaped hangers were given the houses. The hangers were made from a wood-cut and placed about the theatre.

Tom Olsen

Carnival Months will come and Carnival Months will go—but it takes real showmen to put them over with a certain "smack" that resounds all over the place.

We all recall Guy Kenimer's great "Blue Ribbon Month" gag that had all Florida talking for many a moon. Now, along comes Harry Goldberg and his peppy side-kicks with another "month" so carefully planned and executed that it was a certain success before the opening gun was fired.

If real showmen are to be judged by their accomplishments, then, in this article, you will become well acquainted with the kind of men worthy of the reputations they possess.

Others were distributed throughout the towns.

A life size cut-out of the official Mardi Gras emblem, the clown, was supplied to each theatre. The cut-out was to be displayed either on the marquee or in front of the theatre. Concealed spots played upon the clown and blended in colorfully.

As Olsen had arranged a tie-up with the Postal Telegraph company he secured a number of life size cut-outs of a messenger boy holding a jumbo telegraph blank purported to come from the manager and proclaiming the special month. The cut-outs were placed in every theatre.

For general advertising all of the houses were supplied with several hundred cards, bearing a cut of the clown and Mardi Gras copy. Olsen wisely added, "Shop in Your Home Town." The dealers were more than willing to display them. The cards measured twenty-two by twenty-eight inches.

Ten tire covers, bearing short and snappy copy on the event were allotted to each town. The name of the local theatre was also included on the covers. The diamond-shaped hangars and the toy balloons were also used as outside advertising, as it was felt that the local manager knowing his patronage would show good judgment in the distribution.

From three to five thousand Postal Telegraph blanks were supplied to each theatre. The dummy blanks were signed by the local manager, whose signature appeared beneath copy plugging the big event and the coming pictures. They were distributed by uniformed messenger boys and made a decided hit with the persons receiving them.

To help the managers with their newspaper advertising special thumb nail and two-column mats were supplied. The special mats were to be used on all advertising and inserted in any available ad space, especially if the local merchants should co-operate with their regular ads.

Gummed strips, to be used on soda fountains were supplied all of the houses. The strips measured four by twenty inches and were attractively colored. The copy read: "Try Our May MOVIE GRAS Special." The strips were met with open arms by all of the drink and ice cream concocters in every town.

Special parked car tags were given each theatre. The tags were headed by the scare line "Polite Notice" and bore copy on the special month. The cards were slit at the top to permit hanging on the auto door handles.

One of the biggest advertising gags that Olsen pulled was the novelty herald he made up in the form of combination railroad tickets. The heralds measured three by twenty inches and were printed in water stock similar to the regular railroad tickets. When folded they looked like the genuine article. A catchline on the front proclaimed: "May Movie Gras Excursion Special—All Aboard For

Through JOY LAND

Joy Land," etc. Inside the special features were listed.

A large quantity of two by two inch gummed stickers, printed in blue and white, on the same color scheme as the Postal Telegraph uses, were given to each house. The stickers were used on every telegram delivered in the theatre neighborhood. Other uses for the stickers was left to the discretion of the local manager.

The theatre cashiers, during the special month answered the phone, "Good Morning. This is May Movie Gras at the Fox Blank Theatre." All of the staff members were furnished with attractive ribbon badges plugging the event.

To sell the special month on the screen, two teaser trailers were supplied each theatre for use from April 16 to 22. On April 23 a trailer, starting off with "We Promised You a Treat, etc," and listing five or six of the outstanding pictures went on the sheets. The trailer ran until April 30. On May 1, a short lead to the standard Fox presentation was supplied. Copy read that the theatre was celebrating the Movie Gras.

A ballyhoo float built on an Oldsmobile Truck chassis was put into use to make a tour of the circuit from May 1 to May 14.

The float was flashily decorated with care being taken to keep it from looking too cheap. It was routed through the circuit on a rigid schedule with every manager preparing some means of making the float's arrival a local event. City officials, bands and auto parades met the float on its visit to different towns. Clown costumes, mummer masks, confetti and serpentine, together with a load of noise makers was carried for use in the town through which the float passed. A marvelous bell chime instrument, accompanied by a capable player, was used to draw attention to the display.

In addition to these the float carried thousands of heralds, measuring eight by twenty inches. The copy on the picture was localized so as to play up the particular picture in the town in which the float was due to arrive. The heralds were numbered and each theatre advertised that it would display a special board in the lobby. On the board was a list of numbers. Persons holding corresponding numbers on the heralds distributed from the float were entitled to free admission. This stunt made a big hit with the residents of the various towns and its peoples swarmed about the bulletin boards in the theatre lobbies.

A great aid in the campaign and one that took showmanship to engineer was the Postal Telegraph tie-up promoted by Olsen. Postal supplied one hundred thousand blanks on which were imprinted a message of May Movie Mardi Gras signed by each local manager. A uniformed messenger boy was placed on duty at all time to distribute the messages.

In five of the larger cities of the circuit, typewriting receiving and transmitting machines were placed on display in the lobby. A young lady operated it. The machines attracted a great deal of attention and comment.

Postal was supplied with a list of stars, pictures, theatres and managers names, all of which were sent to the Hollywood representatives for the purpose of having the movie stars affix their names to the various telegrams carrying messages concerning the showing of their pictures and announce their pleasure at having one of their vehicles selected for the Movie Mardi Gras.

Addition precaution was taken at the divisional office to prevent slip-ups by writing the various studio publicity directors and film executives requesting co-operation. When the telegrams arrived, they, together with star stills were mounted on a special three sheet board. This angle proved a real attention getter and was a great aid in boosting business.

In the towns where there was a typewriting receiving and transmitting machine, stickers were placed on the envelope of every telegram delivered. The copy read, "Send a telegram to your favorite Movie Star from the lobby of the Fox Blank Theatre during May Movie Mardi Gras." In other towns a two by two inch sticker, made up in the conventional blue and white of the Postal Company was stuck on every telegram. Copy read, "Help Celebrate, etc."

A special tie-up was arranged with the Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers of New York State for ice cream parties to be held during the month. As only three or four were possible on each Saturday, it was therefore found impossible to cover the entire circuit but many of the managers promoted similar tie-ups in their own towns. Ice cream, in cup or bar form, was presented to each person attending the Saturday matinee. The ice cream company also supplied between three and five thousand 11 x 14 inch cards for the dealers and the schools, plugging the stunt and the Mardi Gras.

To prevent any confusion a check up system was innovated and through this system a complete check was had at all times on whether or not every theatre had its aids and accessories.

Through the medium of "From the Firing Line," divisional publication, suggestions and advice on how to get the most out of the May Movie Mardi Gras were given. The paper issues, from April 10 to April 30 were devoted entirely to suggestions on the campaign.

The result of this movie is to be seen daily in the co-operative pages, proclamations of mayors, special parades, May Kiddie Parties, presentations of enlarged passes, Mother's Day stunts and hundreds of other valuable business getting mediums, submitted from the live-wire managers.

Every conceivable angle has been covered and recovered by the trio of alert showmen and when the final returns float into the office it appears as though the campaign will be acclaimed one of the finest of its kind ever attempted.

Such campaigns are by no means new, but the thing that makes this one outstanding is the manner in which they kept up interest by something new all the time. In this way they were able to keep the public's eye constantly focused on everyone of the F. M. P. theatres throughout their territory.

We are grateful to both Mr. Goldberg and Tom Olsen, for their co-operation and prompt delivery of the items needed to pass along this most interesting campaign.

RITZ PATTER

By ADOLPH PINCUS
Manager, Ritz Theatre,
Lyndhurst, N. J.

This is one of a series of humorous "chats" used by Pincus in his theatre's program. If they appeal to you, go ahead and use them with his compliments.

The Village of Lyndhurst is having a paint-up and clean-up week, and what a great thought that is— naturally you would have to clean up after being painted up for a week—some of the feminines have been painted up so long, that a scrape off would be more like it.

However the board of commissioners are on the warpath to rid the village of all discarded beds, garbage cans, Fords and other rubbish, in fact, if there is anything around the home that you would like to be rid of, a wagon will call to remove it—of course this offer does not include mothers-in-law or star boarders.

One of the first things that should be removed is the pest that chews the blubber gum, and then lets it explode in your ear—have you seen some of those great big school boys, you know those overgrown children about six feet tall and nine years in the same class—the kind that have to marry the teacher to get out of school—well, they are the real gum bubble blowers and every time a bubble bursts it leaves a black ring around the lips—by the end of a chewing day they look like they had been drinking ink from a saucer.

Then there are the ones who insist on talking with the talking picture and louder than the actors on the screen—they seem to be under the impression that talking pictures means that they must talk—and there is the fellow who insists on singing tenor with Al Jolson—they should be removed.

But getting back to the clean up week, let's hope every one offers the fullest cooperation in this civic movement, for it sure will make this a better and healthier place to be in when the summer rolls around.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

A REAL SERVICE STAFF

By H. E. WILTON, Mgr.,
Strand Theatre, Hamilton, Ont., Canada

It has been our privilege, and pleasure, to present at various times, brief articles from Mr. Wilton. In this, his latest contribution, he touches on a topic really deserving of your attention. Perhaps it will open up an entirely new line of thought; so read every line—it is worth it. "Chick"

There is nothing more pleasing to the live theatre manager, outside of big box office receipts, than compliments from patrons regarding staff service.

It's a poor rule that don't work both ways, and I often wonder if the average manager realizes what it means to himself and his business, and how much good he will be doing "the other fellow" by reversing the situation and passing a word of encouragement along.

Every person knows that courtesy is one of the best business assets, but if it is confined to the walls of your theatre it becomes mechanical and the public soon learn that it is only business camoflague.

Impressed recently with the splendid courtesy of a bright young man who called at my residence daily on a bread delivery route, I wrote a letter to the manager of the company expressing appreciation.

One week later the employes of this company, to the number of one hundred, held a theatre party at The Strand, and later I received a nice letter from the manager of the company thanking me for my letter in reference to one of his employes, and for the splendid courtesy of our staff on the occasion of the theatre party.

That's building up good will by applying the good old Golden Rule without one cent of cost.

As managers we love to have patrons say nice things about our entertainment and members of the staff because we realize it means business foundation which will stand for all time.

Then why not pass it along?

Do unto others as we would have them do unto us.

The manager who makes that his business slogan, remembering that courtesy, to be effective, must be permanent, not just a business effort confined to business hours, will soon build for himself and his theatre a reputation which cannot fail to show results through increased box office receipts, and personal influence in his district.

There is a marked difference between natural and acquired courtesy, and the public is not slow in detecting it. There is no room in the theatre business for men whose courtesy is forced or acquired, and the manager who feels that he is becoming "grouchy" should take a vacation or get out of the business.

Smile, and the world smiles with you.
Snore, and you sleep alone.

Joe Buse Can Now Be Found Active in Brea, California

Due to the press of work at Club headquarters we sort of neglected to pass along an interesting item concerning one of our members, but since we have it on hand now, we'd like you to know that Joe Buse, former manager of the San Carlos Theatre in Los Angeles, Cal., is now managing the Red Lantern Theatre in Brea, Cal.

Knowing that he did good work at the San Carlos it comes as no surprise to us to learn that he is perking up business considerably on his new job. Some of his stunts include a "free groceries" night in which he buys a lot of merchandise from local dealers and gives it away on Saturday evenings to patrons holding ticket numbers corresponding to ones that he calls out from the stage. This stunt increased his business so much that he decided to inaugurate a "pay night" and give his patrons small sums of money. The idea was carried out in the same way as the grocery give-away.

Buse also tells us that he is going to put on a gift night and will introduce a couple of novel ways in selling it to his patrons. We want to thank him for passing along these accounts of his work and also wish him the best of luck on his new job. Keep us posted on what you're doing at the Red Lantern Joe, so that we can keep the rest of your fellow-members informed. And if you display the same brand of live-wire work that you have used in the past we know that the accounts are going to make very interesting reading.

Paper Commented On Larned's Skill With Paint Brush

With the enrollment into the Club of Harold W. Larned, manager of the Victoria Theatre in Tamaqua, Pa., our roster from that state grows a little larger.

From the little dope we have on hand regarding Larned's career we learn that he is one of the most popular managers ever to work in Tamaqua. And besides being popular he is also recognized as a very smart showman. He recently received an assignment that called for more than ordinary ability, when he was pressed into service to handle a couple of houses in Mahanoy City in addition to his own.

He has been connected with his present employers, the Chamberlain Amusement Company, for some time now and in the past handled a couple of houses for them in Lansford. Besides selling shows, Larned, like so many other showmen, is quite skillful with the paint brush and the displays he turns out on his attractions are so good that they merit space weekly in the local newspaper. The display he created for "Gold Diggers of Broadway" caused a good deal of comment about the town.

Well, all that we can say at this time, to use an expression coined by a manufacturer of a well-known cigarette, "Such popularity must be deserved." So we look forward to hearing more about Larned's work and we have a hunch that he is going to send us a few photos of his displays. How about it, Harold?

"Tod" Browning Is Displaying Motor Boats in Theatre

And business still continues to crowd the box office around the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston, Mass. The reason for the foregoing statement is, of course, due partly to the work of Harry "Tod" Browning, demon exploiteer of the house.

With spring in sight and motor boats beginning to appear, Tod decided that the theatre could use some extra publicity. So with spring to work from, he hustled out and tied-in with one of the local papers who contemplated running a Spring Motor Boating Edition. Through the paper he arranged to feature a display of the boats in the lounge room of the theatre. The newspaper being behind it, he received loads of publicity and the crowds gazing at the boats every night insured his getting plenty of word-of-mouth publicity. The display was well done and the photo will prove the strength of our assertion.

The other picture we are showing in conjunction with this article is a corking window tie-up he made for "Honey." He secured the display with a local dealer in electrical appliances and by enlarging a couple of stills he achieved an effect that sold for a million dollars' worth. And another thing "Tod" handled very successfully was the stage engagement of Borrah Minnevitch, the harmonica player. He arranged special performances to be held at various charitable institutions throughout the city and Minnevitch and the other stage attractions performed. The papers gave "Tod" a special play on this angle and the house came in for plenty of good-will.

Here's hoping we won't have to wait long for more of Tod's activities.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Meet Miss LaRoe and Read What She Is Doing in Ohio

Ideas come into Club headquarters from here, from there and from everywhere. Ideas of all sort, shapes and sizes. Ideas on how to sell shows, cooling plants, organ solos, house service, projection and everything else that goes to make up the merchandising transacted daily in the life of the average showman. And then we have those ideas on how to tie-up with newspapers. And what ideas. To Miss Jean LaRoe, publicity director of J. Real Neth's Grand Theatre, and the rest of the Neth Houses in Columbus, Ohio must go credit for putting across a "Funny Face Contest" that panicked them. Incidentally we want to introduce you to Miss LaRoe via her photo here.

In order to put the contest over successfully she tied-up with the Columbus Citizen. Each day the paper ran a "Funny Face" and gave away a dollar prize for the funniest and most grotesque example of a distorted countenance (ugly mug). Look at the photos we are reproducing of some of the entrants and you'll get an idea of how seriously the residents took the whole affair. The little girl in one of these photos of the three victors won grand prize that was awarded for the faces adjudged the funniest of all.

The winning contestants were notified by telegram that their presence was required at the theatre on a certain evening. This angle gave the house a good break inasmuch as everyone to whom a telegram was sent was on hand. The newspaper also gave it a break. Miss LaRoe displayed some fine tact by offering ten additional prizes, of free tickets, as "Consolation Awards" due to the fact that over a hundred photos were received after the time agreed upon as a deadline. The reason for this being that many were submitted by out-of-town patrons.

In the event that any of the Club members wish to use a contest of this sort Miss LaRue cautions about saying, "Enclose stamps for return of photos." She advises that the line "No Photos Returned" be used, due to the fact that a great deal of time and labor was entailed in the returning of photos and often the address would be wrong on some.

We want to thank this peppy little publicist for passing along these few accounts of what the Ohio showmen are doing to sell their shows and we also want to extend her a cordial welcome into the Club and express the hope that she become as active as the rest of our live-wires.

We might also add, that in view of the shortage of real show-women in the theatre racket, Miss LaRoe's activities should create wide-spread interest in what, and how, she is doing things. And IF anyone should doubt her high-powered ability, just ask her folks out Columbus-way about her. They will probably satisfy you in every sense of the word.

Incidently, Miss LaRoe, how about a few interesting side-lights on the various folks of the Neth Circuit? You know what we mean. All about those boys who are managing the theatres. We are always anxious to get the low-down about the house manager and we rather feel that you are in a position to give it to us first-hand. And unless Pete Wood was kidding us, there ought to be some fine story material in a little article about J. Real Neth in person. It might sound like taking advantage of you as soon as you enroll as a member but someone has to do the asking and I suppose you will overlook this request and give us what we want.

"THE VALUE OF A DOLLAR"

This is bringing up an old subject, but honestly, boys, it's of greater importance than you may be willing, at this time, to admit.

Spending an evening or two last week going around to some of the theatres outside of the city gave me quite a surprise (and a shock as well) when several of the managers, in taking me through the different parts of their theatres, showed me a mass of stuff ordered, paid for and never used. This ran from advertising material to supplies and accessories of all kinds.

What a waste. And what a shame.

Surely there is no excuse for a thing like that happening if the man responsible for the purchasing of such stuff was on the job. It's a rotten waste of money and anybody guilty of such a thing ought to be made head usher instead of manager.

We've plugged the angle of "spending money as though it was your own," from a dozen different slants, but this idea of getting all "hot" about something, rushing out to order it and then, before it arrives, grow cold and let the stuff rot in the storeroom or cellar, is all the bunk. If the idea can't keep you enthused until you see it through successfully and thoroughly, then it must be a pretty rotten creation from the start.

Stop wasting money. What difference does it make whose money it is? You're responsible for it. And it has been the cause of more dismissals than any other fault that we can think of at the moment.

Busy Bees Buzzed Boisterously But Business Boomed

G. E. Hoffman used a beehive and bees in his lobby that helped to sell Paramount's "Honey" in a big way at the Ritz Theatre, Anniston, Ala.

The lobby display consisted of a latticed shadow box seven feet wide, four feet deep and eight feet high with indirect lighting. The lattice work was painted white with backing of light green—front and inside with artificial flowers and vines. The background for this display was a scenic landscape with large painted old thatched straw beehive.

A table placed in front of the display was covered with grass mats—leading back to the landscape.

To make the display more realistic, Hoffman had two glass exhibits of beehives with live bees actually making honey in the combs. This was placed in front of the beehive painting.

And just underneath the bee exhibit was an emerald green compoboard across the entire front of table at a 45-degree angle with large cut-out letters silver tinseled, "Nancy Carroll in Honey."

The display was placed in the lobby three days in advance, remaining through the playdates—and attracted attention.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

COOL—COOL—COOL—!!

We've all had a taste or two of the "hot" weather, so it behooves us to lend a willing ear to a little advice on the subject of "Cool" theatres and advertising.

The unusually early heat wave certainly caught New York and vicinity unawares, and that it played havoc with the b.o. is still a topic of vital interest around the famous "wailing wall" on Ninth Avenue.

Why be caught again, especially with summer right with us? Have you dressed up your front and lobby so as to give that impression of "coolness" so important on those warm days and nights? Have you fixed your lights so that green or other cool colors have taken the place of red, etc.? And have you doped out a gag to greet the customers with a refreshing breeze when they enter the lobby?

Talk up your "cool" theatre until it is firmly impressed on everyone's mind. Then be sure that the impression is carried out when they come to the theatre for their comfort and entertainment. BUT, if your house is cursed with a poor ventilating or cooling plant, and despite all your efforts is a hot-box just the same, we strenuously advise you to keep away from the subject of temperature altogether.

"You can't fool the public" and no advertising to the contrary will make them happy if they're going to bake in your house. BUT, if your theatre really is cool, cool enough to shout about, shout it from the house-tops and then some.

Incidentally, don't forget to dress the staff in summer-looking uniforms, even if you can only afford white trousers for their present outfits. Everything counts, so don't overlook a single bet.

Earl Arnold Does SomeMoreShooting in Arlington, N. J.

When it comes to thinking up novel gags to spring on his patrons you can be sure that Earl Arnold will pick the kind that are bound to click. As most of his fellow members know Earl is the manager of the Lincoln Theatre in Arlington, N. J., and the perpetrator of the "Let's Shoot The Kiddies" gag which we showed on the pages not so long ago. Now he has followed this gag up with another one of a similar nature.

He made up heralds announcing that a motion picture projector and a screen test would be given to some lucky kid every Saturday matinee. A number was taken from a box on the stage at the Saturday matinee and the youngster holding the corresponding number was declared the owner of the machine, and entitled to a screen test. When the kid was called up to the stage he was invited to make some funny faces for the test. After he had rehearsed for the benefit of the other kids making up the audience fifteen feet of film was shot of his funniest faces. The pictures were shown on the following week and by this move Earl was enabled to get the kids back again as well as his friends and relatives.

According to Earl, when these contests are properly run off, a good deal of extra business will result, and in addition there's the always helpful good-will which is garnered along with the biz. A Keystone projector is given away weekly. For the screen tests, all that is necessary is a 1,000 watt lamp, film and camera. The cost of shooting and developing fifteen feet of film with the entire lay-out, was only about five bucks and a quarter. Should any of our members care to try this angle in their houses we are sure that Earl will be more than glad to give them any info he may have concerning the running off of the matinees.

Take a Tip From Wally and Cash in On Census Taking

Take it from Wally Allen, the noted publicity man from down in Florida, that there's more than one way of working a newspaper tie-up on current topics.

In order to secure publicity for your house Wally states that all that is necessary is to go up to your local editor and sell him the idea of running a coupon on the front page of the paper that will entitle free tickets to the persons guessing nearest correctly the number of residents in the town or city. No judges are necessary, the Federal Census figures being accepted as final.

To promote a contest of this sort it is necessary to ascertain when the Federal census for your city will be announced and run the contest about two or three weeks in advance. The paper, it is true, might have some doubt as to running this contest due to infringement of the Postal Laws, but since certain papers in Massachusetts ran it, and if the word ESTIMATE is used instead of GUESS, this should eliminate any objections or complications.

Here's one that you can grab a hold of and do something with, and we want to thank Wally for passing it along as we are sure that it is more than appreciated by the rest of the Club.

George Huffman Is Responsible for This Double Truck

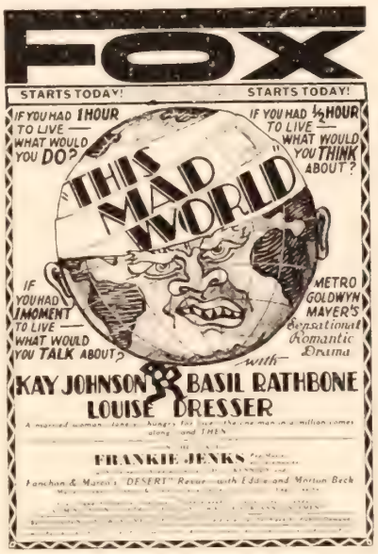
From down around the Southern states we have received many examples of fine showmanship and in the past have presented them on the Club pages, feeling sure that they were well apreciated. Not the least of the activities we passed along was a number of double truck newspaper ads whose novelty of make-up, we felt, merited reproduction in these columns.

The example of newspaper advertising we are showing below was turned out by George Huffman, manager of the Arcadia Theatre in Wilmington, Del., when "Puttin' On The Ritz" was booked into his house. Through a tie-up with the leading merchants in town he secured their co-operation and arranged for the special spread.

By examining the cut you will notice that the theatre occupies the most prominent part of the page with a special mat of the stars in the picture catching your eye as soon as you turn to the page. In all of the ads the title of the picture was worked in, tying up the dealer's ad with the attractions. In order to excite interest in the picture and also to stimulate sales for the dealers, Huffman arranged to have the dealers give away five pairs of tickets to the first five persons purchasing merchandise at any of the stores advertised.

The double truck ad did a lot to put the picture across in Wilmington and this, together with other novel stunts enabled Huffman to turn out one of the finest campaigns seen in the city in some time.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB



There's Going To Be Lots More From J. Maxwell Joice

In our recent "Anniversary Edition" we carried a story concerning the showmanlike activities of J. Maxwell Joice, publicity and advertising director of the Fox Theatre in Detroit. Unfortunately we received his photo too late for use in the special edition and we decided that in order for the rest of the Club to meet him "face to face" we use it as soon as possible. So here he is.

If you recall, we ran a number of Joice's ads in a past issue and commented upon the unusual angles he injected in them. Along with his photo he has been kind enough to include another sample of his advertising which we believe merits passing along. You will notice the way he uses appropriate cuts to get his attraction across and also the variety he injects. A firm believer in institutional advertising, the word "Fox" is always spread across the heading of his ad. By examining the cut closely you will notice the cleverly worded copy, designed to liven interest, which features the selling of the picture.

Advertising alone is not all that Joice does well at the Fox. His numerous tie-ups have all proven valued assets to business getting and in the past he has arranged some corkers. On "Mother's Day" he tied up with the Postal Telegraph and promoted a plan whereby the patrons of the theatre could send special telegrams for the price of ten cents. This stunt made quite a hit with them and let the house in for a lot of good-will. Another stunt he is using, in co-operation with one of the largest furniture stores in Detroit and the Detroit Daily Newspaper is a "Lost Melody Contest," whereby the patrons of the theatre, readers of the paper and customers of the store are invited to participate in a contest to furnish suitable words to the "Lost Melody." The stunt, not yet ended, is meeting with great success and from the looks of things it appears that Joice is going to cash in on another load of publicity and good-will. So keep your eyes on these pages and in a little while we'll let you know how it turned out.

This One Was So Good, Miss Ward Had to Cut It Out

In the past we have presented some very fine examples of display work and street stunts used by Anna Bell Ward, managing director of the Phoenix Amusement Company in Lexington, Ky., and we are very glad to to pass along her recent work in this special edition.

When "The Rogue Song" played the Strand Theatre recently she promoted a lot of theatre parties from local business organizations in the town. As a gag to ballyhoo the theatre parties she used the "ace" we are showing here. She secured the street car from the local traction company and it was run about the town. If you look at it closely you will notice the way she capitalized on Laurel and Hardy by playing them up big in the banners which surrounded the car. This leads us to believe that she knows what her patrons like and dislike and one of the things they like is the team of popular comedians.

The other photo shows the "Hot for Paris" front which she created by using cut-out figures. A great deal of attention was drawn to the picture by means of this angle and it was certainly a cinch to attract the attention of passing autoists. The display was held up by very thin wire which was strung along the marquee posts. Special lights shone upon the cut-out letters which were covered with metallics, and gave them a brilliance that caught the eye of everybody within the vicinity. And the biggest gag in the whole is the fact that the cut-out of the girl was so arranged that it did a shimmy and so many people crowded around on the opening day that one of the reforming leagues requested it be discontinued because the girl's dance was too realistic.

We want to thank Miss Ward for passing these fine examples of her work along to us and we would like her to know that it is always a pleasure to let the Club see what she is doing to sell her shows down in Kentucky, and we know that in the future we'll have many more accounts to tell about.

ADVERTISING!

Although in its earliest forms advertising was a two-word notice of seven letters—"For Sale"—modern advertising deals in ideas quite as much as in commodities.

Advertising, essentially, is the awakening of human desire. There is no stronger force in this new world of ours.

If journalism is the little sister of literature, advertising began certainly as the Cinderella of selling. Now it is the great motive force in our commercial life. It is the life blood of public demand. Our material civilization has been made possible by it.

The old kings and aristocrats have departed. In the new order the masses are master. Not a few, but millions and hundreds of millions of people must be persuaded. In peace and in war, for all kinds of purposes, advertising carries the message of this new king—the people.

Advertising is the king's messenger in the day of economic democracy. All unknowing, a new force has been let loose in the world. Those who understand it will have one of the keys to the future.

The advertiser contrives the picture and tells the story, and the public behaves as he foresees it will. He succeeds, however, only when he tells the truth. Sincerity is essential.

No advertisement can be eloquent enough to induce people repeatedly to buy a shoddy article, or to believe a lying story. Man is still a thinking and deciding animal.

IT ACTUALLY HAPPENED!

(Extract from the Regina Daily Star)

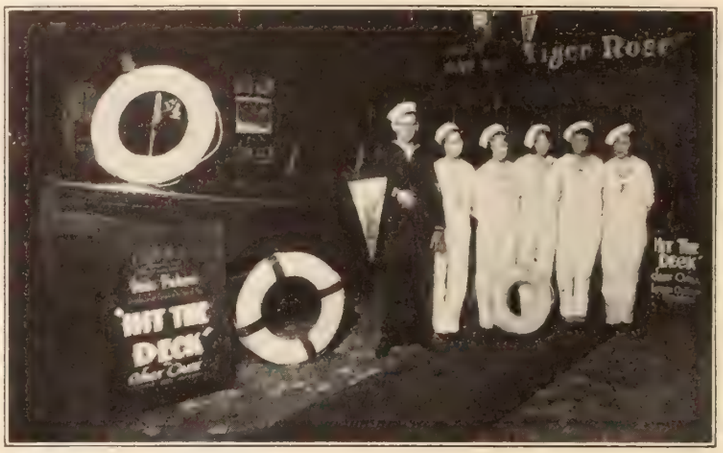
"Long distance records are being established almost daily in some parts of the world and for different feats. Regina might add one to the list. During the recent "Lapse of Light" at the City Power Plant, the Capitol Theatre had a picture running. At the time the lights went out a man was just entering the bathtub. This was at 1:15 P. M. He was unable to get out until after 7 o'clock.

PETE EGAN EXPLAINS:

This actually happened when we played Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy in "The Brats": A scene in the picture shows Oliver Hardy being pushed into a bathtub. Just as Oliver went in, the lights at the City Power Plant went out, throwing the house in darkness. When they came on again, six hours afterwards, Oliver was seen EMERGING FROM THE TUB. What a chance to keep our house in the limelight—and did we do it! The story above proves it and, besides this, everybody in town was talking about it.

Shuler Has Some Good Angles That Should Build Biz.

Some fine examples of showmanlike activity were turned out recently by Les Shuler, advertising manager of the State and Plaza Theatres in Sandusky, Ohio, on "Hit the Deck."



To plug the picture in the lobby, he decided to make a flash that would have the people talking about the picture long before playdate, so to that end he stepped out around the town and rounded up a bunch of dealers in marine equipment. From the dealers he secured life-saving rings, sailor hats and a few other things. He then ordered special uniforms to be made up for the usherettes of the house. After securing these he made a valuable tie-up with a local manufacturer of motor boats and arranged to have one of the boats displayed in the lobby. And by looking at the photo we are showing with this story you will get an idea of the selling effect it created.

Whenever the lobby became crowded the boy and the girl ushers, would climb into the boat and sit there. A one-sheet card, placed alongside the boat carried copy reading: "Into port with a cargo of tuneful joy comes this laugh laden girl and song romance, etc." A special card was made up carrying a credit line for the dealer who supplied the motor boat. As this was the first time this stunt had been used at the theatre it made quite a hit with the patrons and did a lot to sell the show.

Another angle that Shuler used to good advantage on the picture was the distribution of a number of envelopes marked personal, at various stores in the town. The two girls, in the photo we are showing at the beginning of this story, carried the envelops in small handbags labeled "Hit The Deck!" Upon investigation the envelopes were found to contain a plug on the picture and signed "Nautically Yours, Jack Oakie." This stunt too, had the town talking about the film and appraised them of the fact that they shouldn't miss it.

In all of Shuler's work his copy seems to be especially well chosen and it is for that reason we would like to give you a line on how well worded copy enabled him to make a valuable tie-up with a local laundry. On the picture "Devil May Care," he prevailed upon the laundry to insert heralds with every package going out. The copy read: "We take extreme care in the proper handling and delivery of your linen. The latest of improved machinery, skilled operators and the absence of Devil-May-Care methods. We also suggest that you see Ramon Novarro, etc." The point we want to bring out now is that you don't have to have a "Devil-May-Care" to get a tie-up with your laundry, all you need is a little showmanship in your copy wording.

We want to thank Shuler for passing these few angles along to us as we feel they will be more than welcome to the Club. As we happen to know he is always engineering up-to-the-minute work of this type in Sandusky, and we hope that we won't have to remind him that we want to hear from him more frequently. What do you think, Les?

We Gain Versatile Showman When C. Wheland Joins Club

Introducing another new member from Ohio. Meet C. E. Wheland of the Twin City Theatre Company in Uhrichsville.

Wheland owns and operates the State and Vale Theatres in Uhrichsville and the Lincoln Theatre in Dennison, Ohio. With three houses to look after he must be pretty busy, but we think that he is going to find time to shoot along some stuff to us in order that the rest of the CLUB can see the methods he employs to put his shows across and keep the houses filled.

As a little "dope" on the personal side we would like to inform you that he has been in the theatre game ten years. In this time he has operated a number of houses. The first theatre he bought was located in Newcomerstown, Ohio, and after making a success of that house he took over the City Opera House, Vale and State Theatres in his present town and the Pictorium and Lincoln Theatres in Dennison. He closed two of the six theatres, the Pictorium and City Opera House and operated only the three he now holds.

In addition to running theatres he also holds a position as cashier of the Union Bank of Uhrichsville. He has evidenced a great interest in aviation and this year was granted a private pilot's license. He is also president of the Tuscarawas County Aviation, Inc. So with all these things to look after we know he's very busy, but since he has shown a great deal of interest in the CLUB already we feel that he will continue it and let us know what he is doing, for with his many activities to work from he should turn out some novel stuff.

We want to thank Wheland for the nice sentiments he expresses concerning the CLUB and also let him know that his contributions will always meet with a hearty welcome.

Morris Rosenthal Invited Duluth to Anniversary Party

If your looking to throw a a birthday party in honor of your house's anniversary, just look at the way that enterprising showman, Morris Rosenthal, manager of the Lyceum Theatre in Duluth, Minn. threw his.

He started off the campaign with a special trailer announcing the event, which was shown in all the Publix houses. Special souvenir programmes were handed out a week in advance. These were also placed in the stores of merchants participating in the anniversary campaign, as well as on every newspaper on every newsstand in town.

A special lobby trim was innovated for the occassion with lattice work design and floral decoration. A novel three sheet board announced the party. A unique front made like a huge birthday cake was used to cover the entire box office. Mammoth candles were placed in holes on the sidewalk. A display of congratulatory telegrams from the Mayor and other prominent civic notables was placed in the lobby, as well as a Postal Telegraph wire machine.

Morris went out and promoted a special full page co-operative ad from the local merchants. This he tied-up with a local men's shop on Bancroft and arranged to have a tuxedo given away free in conjunction with "Ladies Love Brutes." He tied-up with one of the local newspapers and worked their Kiddie Klub into the birthday party. For this he received free stories and pictures for a period of ten days. He closed with a big birthday party for the kids, on a Saturday morning.

The birthday cake, furnished free by a local baker, was placed on display in a downtown window. Special window displays were obtained from all dealers participating in the event. The Postal Telegraph Company also furnished a couple of windows to plug the occassion. A huge candle was lighted and placed in a downtown store window. Looker-ons were invited to participate in ascertaining the length of time the candle would burn. Napkins were rubberstamped in every restaurant and soda fountain in town, with dishes and drinks plugging the anniversary being featured.

On the opening night of the gala week, the Mayor was present to cut the first slice of the huge birthday cake, pieces of which were given to all entering the theatre. Concealed in the cake was fifty dollars in gold. And say they didn't scramble to grab for pieces of the "golden cake." By looking at the ad we are showing you'll get an idea of the list of gifts, all of which were displayed in the lobby, that Morris arranged to give away as daily features.

On Monday it was the "Golden Cake," Tuesday, a candy matinee wherein the first 500 ladies attending the show were presented with a box of chocolates. Wednesday, the first 400 ladies received a freshly cut rose, and on Thursday the fair sex was given autographed photos of George Bancroft. To top off the party, on Friday, the ladies each received a bottle of ginger ale (Yes we said ginger ale and nothing else but—believe it or not it's really possible to drink ginger ale alone).

What a success that Anniversary Party was. It is our opinion that they'll be talking about it until next year, and incidentally Morris claims that if it remains as cold as it has been in Duluth he's going to give away Eskimo Pies for the next party. (He'll make 'em himself during the winter). So there's the whole low-down a complete birthday festival in itself and at very little cost to the theatre. If you can use it in your town, you're welcome to it and we know that when properly handled it's bound to click. We want to thank Morris for this and if he can find time to put on his muffler, ulsters, rubbers, snowshoes, red flannels, fur cap, blanket, gloves, toupee and mustache cup, we know he'll battle his way to the postbox and shoot us some more lines on what else he is doing to "weather the gale" in Duluth.

TOO OLD TO LEARN!

'Twas a balmy summer's evening (hotterinell, if you want the truth) and we dragged ourselves into one of Broadway's movie palaces to be both entertained as well as cooled off.

Pretty hot picture, so business was hotsy-totsy and it looked like a second week for that picture. Plenty of customers back of the tapes and house jammed to the doors. But on with the "play"—'smarvelous experience we had.

Scene: Centre aisle.

Time: 9:30 P. M.

Cast: The ushers.

Many patrons moving all the time leaving lots of seats spotted all over the house. Some of the customers in the rear of the house jumped to the front seats; those back of the tapes had to await the pleasure of a particularly arrogant usher who took upon himself (without any advice or supervision from his gross of superiors) the office of "Supreme Director of the Aisle."

Much grunting and squawks from the tape victims. Finally, "came the break."

Aisle cleared up and every tape line except the center was opened and the "saps" were then allowed to go find places to park themselves.

But the "Supreme Dictator" decided to hold his gang of standees longer. Did they like it. Like hell they did. Soon there were cat-calls, razzing, and then plain ordinary abuse which gradually rose in volume and numbers until it sounded as though bedlam was let loose.

Then, and ONLY then, did someone with more sense than the "Supreme Dictator" rush over and open the tape so that the poor sufferers of the center aisle could try to find what was left of all those seats recently emptied.

This particular house has created quite a reputation during the last few months for overbearing ushers, and for the life of me I can't figure out why. Surely the big picture palaces on Times Square should be setting the style and example for extremely courteous treatment of the patrons.

In this same theatre I recently watched an usher deliberately push an elderly woman into a row of seats when she wanted to take a single seat farther down front. And I could recite a dozen other incidents of this nature, but I'm not trying to pick the house to pieces. I'm more concerned over the fact that the type of management we expect to find in those houses should be blind to such conditions.

We doubt whether there will be much mystery about the theatre we have reference to, but just the same I would suggest that they try one of their famous drills and march themselves over to Roxy's where they can learn a whole lot about the way ushers should usher—and maybe the lesson will do them good. Providing they are not too old to learn.

"LAFF-OF-THE-WEEK"

The crowd of unemployed managers around the film exchanges pulling the "mutual admiration society" stuff. This one tells that one how good he is, was or could be, and Oofus tells Goofis how much better he would be as a supervising manager than the bird who let him out. Since it's all a matter of viewpoint, let them have their day and enjoy it, too. But the sooner they get themselves jobs and stop hanging around the exchanges bellyaching, trying to out-lie each other, the sooner they will return to the "useful" class of the showman population.

Showmanship Is An Important Factor In Carroll's Work

In the past, as has been our custom, we have frequently passed along an account or two of the work Charlie Carroll turns out in his daily endeavor to keep the Stanley Theatre in Jersey City, N. J., before the eye of the public.

One of the most active publicity men in the country, Charlie turned out a campaign recently at the Stanley that was a corker. Though the house had been in operation only two years it was deemed necessary, due no doubt to competition, to put in the latest improvements that the intervening two years have brought. For this purpose the house was closed for redecoration. And that's where Charlie came in.

It was decided upon that when the doors were again thrown open to the public, that the opening should be called a "rededication" and in that manner the house could secure a load of publicity. So Charlie set to work to tie-up the town. One of the first things he did was to inform the newspapers of the fact that there was to be a new opening of the Stanley Theatre. He sent out many invitations to celebrities. He sent special invitations to the Mayor of Jersey City, the former Governor of the State, the President of the Board of Education and many other prominent locals.

He secured valuable tie-ups with local establishments, made up special paper, had special cards, banners and almost every other thing that goes to make up a campaign on a high scale. Everything that Charlie worked into the campaign was done in a manner that kept away from "circus ballyhooing," as this was one occasion where the soft pedal had to be pressed into the work.

In the photos that we are using to illustrate this story you'll get an idea of how successful the campaign was. The photos show former Governor Harry Moore purchasing the first ticket and the crowds storming the house. You can also see the well known Charlie Carroll all set to tell the radio audiences about the Stanley Theatre. This is one of Charlie's sidelines. He promoted a tie-up with a local station and arranged to have the show broadcast every Sunday evening. The radio station plastered Jersey City and the outlying vicinity with twenty-four and three sheets, besides giving the program plenty of publicity in other ways. All of the guest artists at the Stanley are invited to broadcast over the air, and a good many of them accept. Incidentally, though we don't know whether he broadcast, Charlie persuaded Harry Richman to make a personal appearance in conjunction with "Puttin' On the Ritz" and this stunt did a lot towards selling the picture and publicizing the house.

The other photos show the Stanley all decked out in its holiday finery, ready to receive the distinguished guests at the opening. Note the giant cut-out that was placed in the lobby to plug "New York Nights." The cut-out, a huge cardboard bottle, reached almost to the ceiling, and attracted plenty of attention. Figures of dancing girls were grouped about it. Another angle that Charlie uses for keeping them up on the doings at the Stanley is a sheet in the form of a tabloid called the "Hudson Tab" and containing news of the coming pictures. This stunt made a great hit with the residents and the house received a lot of publicity from the source.

La Bar Used His Head For A Fast One; You'll Agree

Another one of those examples of fine showmanship came to light recently in the tie-up F. LaBar, manager of the Plaza Theatre in Asheville, N. C., used to get publicity for his house.

The local newspaper had been running a cooking school once a year for several years, and always used the Plaza as their classroom but failed to give the theatre the publicity it deserved. So this year LaBar decided to change it.

He was bucking a rather difficult proposition, particularly since the paper took it for granted that they didn't have to give any publicity other than a notice that the school was held at the theatre. Knowing this, LaBar tied-up with the other local newspaper and let them have his house for their beauty class. This paper came through with plenty of publicity and when it had all appeared in print it was put together and taken over to the first newspaper. Then LaBar made them a proposition.

As a result of his arguments the paper consented to cooperate in every way possible to give him publicity. And to that extent he was enabled to see the names of his attractions and the playdates listed in every cooking ad that appeared in the paper during the week the school was in session. The house consequently cashed in on a little extra business due to this showmanlike move on LaBar's part. We are glad to see that this live-wire member of the Club is still as active as usual and we hope he will keep us posted on his future doings too.

Fishing In Lobby Is Morris' Latest Publicity Stunt

As we have said before, in fact we've said it many times, when it comes to injecting novelty into show merchandising campaigns you can trust that Walter Morris, manager of the Florida Theatre in St. Petersburg, Fla., will turn out something of value.

When he played "The Big Pond" recently he pulled a couple of stunts that had them talking. In the lobby he placed an attractive, miniature fish pond. Spots were trained upon it. Within the "pond" fishing weights, with eyes on both ends were placed. One eye of the fish weight was supposed to be hooked by "fishermen." The other eye bore a numbered tag. Small fishing rods were placed around the pond for the patrons to use. Cards about the display explained: "Try your luck in 'The Big Pond.' Win or lose see Maurice Chevalier in 'The Big Pond,' starting Tuesday. Fish for a pass. Two chances only."

A special bulletin, posted alongside the pond carried a list of numbers. A patron, hooking a fish, was supposed to compare his number with the one on the board and if they corresponded he was entitled to a free ticket to see the picture. The patrons were limited to two chances, in order to decrease the winning percentage of free tickets. The novel display created a lot of comment and went a long way towards selling the picture. And not only did Walter sell it from this angle but he used another good one, too. A large map (3′ by 5½′) was secured from the Postal Telegraph Company and a display arranged around it. The Atlantic Ocean was labelled "The Big Pond." A small ribbon running from Venice, Paris, New York and Cleveland, led to small cards on which was imprinted the lines: "He met her here."—"He wooed her here."—"He slaved for her here."—"They spent their honeymoon here." The unusual feature of such a large map in a theatre lobby attracted considerable attention. After opening date the map was placed in the downtown office of the telegraph company and was accompanied by date cards, etc. And with these few activities heralding the picture, is it any wonder that business was good for its run?

In conjunction with the story we are also reproducing a sample of the novelty herald Walter turned out on "The Texan" in order that you may see what this showman can do in the line of work of this sort. The herald was printed in black on yellow and by studying the copy closely you can notice how effectively it is made up. And you'll notice that Walter gets in a plug for his cooling plant, also.

We want to thank him for passing along these sample of his showmanship and we'd like him to know that we, in turn, are more than glad to shoot them along to the rest of the Round Table Club. Let's hear some more from you real soon, Walter.

Carlson Handled Advance Campaign In Showman's Way

G. W. Carlson played up "The Grand Parade" showing at the Peoples Theatre, Superior, Wis., as an old-time minstrel show.

Teaser ads were run in advance using copy, "Regular old-time minstrel show with regular street parade Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, April 29-30, May 1—Peoples Theatre."

In return for three theatre parties and their car fare, the Superior Boys Band, dressed in minstrel costumes, paraded each evening during the engagement of the picture.

To give the parade a more realistic minstrel touch, several of the boys carrying banners were done up in blackface.

The nightly band parades seemed to stir the town up like it had never been before; at least, not since the last minstrel was in town. At any rate, the band parades certainly helped to make the picture a most popular attraction.

"THEATRE OPERATION IN INDIA"

By S. T. SUTARIA, Mgr.,
Excelsior Theatre, Hyderabad, India

Mr. Sutaria is quite an "old-timer" in the Club and is well qualified to tell us about this most interesting topic. If you would like to learn about showmanship in foreign countries, start with this article.

ADVERTISING:

As a matter of fact India is far behind your country in this respect. Only cities like Bombay, Calcutta, Karachi, etc., are using street ballyhoos. But writing about all these stations will cover up a number of pages.

For the chain of eight theatres that I am advertising we use the usual lithographs, heralds, window-cards, trailers and slides. Occasionally we pull stunts suggested in campaign books, i.e., we work up contests offering theatre tickets as prizes and reach the patrons by mail. Cutouts from posters are made use of by mounting them on decorated motor lorries. Newspaper layouts are usually copied from campaign books or press sheets—throughout India—and cuts supplied by rentors are used for this purpose. As we receive pictures long after they are released in America, I do not think you would like to have photographs of our advertising. However, I am sending under a separate cover a few copies of newspapers showing the advertising we make use of. The entire first page of this paper is reserved for the eight theatres under one chain—that of Mr. Jorawarmull Motilal—as the paper "The Hyderabad Bulletin" is owned and controlled by Mr. J. Motilal and is the only English daily published in H. E. H. The Nizam's dominions of over 82,698 square miles.

During the years 1928-29 Mr. J. Motilal had an agency of Studebaker and Erskine cars, and at that time we were advertising these cars along with our pictures as will be seen from the handbills I am sending you.

PATRONS:

Regarding handling of patrons. In India proprietors of theatres seldom mix with their patrons. Managers also generally keep themselves aloof. The patrons purchase the tickets at the box office and occupy their seats. They do not care to talk to the manager unless they have any complaint to make or any information to gain. The majority of "managers" are poorly paid and hence only a few of them can be called men of good social standing. Naturally, therefore, the manager is looked upon as a man of inferior social standard by the theatre patrons of higher seats—whereas the lower class patrons consider him as a being somewhat of a higher status than their own and are afraid to approach him.

PRESENTATION:

Only a limited number of theatres in India can boast of having small theatre orchestras. A piano is the only instrument considered necessary for providing music, which consists of a few old compositions. Prologues are things unknown to India. The piano or the so-called orchestra plays an overture, the third bell is given and the picture is flashed on the screen. Programmes usually consist of a topical, a comedy and the feature. Sometimes an episode or two of a serial is used in the programme in place of the comedy. In some theatres an interval of about five minutes is given—in others it is not.

THE THEATRE EMPLOYE:

In cities like Bombay and Calcutta the theatre manager does not write the newspaper ads. Some business acquaintance of the theatre proprietor is entrusted to do this work—and he does it in his leisure hours. Ticket sellers and door keepers are paid from $3.00 in small towns to $6.00 in big cities, per month. They are usually required to attend their respective theatres in the evenings—hence they serve during day time as office clerks, cashiers, bill collectors, etc. Ushers are not employed in Indian theatres.

MANAGERS:

Managers here have seldom any voice in the selection of pictures. Proprietors contract with rentors and distributors for their entire yearly output and the pictures are exhibited just as the rentors supply them.

The chains of theatres in India—The Madan Theatres, Ltd., and The Globe Theatres, Ltd.—are worked on a rather different basis. They contract for sole distribution and exhibition rights of selected output of producers like United Artists, Fox, Paramount, British, etc., and though their theatres are situated in different parts of the Indian Empire, programmes are generally fixed from their Calcutta offices.

Indian productions are much in demand in India as they are better understood by the masses. A number of units are working here on such productions but their output is much shorter than the actual demand by the exhibitors.

There's Real Showmanship in This Stunt of Wheeler's

Lots of showmen have turned out some fine stunts in the way of street ballyhoo for their feature pictures, but we are going to show you how J. Ramon Wheeler, live-wire manager of the State Theatre in South Bend, Ind., plugs his shorts.

He recently booked in "King of the Kongo," a serial due to run on Saturday matinees. The serial was booked as a booster for the kiddie business. To ballyhoo the new attraction, Wheeler hustled around and secured an elephant. The elephant, bearing banners on his back, as the photo shows, tramped about the streets of the town plugging the picture. To arouse further interest in the attraction, Wheeler arranged to have the elephant perform tricks in the lobby, to the delight of the children. The stunt came in for a lot of free space in the local newspaper, as this was the first time a gag of this kind has been pulled in South Bend, and all of this tended to draw kids to the box-office on Saturday afternoon and pack the theatre.

Here's a stunt now, that can't be beat, when you've a picture with a title like "King of the Kongo." "Of course," you'll say, "it's oke, but where am I going to get an elephant?" You don't have to have an elephant. Wheeler is not passing along this gag to show you that you need an elephant. He is showing you what a showman can do to exploit shorts. If he couldn't get an elephant, it's safe to surmise that he would have thought of having a couple of men dressed like cannibals parade about the street. All you need for a stunt like that is a couple of cans of paint and some straw. There's a lot more angles you can use to plug your pictures along these lines and we believe that a little thinking will show them to you. So, if you're booking in a serial to boost up your kiddie biz, don't forget there's more than one way to plug it. And all pictures can use plugging.

Vincent and Landy Had Lobby Looking Like Real Jungle

Here's atmosphere with a big A. The load of photos we are showing depict the front turned out by George Landy, RKO Divisional publicity director and Frank W. Vincent, divisional manager, at the Orpheum Theatre in Los Angeles.

The entire lobby of the Orpheum was turned into a jungle. Painted scenic drops were hung at either end. Zulu huts, lions' skins and cages of live leopards and panthers were placed about. In one of the photos you can see the box office disguised as a native hut. The ushers and doormen are dressed as hunters. They carried firearms and wore kakhi shorts and pith helmets. The lobby was replete with palm leaves, used to cover the pillars. The marquee also featured a border of palm leaves, and a huge negro, dressed in Zulu costume paraded about the top.

Giant cut-outs were used of gorillas and placed about the theatre with spots playing upon them. The picture "Ingagi," the title of which means Gorilla, gave the showmen a wonderful opportunity to display some creative work along the line of atmospheric effects and we feel sure that you will agree with us that they did a fine job. This is the second time so sensational a display has been used in Los Angeles. The RKO Theatre broke the ice with "Vengeance" by breaking with a lobby similar to this but not affording the sweep the "Ingagi" production permits. The change in the manner of lobby decoration came as the result of a new policy announced by the two gentlemen whose names we are presenting in conjunction with this article and as the policy will be continued we look to show a lot more of this type of work on future productions, as we feel sure that the Club is more than interested in looking at angles of this kind.

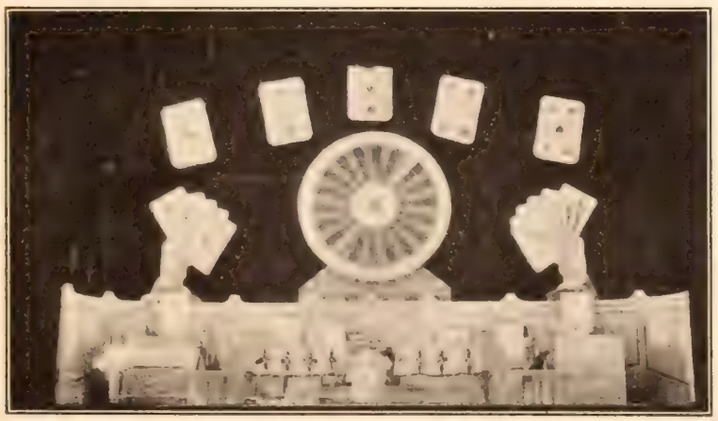
Thomas McGuire Gives Away Two Fords Every Week

Though Detroit is noted as an automobile center it looks to us as though that famed Michigan city will be known shortly as a center of showmanship too, for judging by the work being turned out by Joe LaRose and J. Maxwell Joice at the Fox and now these examples of the showmanlike activity of Thomas McGuire of the Hollywood Theatre, it's sure headed for that classification.

For the first number on the program we want to tell you how he put "Young Eagles" across to bigger and better box office receipts by displaying some smart showmanship.

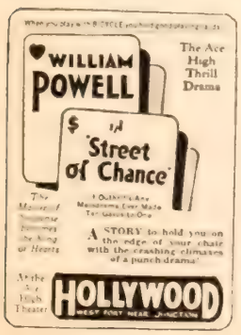
He tied up with the local airport and distributed 15,000 telegrams, a sample of which we are reproducing. 100 of the telegrams bore a postscript (as shown) purported to come from "Buddy" Rogers, inviting the holder to witness the show as his guest. The telegrams were distributed at the theatre.

TELEGRAM



12AM MAY 17 1930 DL 64

TO ALL DETROIT
YOU'LL BE THRILLED TO HIGH HEAVEN WITH MY NEW ALL TALKING PICTURE "YOUNG EAGLES" AT THE HOLLYWOOD 4 DAYS STARTING SUNDAY MAY 18 STOP THRU COURTESY OF HOLLYWOOD THEATRE AND MATHEWSON AIRWAYS INC ALLEN AND GODDARD ROADS I WILL GIVE AWAY 3 AIRPLANE RIDES AT EVERY PERFORMANCE THOSE 4 DAYS AT THE HOLLYWOOD DON'T MISS "YOUNG EAGLES" OR THIS FREE PLANE RIDE



BUDDY ROGERS

BE MY GUEST AT THE HOLLYWOOD DURING SHOWING OF "YOUNG EAGLES" "Buddy"

Free plane rides, 12 each day, were given to holders of special numbers. The airport owner's daughter, the youngest licensed pilot in the world, handed out the rides at every performance. The newspapers gave this stunt a lot of publicity and the theatre secured loads of good-will.

When he played "Street of Chance" McGuire decided that he wanted to advertise the picture in a novel way. By tying up with a playing card manufacturer he was enabled to secure playing cards of the sort we are showing with this article. By examining the cut closely you will notice the effectively worded copy that went a long ways towards selling the picture. Another angle that proved of great help was the stage setting, a photo of which we are running, that was used to plug the picture. The playing card company furnished McGuire with giant playing cards and a lot of other accessories and the result was a "wow" of a display. The picture went over like wildfire with the patrons of the theatre.

On his kiddie business McGuire started a Kid Klub that went across so successfully that when the time of the klub, fifteen weeks, ran out, he decided to start another one. He runs a Kiddie Klub "Kontest" occassionally in which all members possessing any ability at singing, dancing, or reciting are invited to participate in a revue on the stage. The revue is run off in vaudeville fashion, act after act, and the contestants are adjudged by audience applause and stage judges. The "Kontest" created a lot of talk about the town and the kids all flocked to enter their names, whenever one was announced.

And now for the biggest gag of all. THE DONATING OF TWO FORDS EVERY WEEK TO PATRONS. This stunt has had them talking morning, noon and night in Detroit. McGuire has been using it since January and in order that you may learn from this showman himself just how the stunt goes at his house we'll let him tell you about it.

"When we first started with this, as the enclosed herald shows, we intended giving away just one a week, Friday only, but the first night's arrival found over a thousand at the door an hour and a half before the regular opening time, and with three cashiers doing their best, we had to call the police reserves, as the six officers detailed at the theatre that night could not cope with the anxious mob. So, in self defense, and in order not to lose as friends the ones turned away that night we found that we'd have to give two a week or stop the stunt. Therefore, the two. And it's holding up so good that we may continue it all summer. THIS MAY NOT HELP A LOT OF THE FELLOWS, AS YOU HAVE TO HAVE A BIG HOUSE TO GET OUT OF THE BARREL FOR THE $540 EACH CAR COSTS."

So there's the low-down on what this showman is doing to keep his house out of the red. And that's not all either. We could go on for hours and tell about the many stunts he has used to secure good-will for the theatre. One instance of which was seen in the church services he ran at the theatre on Good Friday. Every church in town was invited to hold services between twelve and three o'clock. Then there's his special nursery room, equipped with talkies, which consists of a glass enclosed room in the rear of the auditorium with the sound coming through special monitors. And what a good-will asset this turned out to be!

We want to thank Mr. McGuire for sending these things along to us so that we might see what the rest of the Detroit showmen are doing to sell their shows, and we hope he will favor us with a photo and a little dope on himself in his next letter in order that we may introduce him to the rest of the Club.

"THE SMELLIES"

(The Star, Johannesburg, South Africa)

WHERE CENSORSHIP WILL BE ESSENTIAL

After the movies and the talkies come the smellies. The New York correspondent of the Daily News states that a patent has been granted John Leavell of Los Angeles to use an apparatus synchronizing smells with scenes in talking films. Thus when a farm is pictured on the screen, the scent of hay will be projected into the audience. With sea pictures, audiences will sniff the brine. Hospitals will be suggested by the smell of chloroform, and so on.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Johnson Secured Lots of Good-Will On This Campaign

That "Ace showman" from Oil City, Pa., our good friend Fred Johnson, formerly manager of the RKO Colonel Drake Theatre is out promoting his double truck lay-outs again. This time Fred cashed in on two attractions, showing that he's no slouch.

The Siamese Twins were booked recently into his house and Fred decided to give the stage attraction a big plug along with his regular picture merchandising, so to this end he promoted a double truck ad from the local merchants that sold the town on the twins as well as the picture.

The special lay-out was so well made up that we are reproducing it here and by examining it you will note that Fred is also plugging a special children's matinee, an angle that makes his showmanship stand out like a beacon light. Knowing how the kids would like to witness the twins, and also anticipating record business in the evening, he decided to run a special matinee show for their benefit and offer reduced prices. He also reduced prices for the adults on the special show and this made quite a hit with them.

On the top of the lay-out you will notice the prominent position the theatre's name commands, so that when anyone opened the paper to the page it would be one of the first things to catch the eye. The merchants were more than pleased with the lay-out and Fred's good-will stock with them went up considerably especially when it was found that business increased because of the ad. This double truck is a bit unusual inasmuch as it contains a number of testimonial plugs for the merchandise being sold by local dealers. The twins were given a car for their use while they played the theatre and the car carried a plug for the house.

Fred's entire campaign on this attraction, which included a number of other stunts in addition to the special newspaper ad went over very well and the town was completely sold on the Drake's show.

Max Melincoff Puts His House On Paper's Front Page

We don't know whether this "front page crashing" being indulged in by showmen is contagious but lately we've come across no less than ten examples in which showmen have "planted" newspaper stories. Just a little while ago we showed you how Max Melincoff landed one, and then Olinto Accorsini crashed through with one. Now it's Ray S.

This showman recently played "Ingagi" at the house he handles publicity and exploitation for and feeling that he wanted to get some extra publicity out of the newspapers, decided to take a chance and plant a story. Just how he framed it, we haven't the entire dope on, but we can give you an idea of what was done.

A monkey, three feet in height had been placed in the lobby of the theatre as a ballyhoo on the picture. During the daytime the monk, bearing a banner on his back, was walked about the streets. At night he was secured in a cage. It seems that during the night he broke loose from the cage, escaped through a special door used by late employees, and emerged into the street. From the street, he was supposed to have wandered into a room in one of the leading hotels of the town and attacked a temporary guest, a woman, there. The screams of the woman attracted the attention of the night clerk and a few moments later twenty policemen, armed with bombs and riot guns were on the way. But upon their arrival they found nothing, except a gaping hole, in the window screen, which, the terrified woman explained, was made by the escaping monkey.

The story, when it broke in the papers created a lot of interest especially since the name of the theatre was mentioned and this was a big help in boosting up attendance during the run of the film. As we have stated before, this business of planting stories is sometimes very risky, but since Ray S. is a showman of many years experience we surmise that he knows just how far he can go with the local editors.

GEORGE P. IRWIN is the manager of the Paramount Theatre in Brainerd, Minn. Though we have never been in Brainerd we are sure that if we happened to pass through there we'd see plenty of evidence of showmanship because of the fact that a large number of Minnesota live-wires are displaying Round Table certificates in their offices. And wherever that emblem is displayed there's bound to be a showman. You've got one now George, so the rest is up to you.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

P. F. SCHWIE manages the Garrick Theatre in Duluth, Minn., and being located in that city Mr. Schwie no doubt has already made the acquaintance of Morris Rosenthal, another live-wire from that city. So why don't you showmen get together "P. F." and let's have some friendly competition. And just so that you'll be even with Morris let's have a photo of yourself so that you too can meet the rest of the Club "face to face."

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

G. W. CARLSON is the manager of the People's Theatre in Superior, Wis. Well, Mr. Carlson with Superior as a town, we feel that your show merchandising too is going to be "superior." And in order to prove the strength of our statement we'd like to have a few examples of the work you're turning out, because you know what they say in the region of Missouri, "Show Us." And then we pass it along to the Club because they are the rest of the "Us."

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PAUL BUCHHOLZ manages the Grand Theatre in Mankato, Minn., and we take pleasure in welcoming this Mankato showman to the Club because we have already shown examples of the "ace" work being turned out by the rest of the showmen in that town and we believe that Mr. Buchholz is going to prove just as active. And how about a picture of yourself along with your contribution Paul?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN P. MASON manages the Hollis Theatre in Hollis, Long Island, N. Y. Our group of members from Long Island have always proven themselves real showmen, and since Mason is located in a district that should allow for some good exploiting we feel that he will more than want to keep in line with the rest of the Islanders, and will become a very active member.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

URBAN J. SCHWARTZ is the Assistant Manager of the Abowd Theatre in Findlay, Ohio, and from what we have featured on the Club pages in the line of showmanship from his district we know that Urban will have to do some tall stepping to keep up with the leaders. However Urban, we want to get a look at whatever you are doing to help sell shows in your district, so keep right in touch with us.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

M. TOMASINO is the manager of the White Way Theatre in New Haven, Conn. As New Haven is C. J. Latta's "hunting ground" we feel that any showmen in that town must be real showmen to keep stepping along with him. And as we happen to know, since we've done a lot of exploiting in the town in the past, that Mr. Tomasino has plenty of opportunities to turn out some corking stunts we look forward to passing them along on our pages.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEO. J. STEVENS is the manager of the Norwood Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, out where many fine examples of up-to-the-minute show merchandising has originated. The Cleveland members are still right in front for being active and we hope that Mr. Stevens will prove to be active also. We think he'll fit into the picture like a kid glove. And when you send in your first contribution George, send us in a photo of yourself too.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GORDON McKINNON is the manager of the Chatteau Theatre in Rochester, Minn., for the Publix Outfit. With so many of his brother members represented on our pages every week it is our belief that McKinnon will also be presented with them, because we know that he is capable of live-wire showmanship and also that he believes in passing it along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. W. GOULD, who manages the Morningside Theatre in New York City, certainly needs very little introduction, for he is the showman whose picture we ran a while back and complimented on the work he has accomplished since his ten years' service with the Consolidated Circuit. We want to welcome you into the Club "E. W." and we know you're going to be very active.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MISS JEAN LA ROE, the publicity director for the J. Real Neth Theatres in Columbus, Ohio, by her application boosts up our feminine enrollment one more. Miss La Roe's work is known to her fellow Club members and we are sure that this young lady, who is making quite a name for herself out in Columbus will do the same thing in the Managers' Round Table Club. Welcome into the organization Miss La Roe.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

NORMAND L. FRENCH is the manager of the Palace Theatre in Rockville, Conn. Having been through his town on one of our theatrical missions we have a recollection that it was a pretty thriving little place and we believe that some of that activity is occasioned by the hustling showmanship on display there. However, since it is some little time ago, we'd like to have Normand tell us how he sells his shows and we hope he'll include a photo of himself in his letter.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. L. LOWENSTEIN manages the Park Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y. In the past this beautiful house has been the scene of some corking showmanship displayed by a certain Round Table member, and it is our hunch that Lowenstein is striving to keep up that record at his house. How about it "A. L." Why not give us a little dope on what you are doing to pack them in over there?

Note!

New members are urged to send their photos in at once.

Reduction in Costs

THE era of economy that was started in the motion picture business some years ago with the merging of producing, manufacturing, distributing and exhibiting interests was directed toward the elimination of duplicated costs. And, while all of the benefits of this industry-change have not yet been realized, it has moved gradually toward perfection.

Since trade paper advertising is a vital and necessary part of selling effort in this business the film trade group of the Associated Publications, Inc. was formed to further along the economy program by serving its industry through the reduction of advertising costs and the increased efficiency and quality of regional trade publications, which, naturally, brought about greater advertising results.

By printing all of the papers in our own plant in Kansas City, the geographical center of the country, and by eliminating the duplicated cost of printing national and general trade news, which runs throughout the entire group, we have been able to make a saving in our production costs that has been passed on to our advertisers using our entire group, in the form of a liberal discount off the regular rates of the individual publications. An additional saving is afforded to our advertisers through the requirement of only one printing plate. An advertiser can now reach 20,000 exhibitors and film trades people for almost half the former cost and through papers that are immeasurably of greater service to the industry than the regional trade press of the past has ever been!

"What A Man" a Money Clicker

Says

ARTHUR JAMES

REGINALD DENNY is likely to stir the box office to the point of heavy receipts in his new picture, "What a Man!" for Sono Art-World Wide.

The play is smart, distinctive, of the highest class and downright absorbing. Watch this one for a money clicker!

"ADDS PRESTIGE TO BUSINESS"—PETE HARRISON

"What A Man!" is the type of picture every independent producer dreams of producing but usually fails. It is as good and as wholesome entertainment as one will find in the best pictures made by the big producers, the kind that add prestige to the picture business. The story is inspiring, laugh provoking, and holds the interest well throughout. And the hero is the type that could be held as a model to the young men of this as well as of any other country. There is subtlety both in the construction and in the acting. Reginald Denny has never appeared to a better advantage. His slight English accent and his good delivery make his talk pleasant. Miriam Seegar is a charming heroine. Harvey Clark, Lucille Ward, Carlyle Moore, Anita Louise, Norma Drew, Charles Coleman and others are in the cast. The sound recording is good.

Reginald Denny proves "What A Man" he is this week at Fox's new Brooklyn ace house.

(Adv.)

"Cock O' The Walk," Fine At Roxy—Exhibitors Herald

When "Cock O' The Walk" had its world premiere at the Roxy, Exhibitors Herald World had this to say:

"At the Roxy this week, Joseph Schildkraut monopolizes the center of the screen in a very enjoyable hour and fifteen minutes of good comedy and better drama. Cast as a cynical, egotistical gigolo, a role familiar to him, he gives a convincing and capable performance. There is enough story in this picture to make three ordinary productions. Myrna Loy gives a splendid performance, with commendable restraint. Intelligent direction has helped make this a fine picture." (Douglas Hodges)

"Extremely Pleasant" —Motion Picture News

At last Reginald Denny is supplied with a story. "What a Man!" makes extremely pleasant entertainment. The treatment and the successful play for comedy values get it by with a very comfortable margin. The vehicle gives him a chance to display his flair for comedy. (Reviewed by Red Kann.)

Tremendous Exploitation Set For Reginald Denny Vehicle

Starting in the next issue of Film Fun, national monthly magazine of wit and humor, and for two issues thereafter, Reginald Denny will be featured in a contest, in which 217 prizes will be offered to contributors of the best captions to stills of scenes from the picture "What A Man!" In addition to Film Fun's presentation of the campaign, the rest of the group of the Dell publications, aggregating a circulation of over 1,000,000, will plug the contest in full page advertisements. Four radio broadcasts will augment the promotion of this campaign, which will have the announcements of the winners in the October issue of Film Fun. In the meantime, that means three months of stimulated public interest in Reginald Denny and "What A Man!"

"IN THE MONEY" —FILM DAILY

At a special showing yesterday for exhibitors and press, Sono Art sprung their latest which is worthy of a Broadway showing. The comedy is clean, clever and nicely acted and directed. Denny, who is starred, gives an excellent performance putting this picture "in the money." (Arthur Eddy.)

DUDE WRANGLER ROCKED HOUSE WITH LAUGHTER

Motion Picture News Reviews Picture as Succession of Belly Laughs

"The Chic Sale influence has reached Hollywood, and the author of that famous American classic "The Specialist," should get some of the blame—or credit—for this picture. The producers have injected chunks of raw, earthy humor into it that shock—and rock the theatre with laughter.

Sono Art-World Wide created comment by advertising the picture as the story of a "pansy cowboy" and the writer of the copy did not stretch his imagination. In fact, an old cowboy, detailed to accompany the dude wrangler to his ranch, objects with the protest: "Folks will think he's made a pansy of me, too."

The treatment given it results in a succession of belly laughs. Thorpe has taken a cue from revue blackouts and gets over his salty gags with a speed that leaves the spectator gasping, clicking a bigger roar thereby. . . . Clyde Cook grabs the acting honors and his straight comedy is a wow." The picture features George Duryea, Lina Basquette and Francis X. Bushman. (Reviewed by Robert Hage.)

BIG FIGHT, RENO, ONCE GENTLEMAN BID FOR BIG DRAW

"The Big Fight," James Cruze's version of the sensational Belasco play; "Reno," based on Cornelius Vanderbilt's popular novel, marking the return of Ruth Roland to the talking screen; and "Once A Gentleman," a James Cruze production starring Edward Everett Horton and Lois Wilson—have recently arrived in New York, and loom up large on this company's release schedule. All three productions provide rich and novel exploitation angles—aimed straight at any exhibitor's box-office.

• Once in a lifetime a show like this • The new era in sound and color entertainment • What sound did for the silent screen this one does for the sound screen • JOHN BOLES singing the day's two greatest song hits—"Song of the Dawn" and "It Happened in Monterey" • JEANIE LANG, the screen's newest sensation, overnight established as America's Personality Girl, stopping the show as she croons "I'd Like to Do Things For You" and "Ragamuffin Romeo" • Spicy, intimate comedy • The best music ever heard in a picture, including the first dramatization of Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" • Held over at the Roxy—and a tremendous hit everywhere • Truly, the world's greatest photoplay •

THE WHITE HELL OF PITZ PALU

• How did they do it? • Where was the camera when this was shot? • You'll wonder when you see this astounding new experience in screen drama • Photographed in places never before filmed by man • Shots of Germany's greatest living ace zooming his plane through a 2000-foot ice gorge • Lovers hurtling over bottomless chasms, clinging to perilous precipices • How it was shot, Heaven only knows • Spectacularly produced by H. R. Sokal-Film • The picture of a thousand and one thrills! •

SAINT JOHNSON

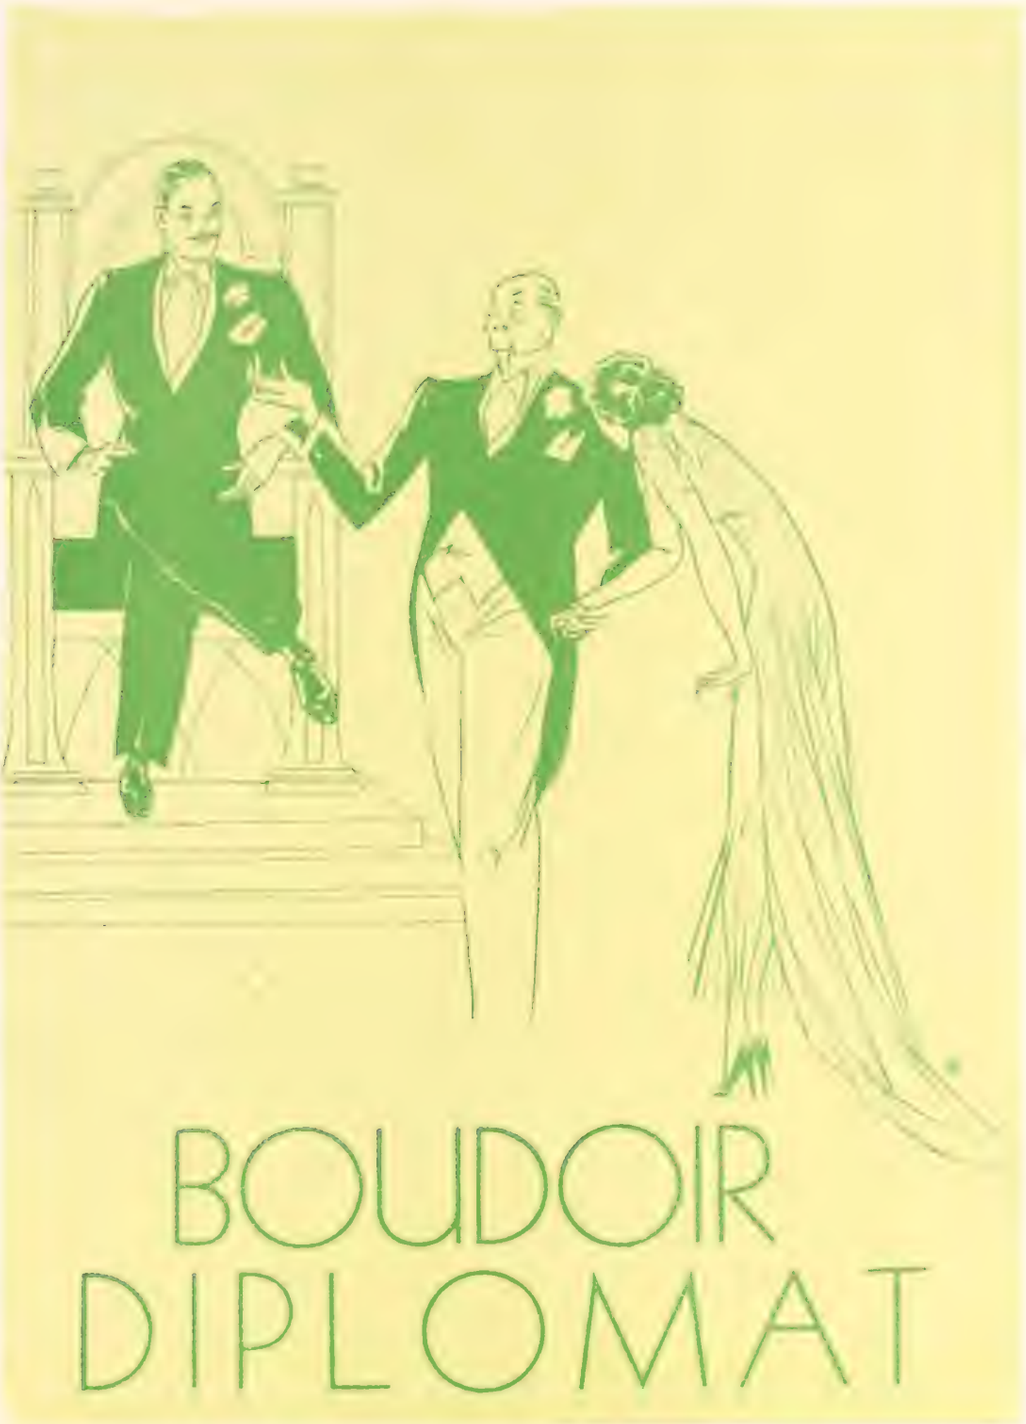
• Advance [illegible] of this marvelous Western novel, to be published this October, place W. R. Burnett, its author, on a plane with Harold Bell Wright and Zane Grey • Mr. Burnett stands out in the list of best-seller authors this year with "Little Caesar" and "Iron Man" • "St. Johnson" will be produced on an epic Western scale • With Lewis Ayres and John Wray of "All Quiet on the Western Front," and a big cast •

Another story by the author of "All Quiet on the Western Front"

•ERICH MARIA REMARQUE'S sequel to the book that made the whole world gasp will soon be published serially in Collier's Weekly—and shortly thereafter will be presented to a waiting world as a talking picture by Universal • Think of the pre-sold audience waiting for this one! • Twenty million people read his first book • Millions upon millions more will have seen "All Quiet" as a picture • And every one—and more—a potential customer for the sequel •

JOHN BOLES and JEANETTE LOFF

THE LOVE CAVALIER



• Handsome, dashing John Boles • Dazzling Jeanette Loff • Stars of Paul Whiteman's "King of Jazz" in a colorful romantic operetta that will have the fair sex fighting for seats • A pair of songbirds that promises to eclipse any lovers the screen has yet known • A bright, modern, melodious vehicle insured of smart direction by the master hand of John Robertson •

THE LADY SURRENDERS

ANOTHER SENSATIONAL SOCIAL DRAMA

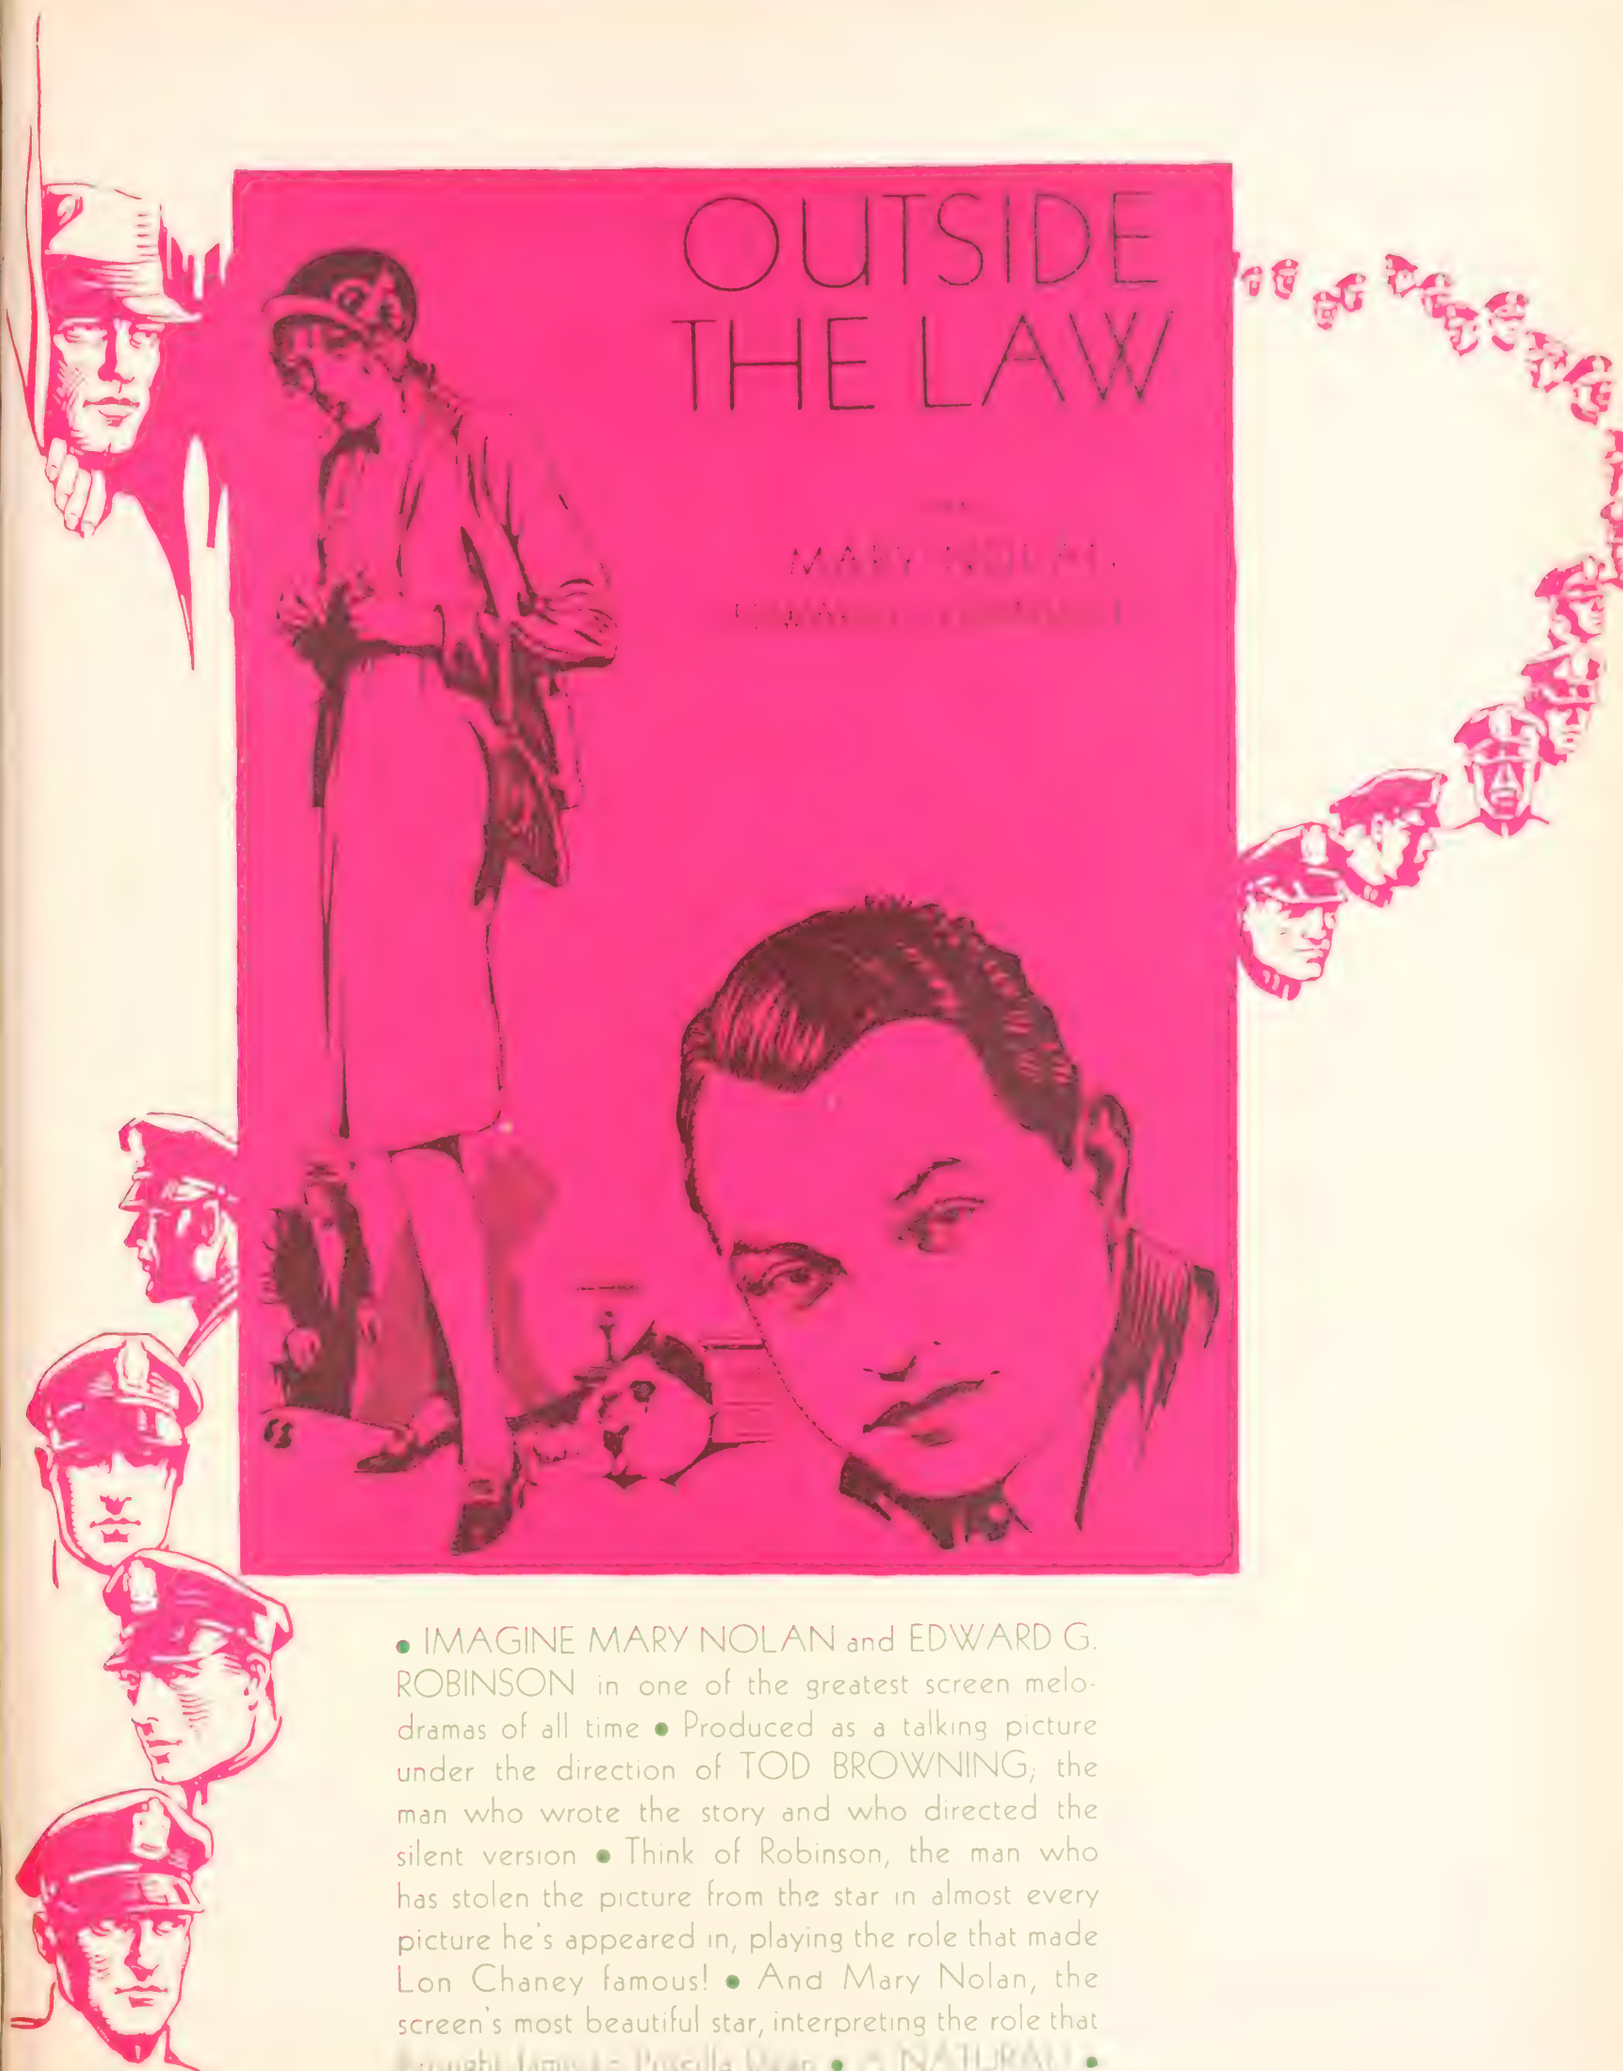
• The first modern novel from the brilliant pen of John Erskine, author of "Helen of Troy" • John Stahl will direct this smart ultra sophisticated story about a woman, tired of placid insincere married life, who wrote a magazine article about it which threw her husband and her dear friend into a compromise • A big theme that strikes to the heart of thousands of homes • To be produced by a specially selected cast, probably headed by Rose Hobart, famous stage star, now appearing in the play "Death Takes a Holiday" •

BOUDOIR DIPLOMAT

• Made from the sophisticated comedy smash stage hit by Rudolf Lothar and Fritz Gottwald • Produced with a cast (probably headed by John Boles) and on a scale in keeping with its tremendous value as a show property • A spicy comedy Directed by William Wyler, who directed "Hells Heroes" and "The Storm" • With piquant dramatic twists, exposing the love adventures of a handsome young diplomat who was sent as envoy to a foreign country and given a royal order to love so that his country's purposes might be served • O-o-o la, la! •

JOHN BOLES AND LUPE VELEZ IN RESURRECTION

•This immortal story by Count Leo Tolstoy will be dramatized and directed by EDWIN CAREWE, with John Boles and Lupe Velez in the leading roles • It is the deathless tale of love, deception, remorse, regeneration and renunciation on the part of two frail humans who achieve a daring climax to their love • Strong, dramatic fare played against the backgrounds of Russia's gayest capitals and of her grayest steppes •



JOHN BOLES IN STRICTLY DISHONORABLE

• New York's outstanding stage hit of this season, now ending its first big year at the Avon Theatre • Pictured with the one and only JOHN BOLES in the starring role • The Brock Pemberton success by Preston Sturges that has all Broadway talking • The stage hit bound to be even a bigger smash as a talking picture • Bought at a staggering price; worth every penny • Briefly, it concerns a beautiful, innocent girl, and a man who admits that his intentions are "STRICTLY DISHONORABLE." •

THE COHENS AND KELLYS IN IRELAND

• Cohen and Kelly in a musical farce • There's the something new you crave • A hundred million fans will want to know what happens to Cohen on Kelly's home grounds, the Emerald Isle • They'll want to hear the lilting Irish airs • They'll want to see the stunning Technicolor sequences • And laugh with the irresistible comedy pair who have taught a joy-loving nation new tricks in the art of laughing •

• IMAGINE MARY NOLAN and EDWARD G. ROBINSON in one of the greatest screen melodramas of all time • Produced as a talking picture under the direction of TOD BROWNING, the man who wrote the story and who directed the silent version • Think of Robinson, the man who has stolen the picture from the star in almost every picture he's appeared in, playing the role that made Lon Chaney famous! • And Mary Nolan, the screen's most beautiful star, interpreting the role that brought fame to Priscilla Dean • A NATURAL •

OURANG

Senate May Probe Entire Industry in Search of Trade Practice Violations

Priming for the Battle

Important sound equipment manufacturers have at last started the battle for domination of the non-theatrical field, a fight which, as forecast exclusively in MOTION PICTURE NEWS several weeks ago, will reach tremendous proportions before the white flag of truce is hoisted.

Literature is being sent out to strategic non-theatrical centers, concentrating the sales argument on the shortage of sound product for 1930-31, and pointing out the approaching death of silent pictures.

Hays Office to Be Included in Probe, Is Rumor

Washington—Possibilities of a thorough investigation of the picture industry have been reported in Washington at various times, but it is not expected that any definite step will be taken at this session.

Reports were that a senatorial investigation of the Hays' office activities would be sought, but with all efforts now being directed toward bringing the congressional session to a close in order that members may return to their home states to participate in the coming congressional campaigns it is not anticipated that any effort will be made to rush the requisite resolution through until next session.

That such an investigation will ultimately be made has been the belief in Washington for some time. There has been a steady stream of complaints regarding the industry, and control bills have been repeatedly introduced in Congress, but the present session has been reluctant to take up a matter of such controversial nature. Possibly the matter may be taken up next session, but it is not likely that any effort will be made to secure an investigation which would carry on through the summer in view of the exceedingly delicate political situation in many states which will require the full attention of members of Congress during the next few months.

Laemmle on Way to Coast

Carl Laemmle, Universal president, is en route to the Coast, following several weeks in New York, where he attended the annual sales convention.

Clayton Act Amendment Sought to Bring Films Within Jurisdiction

Sweeping senatorial investigation of the picture industry and amendment of the Clayton Act to bring films and a number of other commodities under its jurisdiction as regards price discrimination are to be sought at this or the next session of Congress.

The proposed probe would cover the industry in all its ramifications, it is understood, various trade practices coming under scrutiny, together with charges of alleged conspiracy, monopoly, restraints of trade, boycott, chain operation and other phases of the business.

Brookhart the Sponsor?

Considerable pressure for such an investigation is declared being exerted through complaints made by independent exhibitors. Senator Brookhart's name has been mentioned as the probable choice of independents for the probe, despite the fact that the Brookhart bill has not been able to get past committee.

The plan for amendment of the Clayton Act, said to be gaining considerable headway at Washington, calls for bringing under its provisions any price discrimination in sales to include product leased. While not sponsored by exhibitors, this measure would bring renting of films directly under provisions of the law.

Senator Walsh has been unsuccessful in efforts to secure passage of a measure calling for an investigation of the Department of Justice's activities in prosecuting alleged conspiracy and monopoly in the industry, which would, in effect, have been a probe of the industry.

Doug-Mary Split, "Lotta Bologney" to Hollywood

Hollywood—Just a lot of boloney is the way Hollywood characterizes the reported Pickford-Fairbanks split. Didn't Doug phone daily from London at a cost of $100 per? the locals query. And, if that isn't a demonstration of affection, then what is? A chatter writer is given credit for starting the report. Miss Pickford, they say, had at the start considered postponing her picture to make the trip, but considered the nut too high. There have been a lot of reports, but Hollywood says they're the bunk. Miss Pickford states officially she is holding up production to decide if certain scenes might be better if retaken and to improve treatment of certain situations. Which is that.

Under the Towel

If two very well known executives of a second string producing-distributing organization had used a little common sense, their keenest competitor would not have in his possession some highly valuable info. of future plans and deals to be worked out by the former.

The moral is this: Never discuss confidential company business from a Times Square barber-chair. A friendly enemy may be reclining under a hot towel not far away!

Dowling Spanked, Cans 'Ritz' and Heads New Unit

Formation of a million dollar film and legit production unit by Eddie Dowling is understood to be the outgrowth of a reconciliation between Dowling and his banker friends, John J. Raskob, Mike Meehan and others, who, it is said, pulled away financial support from the Dowling enterprises, shortly after the sensational stock market crash, when Eddie donned a high hat.

One yarn has it that Dowling's financial return on his backers' investment in "Rainbow Man" and "Blaze o' Glory" swelled Eddie's hatband to such huge proportions that the star was given the ozone by the Wall Street group.

Another inside yarn, however, credits Eddie with getting tough because Eddie's friends "took" him in the stock market crash like Grant took Richmond. Dowling, so the story goes, could not understand why his bankroll, estimated to be near $2,000,000, took wings, especially when all of his stock trading was negotiated over the same counter controlled by friends.

A few weeks ago, it is said, Dowling tied a can to the ritzy spirit, visited his Wall Street allies, took his spanking and all was forgiven. Now Eddie intends to go ahead with plans for Broadway stage plays and more talkers.

Dowling's present contract with Sono Art-World Wide calls for one more musical, and upon delivery, he is expected to sever all relations with that company. His future distribution channel has not been set. There are rumblings of a deal with Paramount, but this report is scouted in view of Raskob's large holdings in Warners, and the Meehan influence in Radio.

SMALL EXHIBITORS MAY BECOME BIG TROUBLES

THE crushing weight of circuit buying power is being felt by a number of independent exhibitors as the selling season whips into action. The sales convention pronouncement of intention to "give the little fellow a break" is getting its first test. The spot is not a pleasant one for the sales executives who sit between the theatre heads of their organizations and the independent exhibitors in competition with circuit houses.

Chain theatre men want the productions of their companies for their own houses. Competitors want some, if not all, of the same product. In certain instances part of such product is indispensable to the life of the independent exhibitors. How it will be divided; how much the chain executives will concede in the interests of policy and good will, and how valiantly or strategically the one-house exhibitor fights for what he needs combine to give the sales managers' problems which go deep.

Now, as never before, the intent, purpose and consequences of chain theatre buying power take on significance which goes far beyond questions of price, runs, protection and momentary policy. Little men, as well as big men, fight desperately when their backs are against a wall. In a life and death struggle, weapons are employed which, in less serious contests for existence, would be considered unfair. The most imminent, and beyond all doubt the most dangerous force which looms shadow-like back of the small exhibitor if he is crushed, is political. It is but a step from the political interest in a situation which presents substance for action to the next and deadly phase—legislation.

As the selling season progresses and local buying situations are confronted, analyzed and decided throughout the country, there must be no indifference to the plight of the small exhibitor if he is not given considerations merited by ability, investment and his right to continued and profitable existence. Certain keen-brained sales executives are fully aware of the gravity of the problem, and they are endeavoring to meet it fairly.

This Merger Has Merit

A merger having real merit is proposed by M. H. Hoffman, former Tiffany executive. His idea offers a practical solution to the present disorganized condition of the independent exchange men and with an important element of selling value in support of product. Hoffman proposes a consolidation of independent exchanges into a national system which would offer worthy independents distribution.

The ambitious independent producer, and he continues to exist despite conditions of the most discouraging kind, now must make his picture and then tour the country, a print under his arm, selling it not once or twice, but twenty, thirty or more times, only to discover, more often than not, after completing his sales presentation, that he has picked the wrong independent distributor, and has to do it all over again in various territories to return with cash or something more substantial than alimony-notes. Under the Hoffman plan the independent producer would make one sale, to a central office representing the nationalized independent exchangemen.

Many independent exhibitors need independent productions, and the record is abundant in evidence that the independent exchangeman needs a capable source of independently made pictures.

We Told You So

An interloper, unseasoned, scarcely known as to its anatomy or what makes it go, has given mature Wall Street minds a much-needed jolt. Picture stocks, figuratively babies in the family of securities which collectively give the New York Stock Exchange its existence, have weathered the recent bear move and held with bewildering firmness to their levels despite a general falling off in price.

The Chicago Tribune, in a survey recently made public, puts amusement stocks first in a report of those industrials least affected by the current business situation. To Wall Street it all is very bewildering. To MOTION PICTURE NEWS it is creditable and gratifying because it fulfils the prediction published months ago that film stocks would not suffer in the general market depression then anticipated.

California Zoning Plan May Be National To Keep Hands of Gov't Off Protection

Quota System Dropped

Distributors generally are dropping the quota system on sales as the result of the swing to percentage. With most of them going to a "percentage only" policy, the reason for the change is apparent. Now, instead of being given a quota to shoot at in their respective territories, branch managers will be judged by the percentage of possibilities that they close. Under various plans, each situation is carefully analyzed, charted and the manager advised just how many accounts he is expected to turn in, his job depending how close to the mark he hits.

Gate for Alice White as Gross Takes Nosedive

Hollywood—Alice White is the latest of the First National stars to be let out. The "whoopee" girl follows Billie Dove, Corinne Griffith, Jack Mulhall, Colleen Moore, Dorothy Mackaill and others who were under contract to First National when Warners assumed control of the company. Richard Barthelmess alone remains of the "old guard" among the stars.

Decision not to renew option on Alice White's contract came after Jack Warner had arrived in New York and discussed the matter with eastern officials of the company.

Sales reports, it is declared, showed a swift dropping off in popularity of the White films. With the company having two more for release up to December, and averse to gambling further with the White pictures, the star is said to have been given notice that option on her services would not be renewed and she is at liberty to make other arrangements.

About a year ago, First National elevated Miss White to star rating, giving her a new contract for $1,500 weekly in place of one at $600.

It is reported that her salary for the past six months has been set at about $2,500 weekly, with new option calling for increase to $3,000. Company officials decided not to renew at this figure.

Even though Alice White leaves First National's salary list, the company has two or three pictures finished and scheduled for release during the next few months. "Sweet Mama" and "Show Girl in Hollywood" are current releases."

Carolina Exhibs Meet

Charlotte—The largest number to attend a summer session of the Theatre Owners Ass'n of the Carolinas is expected to gather at Myrtle Beach, S. C., June 8. Among the speakers will be Mrs. Anna Aiken Patterson, of Atlanta.

'Charley's Aunt' Causes Christie To Say 'Uncle'

Hollywood—Whether the Christie contract to make two features for Columbia next year can weather the gaff or will go the way of the Small contract of a year ago is a subject of speculation here.

The first picture under the Christie agreement is slated to be a talker version of "Charley's Aunt." While the terms have not been divulged, Harry Cohn is declared taking matters in hand and trying to supervise things. This is a new and strange experience to the Christie brothers, who are reported discouraged somewhat already at the turn things have taken. Just what course they will pursue is problematical.

Small's Experience

This situation parallels a similar one which occurred a year ago. At that time Eddie Small had a contract with Columbia to produce four pictures. He started his first, "The Broadway Hoofer," but Harry Cohn continually interrupted story preparation with his ideas until Small wanted to know who was doing the producing. Blow-up came when Harry wanted his name on the credit titles as "supervised by"—which Small would not allow. Contract was cancelled, with Small producing and delivering the Belle Baker picture as the only one of the contract. He sold Cohn the story rights to "Broadway Hoofer," which was released under title of "Broadway Scandals," and another picture was made to carry the already-sold program title of "Broadway Hoofer."

Wife Says Von Sternberg Bounced Her from Home

Hollywood — Contemptuous remarks she says her husband, Josef von Sternberg, made about her has led Riza Royce to seek a divorce. He also was accused of evicting her from their apartment May 11. With the petition was filed a property settlement of $1,200, alimony for five years and a lump sum of $25,000.

Independents on West Coast Get Break Under New Clearance Schedule

Proposal to make national the zoning plan adopted by southern California distributors, chains and independents, was under discussion at a meeting of sales managers yesterday at the Hays office.

The California protection schedules, not yet made public, give the independents there a better break than they ever received before, it is stated. Under the plan, a permanent zoning committee is established to rearrange zoning due to new theatres, closings and other changes, so that the schedules will be flexible for a long time.

Concerned Over U. S. Threat

There is considerable concern over government activities with respect to protection, which have resulted in indictment of West Coast Theatres, its officials and several distributors growing out of alleged "freeze-out" of independent exhibitors. This criminal conspiracy action is slated for trial June 17.

Conspiracy Claim Made by Southern Showman in Suit

Atlanta—Hearings will start October 6 in the conspiracy action brought against the Hays organization, nine distributors and the Atlanta Film Board, by W. H. C. Dudley, Americus exhibitor, asking damages of $31,500 under the Sherman law.

The suit attacks the standard contract and compulsory arbitration, the defendant alleging he was coerced into accepting films he did not want and into putting up additional bonds to insure his contract with the defendant corporation. Distributors named in the suit are: Educational, United Artists, Pathe, P. D. C., Film Distributing Corp. Famous Players-Lasky (Paramount Publix), Associated Exhibitors and FBO (RKO).

Richardson Named "U" Southern Division Head

W. M. Richardson, who has been Universal exchange manager at New Orleans, has been promoted to southern division manager. He will have headquarters in New Orleans with supervision over Charlotte, Atlanta, Memphis, New Orleans, San Antonio, Dallas and Oklahoma City.

Richardson's work as southern division manager is under Ralph B. Williams, southern sales director, whose headquarters are at the home office.

The Insiders' Outlook

FOR the first time in the fluttering memory of The Insiders, something is going to be done about something that needs doing. Protection is its name.

A long time on the way, but nevertheless on the verge of going places. Believe it or not, it's the truth.

Charlie Pettijohn is just back from Los Angeles. While there, the southern California territory was re-zoned, exhibitors and distributors uniting in the move. The statement has been subsequently made—and not denied—that the complicated provisions of the agreement give to the independents the best break they have ever had. Even Fox West Coast, which, by virtue of extended theatre holdings and huge investments, champions extended protection for its houses, thinks it's good.

The next scene properly belongs in Washington where the Department of Justice sits back and occasionally digs up ways and means of exciting the picture business. The solons there have been getting themselves in readiness for a party beginning June 17. It will be quite a function and important enough to make several picture men of prominence hop the train west, despite the heat.

Pot Boilings

Back of this solitary conspiracy action against protection as practiced in the West is the genesis of a potential move which might easily plunge this business into oceans of grief. For it is anything but far-fetched to draw the conclusion that similar steps might be instituted elsewhere by the government. In Chicago, for instance, where Balaban and Katz are getting away with a business imperialism that would put the Hohenzollerns to blush.

This being the case, what happens? Simply this: several of the wide-awake among sales executives who know what is going on, now determine that the California plan might be applied nationally to this end:

To placate the despairing protests of exhibitors who feel the increasing pinch exercised by the powerful producer-controlled first run theatre.

To demonstrate to the Department of Justice that ideas about a legal dissection of the protection malady is unnecessary since the business has, of its own accord, cut out a cancerous and growingly malignant infection.

Some Altruists Appear

Thus it comes about that, via the Hays office, the plan is suggested. How far it will get, of course, is tomorrow's story. On the face of matters, it would appear that distributors and their circuit holdings are turning altruistic, when as a matter of fact the trepidations over the future attitude of the Justice Department are responsible for the changed front.

After all, what difference? It is of sufficient value that an onerous condition appears to be on the mend. The afflicted ones won't care a hoot about anything else.

Laugh at This One

Up and down the main stem all through the week persisted the report that A. H. Giannini, the "doctor" in more ways than one, would retire from the Bank of America, repair to his house in Rye, or even better than that, return to the California he never tires of talking about.

"Doc", as his many friends call him, is fond of that house in Westchester. He pleads guilty to any ravings about California that might be laid at his doorstep. The story so far is entirely correct, but unfortunately for the gabbers, there seems to be considerable doubt about the retirement angle.

He'd like to do it, but doubts most seriously if either his friends or his business would stand for it.

That's that. Except this:

The lie, planted cleverly here and there where its sponsor was certain it would be spread, appears to originate in the business mind of a man, interested in a bank of his own, who is using below-the-belt tactics in an endeavor to wheedle some of Giannini's accounts away from him.

Meet Dame Rumor

W. C. Boothby, treasurer of First National, has resigned and thereby earns an opportunity to take an extended vacation.

So the "hand-out" reads and everybody goes for it in print. Madame Rumor, however, sizes up the inside like this:

That Boothby, who properly rates a rep as a wizard in corporate finances ran into the snag that wrecked his First National post because he insisted upon doing certain things his way while Harry Warner politely avowed his was the better.

Believe it or not, that's the story. Boothby may have been right, but, after all, Warner is Warner. So is his company. At any rate, Boothby pulls out of First National with a fine record behind him. In those hectic days when F. N. had a new president every Tuesday and Thursday he maneuvered what was then the industry's football clear over the goal. With morale shaken and operating and financial control hammered from pillar to post, it was up to Boothby to get the money that kept the wheels revolving. He did and Harry Warner so recognized this capability when he acquired the company. This was the series of circumstances that propelled Boothby into the big job he held until the break came this week.

The Stars That Dwindle

Monkey shines from stars, real and near, are passing out of the picture. Time was—and not so long ago—when practically every studio bowed and scraped, at some time or other, to the tune warbled by its big marquee attractions.

Today, the major companies class themselves in the category of big business and what they determine is to go, does. In the last six months, a list of players which would have been considered rather formidable two years or so ago, has been mowed down and out of sight by studio orders.

The reason is directly traceable to producers' heavy interest in theatres. Not only do the Hollywood kingpins find cost sheets placed on their desks daily for consideration and approbation, but also returns from their theatres which tell the story of rise and fall in star values with a deadly, unfailing accuracy. Against the figures, no arguments are brooked.

The outlets are no longer many and are dwindling as the days roll by. The Hollywood crowd knows it, appreciates the situation and is putting on its best behavior.

Salesman's Code Of Ethics to Be Made National?

Chicago—Whether the proposed code of ethics for film salesmen to be voted upon by the Film Board June 13 is to be made the basis of a national code for salesmen probably will be determined during the visit of C. C. Pettijohn.

The code, designed to eliminate alleged racketeering, is to incorporate ten proposed standards of conduct. It was drafted by Henry Herbel, Universal; Eddie Grossman, United Artists, and Max Stahl, Educational.

The code will embody the old code of the standard contract, regarding negotiating with a competing exhibitor, after application for contract is taken. It also will call for rigid adherence to credit rules, the elimination of side agreements, thorough reports on exhibitor standing and on any attempted bicycling or other forms of cheating, and will call for respect of "the other fellow's" contract application and contract.

Is the Industry Awaiting a Gov't 'Monkey Wrench?'

Important film interests are said to be preparing themselves for adverse decisions in various governmental actions now pending, in the latest editorial bombardment by "The Churchman," Protestant Episcopal mouthpiece, which periodically launches an attack on Will H. Hays and the industry.

Strong charges are usually penned by the publication, and the current accusation would have you believe that "the continuing activity on the part of the producers in acquiring theatrical properties indicates that they are looking forward to adverse decisions" and these same film interests are 'preparing to make their mastery of the "industry,' as Mr. Hays likes to call it, complete."

Nothing short of a monopoly exists in the picture business, believes "The Churchman." But "whether it can maintain itself in law on a squarely laid issue remains to be seen," states the Protestant organ.

Meanwhile, New Contracts Carry Reinstatement Clause If System Is O.K.'d

Washington—With distributors prepared to re-establish the arbitration system if victorious in their Supreme Court appeal from the Thacher decision and the government fighting for outlawing of the credit system on a similar appeal, the high court Oct. 27 will hear argument on both appeals.

The credit case, officially the United States vs. First National, et al., will be heard first and the arbitration case directly after. The latter is the United States vs. Paramount et al., the Hays organization, its members and 32 Film Boards of Trade are involved in the action. Both cases were heard and decided by Judge Thacher, then sitting in U. S. district court, New York.

Plan Retroactive Clause

In drafting the proposed new standard form of contract, distributors intend to propose a clause that provides in event the former arbitration system is held legal by the high court, they will have the right to reintroduce it in the industry.

The government motion to advance filed by the arbitration case points out that the petition alleged that the appellants distributed approximately 60 per cent of all the motion-picture films in the United States. It claimed that the appellants had agreed with each other to coerce and require every exhibitor of motion pictures in the United States (a) to submit to arbitration any question or dispute with any member of any defendant film board of trade arising under any contract licensing the exhibition of motion pictures, (b) to waive the right to a judicial determination of any such question or dispute, and (c) to comply with any award rendered against him in any such arbitration proceeding without recourse or appeal to the courts.

Representation the Stumbling Block

The district court held, it is pointed out in the motion, that exhibitors who were not represented in the adoption of the uniform contracts had been constrained by agreement of defendant distributors to accept the arbitration provisions of these contracts and to perform the obligations thus assumed by the compulsory system of arbitration, and that such coercive restraint was undue and unreasonable and in violation of the Sherman act.

The First National case was instituted at the direction of the Attorney General, William D. Mitchell, to restrain the First National organization in an alleged conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade by certain rules and operations of credit committees and film boards of trade. The district court held that these practices did not constitute a violation of the act as alleged.

Since the outlawing of arbitration in the industry last winter, there has resulted considerable confusion due to contract violations and the return of malpractices which Britain Planning 50% Quota Law Against U. S.

London—The friendly "hands-across-the-sea" attitude of England toward America threatens to become seriously funny if plans now confidentially discussed to foist a fifty per cent quota law on American pictures should become a fact.

A handful of individuals here are familiar with the deliberations. The scheme is entirely in the verbal stage, but the MacDonald government is known to have called in a limited number of prominent British men in an effort to learn whether, in their opinion, a restictive measure as drastic as that proposed would work too great a hardship on the English exhibitor.

The government is more directly concerned with the effect on the domestic entertainment business than it is with the effect on American distributors operating here.

The impression is reported to prevail that the present quota is far too generous to American companies and not of sufficient protective weight to the British producing industry. The quota on distributors is now 10 per cent, or one British for every ten foreign films released here, rising to 20 per cent, or one in five, by March 31, 1938. The theatre owner will, by September of this year, operate under a 7½ per cent quota rising to 20 per cent British by 1938.

Pathecolor Out To Capture All European Field

Paris—Ten million francs are being spent on the first of a series of laboratory plants for Pathecolor, which, it is understood, will make a strong bid to sew up the entire European color field.

The company has decided on a policy of low prices and large scale production to cut out American competition, which will be fought vigorously.

Theatre Building Truce Seen in Fox, Paramount Reciprocal Franchise Plan

Publix Tie-Up with Warner Ended by Rivalry in Closed Spots

In what is declared to be the first step in a move for a truce in theatre building in closed spots, a long-term franchise deal now is being negotiated between Fox and Paramount Publix covering the Fox product.

The proposed franchise is to be for a period of years, it is understood, and now is being drafted by the Fox company. It is understood that the proposed agreement was prompted by Fox's strong position in the West and Paramount's commanding position in the Middle West and South. A reciprocal booking arrangement is anticipated.

Paramount-Warner Split

In connection with the reported new plan of co-operation between the two companies, a deal to give Fox product time over the Famous Canadian chain is declared under way.

Heretofore, Paramount and Warners have co-operated closely but the two firms have come to grips in the theatre field in a number of spots since the breakdown of the proposed merger.

Wunder, Alleged Hays Ally, Named Academy Manager

Hollywood—Clinton Wunder has been elevated to the post of executive manager of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences, through action of the board of directors. Wunder came west some time ago as secretary of public relations for the Academy, with duties announced at that time to broaden the scope of the association's work to include the entire country.

The appointment of Wunder to the newly created position caused much comment among Academy members, especially after many had figured Wunder as a protege of Will Hays. In the new position, Wunder becomes virtual head of the Academy staff, taking over the business and financial management of the organization. His duties will be entirely separate from those of Frank Woods, executive secretary, who continues in that position as formerly.

Bratter & Pollak Get $2,500,000 for Chain

Confirmation of the sale of their chain of theatres in northern New Jersey to R-K-O was made this week by Bratter & Pollak, who said that the transaction involved approximately $2,500,000. Messrs. Bratter and Pollak are dropping out of the amusement field, they announce, and will devote their time hereafter to their banking and investment interests.

236,204 Seats in L. A. Area

Los Angeles—Opening of the 3,000-seat Pantages in Hollywood has increased seating capacity of the city's 176 theatres to 152,268, according to a survey. Of the total, 25 theatres, seating 54,127, are in Hollywood. Theatres in cities around Los Angeles have a capacity of 83,936, making a total picture house seating capacity of 236,204 for the Los Angeles area. This total will be increased by about 4,000 Dec. 1, when the $2,000,000 Fox theatre and office building project is scheduled to be completed.

Publix Truce Is Cue for Fox Dates In Canada Chain

Toronto—Working out of a "truce" between Paramount Publix and Fox to forestall the impending theatre building and acquisition threatened as a result of the Paramount-Famous Canadian deal, is declared under way. Under its terms, Fox product would be assured bookings over the Famous Canadian chain, which has passed to Paramount control.

Transfer to Montreal Seen

Montreal—Transfer of the home office of the Famous Canadian chain to Montreal from Toronto is anticipated here, following a visit to the city by Sam Katz. Another indication is the listing of 3,256,749 shares of Paramount Publix common on the Montreal board rather than on the Toronto exchange. Also, Montreal is the home city of I. W. Killam, whose support of the Paramount offer made consummation of the deal possible.

The Paramount deal for control of the Canadian circuit was declared operative last week, when it was announced that the required minimum of 250,000 shares of stock in the Canadian firm had been deposited. Four shares of Paramount stock were exchanged for every five of the Canadian firm.

Annual Convention Soon

The dividend situation is interesting. Canadian shareholders who did not turn in their stock have been notified that a quarterly dividend of 50 cents per share was payable June 9. Those who gave five shares of Canadian stock for four of Paramount-Publix are receiving the current quarterly dividend of $1 per share.

Formal announcement is expected shortly of the annual convention for managers of Famous Players houses in eastern Canada and this is to be held at Montreal, it is intimated. Last year it was at Niagara Falls when N. L. Nathanson, then managing director, telephoned from Germany, via Atlantic wireless, to instruct the managers to play up the fact that the chain of 200 theatres was Canadian owned and operated.

U. S. Scans Bill To Ban Writs in Labor Disputes

Washington—Attorney General Mitchell is studying the revised anti-injunction bill introduced by Sen. Shipstead (Minn.) following request by the Senate judiciary committee for an opinion as to its constitutionality. Labor disputes in the industry will be governed largely by the proposed law, for the injunction has been the weapon employed by theatres in preventing and combatting strikes of theatre crafts.

The committee's action in referring the bill to the attorney general means that it will get no further consideration at the present session either by the committee or by the Senate, according to Sen. Norris (Neb.), chairman of the committee. The measure was framed by Sen. Norris with Sen. Walsh (Mont.) and Sen. Blaine (Wis.).

Desertion Charge Hit In Lila Lee's Answer

Hollywood—Lila Lee did not desert her husband, James Kirkwood, as alleged in his divorce complaint, she says in her answer. She also indicated she would seek custody of their six-year-old son, James, Jr. Miss Lee was 18 when she married Kirkwood, 40, in July, 1923. They separated several weeks ago.

Arbitration Returns If Distributors Win

distributors had been able to virtually stamp out, under the arbitration system.

This has resulted in the 5-5-5 conferences to draft a new contract. As the court had held that certain exhibitors and exhibitor groups had not been represented in the contract deliberations and so could not be forced to accept the contract's arbitration provisions, the plan for the proposed new contract calls for submission of the proposed new form of agreement to all exhibitors of the United States.

Warners to Battle Paramount to End As Brothers Clear Decks for Tussle

A Bull's-eye

Only two pictures finished the year ahead of "The Lone Star Ranger," so far as Fox grosses are concerned, indicating a strong public demand for westerns. The picture, when reviewed by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, was termed fine entertainment, and the fact decried that it was denied showing in any of the Broadway de luxe houses.

700 Theatres in Warners Chain as 1,000 Goal Nears

Warners has approximately 700 theatres lined up in its drive for 1,000, with scores of deals in various sections of the country still pending. The firm has just closed for the four Parkersburg, W. Va., houses of the Smoot Enterprises chain, five at Roanoke operated by Elmer Heinz, and has deals set for the Nathan Appell upstate New York chain of a dozen houses; nine Schine Ohio theatres; and nine additional Ohio houses, the Federated circuit of ten houses, and the 25 operated by James Costen at Chicago; and six of the Midwest chain.

No set policy has been adopted in the expansion program, the company consolidating its position in territories where it operates, and then branching out into adjoining territories. The Oklahoma City deal, which is practically set, is the largest single jump into an isolated territory.

Deals for 300 additional houses are expected to be closed in 60 days.

Cohen Retires as "U" Theatres Are Sold; on His Own

Louis Cohen, for 15 months in charge of disposition of Universal theatres, has made a settlement on the unexpired nine months of his contract and proposes to operate as a free lance theatre scout from now on. There will be no successor.

With the exception of a partnership interest in the Griffith Bros. chain throughout Oklahoma and the Schine theatres throughout Ohio, Universal is practically washed up in the exhibition field, 100 properties having been sold largely through

Cohen's period of service with "U" rounds out 16 years in the theatre field beginning with Steve Lynch in the South, then swinging to Paramount when the Lynch houses went into that string, and later to West Coast and Universal.

Hidden Attacks Charged By H. M. As He Stirs Sales Force for Offensive

Warner versus Paramount in a way to the finish. At least this is the set-up so-far as Harry M. Warner is concerned.

Speaking for almost an hour at the banquet which terminated the Warner-First National convention in Atlantic City late last week, the head of the various Warner enterprises said plenty and left little doubt in the minds of those who heard him as to the identity of the unnamed company at which he directed his remarks.

"At another company's convention, the men were told not to pay any attention to what we were doing; that we were a mushroom growth and that mushrooms never last long," said Warner. "Let me tell you that our company is built on a foundation sufficient to carry any load placed upon it. I have hear the stories, inspired, that we are about to sell. My brothers and I know the reason, but this is neither the time nor the place to talk about that."

Warner Lets Loose

In innuendos very lightly veiled, Warner practically charged that hidden attacks had been launched to break down the reputation of his companies and that these were prompted by jealousy of his organization's success. By way of evidence he cited these figures:

"Ninety six pictures of other companies playing 14,112 days in our theatres last year netted us a profit of $680,000. Fifty nine of our own pictures playing to a total of 13,000 days returned a profit of $1,800,000. The other fellow is afraid he won't be able to get our pictures next year. And it is possible that he won't."

"This talk about selling out has been inspired, but let me tell you that you will never see the day when we are so disloyal to our stockholders and so cowardly to ourselves as to sell," he added to the cheers of the five hundred men present.

Intimating strongly that more expansion moves were on the way, Warner told his sales crews that, while the load they were being asked to carry was a heavy one, the Recurrent reports of a proposed deal for purchase of Paramount by Radio-Keith-Orpheum are without foundation, Adolph Zukor declared to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Reports were in circulation soon after the Paramount chief landed in New York after his European trip, stating that an offer of outright purchase of his company had been made Zukor by David Sarnoff, RCA president.

Talent Turnover at Peak Proportions; Fewer Directors Under Contract Now

Hollywood Stabilizing, But Talkers Still Cause of Considerable Chaos

By EDWIN SCHALLERT
Special West Coast Correspondent,

Hollywood—Turnover of talent in the picture colony continues at peak proportions.

More players and writers are under contract at the major studios, but fewer directors.

Hollywood is stabilized to some extent. This is shown by the fact that a larger proportion of talent remains under contract since this time last year, than for the preceding twelve months.

These salient facts are divulged by a comparison of personnel of nine leading organizations who are active in the employment of long-term contract players. Adjoining tables show the changes that have taken place in approximately one year's time. They pertain to the three leading branches of acting, directing and writing, and reveal some surprising contrasts between 1929 and 1930, the former year having been the most drastic in the changes witnessed in the history of pictures.

It was determined at that time that approximately 33 per cent additions have been made to the three leading branches of talent and that this was more than doubled by being augmented by entirely new branches, such as musical departments and dance departments. These departments are not included in the present summation.

Since the summer of 1929 only six per cent in additions have been made to the regular list of talent. That is, only that percentage more of people are under contract to the nine leading studios. But even this increase is important, since, in all, there are only 621 players, directors and writers under contract to these studios.

The turnover of talent is shown in Tables C and D captioned New Talent Engaged, and Contracts Discontinued during the past year. The turnover amounts to fully 60 per cent in each instance, which reflects a remarkable condition of upheaval, since in a single year probably the turnover in the old days would not have exceeded 30 per cent.

The steadying influence is visible in Table E. This shows 138 players, 78 directors and 65 writers remaining under contract. Last year the figures were as follows: 106 players, 56 directors, and 35 writers. This stabilization is more apparent than real, because it is partly owing to the greater number of people now regularly under contract. In actual percentage it is approximately the same as last year.

Columbia and Tiffany are not included in the totals, since they pursue a policy of hiring the majority of their people either by the picture or for a series. Tiffany reports three players under regular contract and three directors and four writers under more or less permanent contract, but their method is to engage practically all people by the picture. Columbia has 20 players, but only eight of these are under long-term contract.

Colorful Battle for Control of Pathe Expected to Reach Climax in Courts

Balto Houses Branded as Firetraps

Baltimore—Retiring grand jury criticised the exits of several local theatres, in the report given Judge Staunton in Criminal Court.

Should a fire occur in any of the theatres involved, patrons would be trapped; rear exits are really not exits because openings on blind alleys or those littered with boxes obstruct, according to the report. These houses should be closed until proper exits can be installed, it was recommended, and regulation of number of standees in back of houses was urged.

20 New Films and 3 Supplementaries On 'U' Schedule

Universal will have 23 pictures for release during the 1930-31 season. Twenty of them will be new season product, of which 17 have been selected with three more to be announced, while three others will be added attractions, not scheduled for 1929-30 release, but which have been acquired by the company and will be current during the 1930-31 season. John Boles is to appear in five pictures on the new list.

The 17 pictures of the new group of 20 are as follows: "All Quiet on the Western Front," Erich Maria Remarque's best seller, produced by Carl Laemmle, Jr., and directed by Lewis Milestone. The picture, which now is being roadshowed, features Louis Wolheim, Lewis Ayres and John Wray. Maxwell Anderson and George Abbott did adaptation and dialogue. In the cast are Slim Summerville, Raymond Griffith, Russell Gleason, William Bakewell and others.

A sequel to "All Quiet on the Western Front," which Erich Remarque is completing, will be made by the company. It will be published serially in "Collier's" this fall.

John Boles is to star in "Strictly Dishonorable," from the New York stage play. Brock Pemberton and his assistant, who produced the stage play, will aid in the picturization.

Anderson to Make Two

Two John Murray Anderson productions, designed as musical spectacles.

"Outside the Law," starring Mary Nolan, supported by Edward G. Robinson, Tod Browning, who directed the silent version which starred Priscilla Dean, will direct the new talker.

"Little Accident," by Floyd Dell and Thomas Mitchell. In the cast will be Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Anita Page, Sally Blane, Zasu Pitts, Sam Seymourville, Roscoe Karns and Myrtle Stedman. William Craft will direct.

John Boles probably will star in "Boudoir Diplomat," from the play by Rudolph Lothar and Fritz Gottwald, which will be directed by William Wyler.

Lupe Velez Starring

Lupe Velez in "East Is West," from the play by Samuel Shipman and John B. Hymer. Lewis Ayres will appear opposite.

"The Lady Surrenders" will be title of the adaptation of John Erskine's "Surrender," which John M. Stahl is to direct.

Lewis Ayres and John Wray will appear in "Saint Johnson," by W. R. Burnett. The picture will be released next fall simultaneously with publication of the book.

"Ourang," jungle film to be made in Borneo by Harry Garson, assisted by Julius Bernheim. Dorothy Janis has the feminine lead.

John Boles in "The Love Cavalier," directed by [illegible] site.

"The Gypsy Song," a Konrad Bercovici original, to star John Boles with Jeanette Loff and Lupe Velez in featured roles.

Another of the Cohens and Kelleys films, this time, "The Cohens and Kellys in Ireland," to be produced as a musical comedy with a number of sequences in color. It is expected that the original Cohens and Kellys cast will be reassembled for the picture, which will be the fifth of the series.

Remaking "Oregon Trail"

"The Oregon Trail," a talker version of the picture made as a silent by Universal some years ago, Edward Laemmle will direct.

John Boles and Lupe Velez co-starring in "Resurrection," based on Count Tolstoi's novel. Edwin Carewe, who directed the silent version, will direct the talker.

Selection of the remaining three of the new season's 20 is being kept open for the present, to determine pictures best suited to the market as time advances.

The three supplementary pictures being offered for the new season are: "Czar of Broadway," with John Wray, John Harron and Betty Compson; "Captain of the Guards," starring John Boles and Laura La Plante," and "The White Hell of Pitz Palu," made in the Alps.

Five Series Decided Upon To Date for Short Prog'm

Sixty-two one and two-reelers have been decided upon to date for Universal's 1930-31 short subjects program. These are: George Sidney and Charlie Murray in ten two-reel comedies with music. Three of these have already been completed; H. C. Witwer's "Leather Pushers," made several years ago in silent form, to be revived in ten new two-reel dialogue versions: 26 Oswald Cartoons, one-reelers; a new cartoon series of 13 one-reelers, under the title "Fanny the Mule"; another new series "Strange As It Seems," by Cartoonist John Hix, to be issued in color and sound. There will be 13 one-reelers in this series also. The Hix cartoons are syndicated to 150 newspapers of the U. S. and Canada.

The Universal Newspaper Newsreel plans expansion during the year. Fifty cameramen are to be added.

On Merit

Each of Universal's pictures in the 1930-31 group of 20 will be sold individually on its merit, states Carl Laemmle. Each of the short product units will be sold the same way, he states. This is a new departure in selling for Universal, which has revolutionized its production policy on a similar basis. The company, he says, will expend as much on production of its 1930-31 output of 20 as went into the making of 50 under the old system.

Rowland, Chairman of Protective Committee, Hopeful of Victory Monday

The struggle for control of Pathe may end in the courts.

Regardless of the outcome of the adjourned annual meeting of the company on Monday, at which time the proxy war raging for the last ten days reaches its climax, the protective committee, which is operating in opposition to the Kennedy administration intends to proceed further.

"You never can tell about stockholders' meetings," Richard A. Rowland, chairman of the protective committee, told MOTION PICTURE NEWS. "Sometimes, folks with a set idea have been known to change their minds. That may happen on Monday, but, regardless of what takes place then, we are going further in this matter. The stockholders are entitled to efficient management and we propose that they shall get it."

The other side of the story is this:

Joe Kennedy, apparently still in the picture business despite fanfares and statements of retirement, told The News that his group, headed by Elisha Walker and Jeremiah Milbank, has in the bag approximately 75 per cent of the 8,000 shares of $100 preferred stock outstanding and committed to vote his way at the meeting. The preferred, under the Pathe financial structure, elects eight of the 15 directors and, therefore, swings control of the company. Holders of common stock are entitled to three directors and preference holders four.

Entered in the tussle for places on the directorate are the following selections of the protective committee:

Richard A. Rowland, Charles R. Rogers, Walter Vincent of Wilmer & Vincent; Robert W. Daniel, president of the Liberty and National Bank and Trust Co., which is reported controlled by Setay, finance unit of which H. J. Yates is president; Mark Hyman, president of the Standard Cinema Corp.; Samuel Ungerleider, head of the New York stock exchange firm bearing his name; Frederick R. Ryan of McCombs & Ryans, attorneys; and W. V. A. Waterman, of Waterman, Bonn & Co.

The Pathe list embraces Richard C. Hunt of E. H. Rollins & Son; George Armsby of Bancamerica-Blair Corp.; Elisha Walker, chairman of the board of Transamerica Corp., and also of the Bancamerica-Blair Corp.; Lester D. Burton of Lyon, Pruyn & Co.; Frank Callahan, of Chase Securities Corp.; Jeremiah Milbank, Huntington D. Sheldon of Bancamerica-Blair Corp.; J. J. Murdock, president of Pathe; Joseph P. Kennedy, C. J. Scollard, E. B. Derr, Lewis Innerarity, Stuart Webb and Paul Fuller, the latter of Coudert Bros., Pathe lawyers.

The behind-the-scenes presence of Yates of Consolidated Film Industries, largest "lab" combine in the business, in the protective committee move is linked with reports his interest centers in the 49 per cent holding of Pathe in Pathe-Du Pont, which markets Du Pont raw stock.

Ad Men Take Own Code to Bosom, But Dope Is 'Twill Soon Be Forgotten

To Try Luck

Hollywood—Robert Harris, scenario editor at M-G-M for the past two years, has resigned to go over to Columbia as story department head. Sam Marks, imported from the East a few months ago as an "idea man," succeeds Harris as scenario head at M-G-M.

Must Buy Warner '30-'31 Films and Discs Separately

Warners' 35 pictures for 1930-31 will be sold as sound pictures only if there has been executed at the time of signing the contract, or prior thereto, a score contract with Vitaphone; otherwise the contract is to be considered as for silent pictures only. The company's decision to stick to its score charge policy was announced exclusively last week by Motion Picture News.

This means that exhibitors again next year must negotiate two contracts for Warners' sound pictures, one with Warners for the print, the other with Vitaphone for the accompanying discs.

New contracts and product for next season were outlined at the annual sales meeting of the company held last week at Atlantic City.

Four Separate Contracts

The 35 pictures, as stated by Motion Picture News, will be sold on four separate contracts as follows: (1) one Al Jolson, (2) two John Barrymores, (3) two Romberg-Hammersteins, and (4) 30 productions including 10 roadshows in addition to the pictures of the first three groups. Life of the new contract is 18 months, compared with 12 months of former contracts.

Following is a summary of the new line-up:

"Moby Dick," by Herman Melville, will have John Barrymore starring, and Joan Bennett, Hobart Bosworth, Lloyd Hughes, Walter Long, May Boley, Tom O'Brien and Nigel de Brulier supporting. Lloyd Bacon directs.

Al Jolson will star in "Big Boy," to be directed by Alan Crosland. Supporting cast includes Claudia Dell, Lloyd Hughes, Lew Harvey, George Harris, Eddie Phillips, Louise Closser Hale, John Harron and Tom Wilson.

George Arliss will appear in "Old English," John Galsworthy play. In the cast are Ivan Simpson, Betty Lawford, Reginald Sheffield, Harrison Reynolds, Leon Janney, Barry Winton, Powell York. Al. Green directs.

"Viennese Nights" is the first operetta written for Vitaphone by Oscar Hammerstein 2nd and Sigmund Romberg, Alan Crosland directing a cast embracing Alexander Gray, Vivienne Segal, Jean Hersholt, Walter Pidgeon, Louise Fazenda, Alice Day, Bert Roach, June Purcell and Milton Douglas. In Technicolor.

"Fifty Million Frenchmen," musical, entirely in Technicolor.

The Oscar Straus musical "Danube Love Song," in Technicolor.

"Nancy in Naples", based on the play, "See Naples and Die", by Elmer Rice. Cast: Irene Delroy, Charles King, Lowell Sherman, Noah Beery, Olsen & Johnson, Lotti Loder, Vivien Oakland, Lawrence Grant, Charles Judell, Elise Bartlett, Gino Corodo. Direction by Archie Mayo.

A companion to "Viennese Nights" will be "Children of Dreams", for which Oscar Hammerstein 2nd and Sigmund Romberg have written the book, lyrics and songs.

Winnie Lightner will appear in three. The first is "Life of the Party", which Roy Del Ruth will direct, in Technicolor, cast including Irene Delroy, Arthur Edmund Carew, George Bickel, Charles Butterworth, Arthur Hoyt, Jack Whiting. Second is "Sit Tight", and will have Irene Delroy and Joe E. Brown in the cast. Last of the trio is "Red Hot Sinners".

Joe E. Brown and Joan Bennett top the cast of "Maybe It's Love". James Hall, Laura Lee, George Irving, and Russ Saunders are in the cast. A feature is the inclusion of the all-American football team. It will be directed by William Wellman.

"Captain Applejtck" stage play with John Halliday, Mary Brian, Alec B. Frances, Ray Strozzi, Louise Closser Hale, Otto Hoffman, Arthur Edmund Carew, Julia Swayne Gordon, William Davidson and Claude Allister. Direction by Hobart Henley.

"Maytime", by Rida Johnson Young, with melodies by Sigmund Romberg.

Sue Carol and Grant Withers in "Dancing Sweeties", based on "Three Flights Up", by Harry Fried. Direction, Ray Enright. In the cast are Edna Murphy, Tully Marshall, Kate Price, Adamae Vaughn and Eddie Phillips.

A French play, "Matrimonial Bed", with Lilyan Tashman, Florence Eldridge, James Gleason, Beryl Mercer, Marion Byron, Vivien Oakland, Arthur Edmund Carewe and James Bradbury, Sr. Michael Curtiz will direct.

"Three Faces East", directed by Roy Del Ruth, based on the play by Anthony Paul Kelly. Cast: Constance Bennett, Eric Von Stroheim, Anthony Bushell, William Courtenay, Craufcrd Kent, Charlotte Walker, William Holden.

Vina Delmar has written an original, "Soldier's Plaything". Lotti Loder heads a cast composed of Harry Langdon, Ben Lyon, Jean Hersholt, Noah Beery, Fred Kohler, Otto Matieson, Lee Moran, Marie Astaire, and Frank Campeau. Direction, Michael Curtiz.

Claudia Dell in "River's End", first talker to be made from a James Oliver Curwood story.

"Gay Cabellero", by Stewart Edward White. George Lewis and Frank Campeau will appear in the cast.

"Outward Bound", by Sutton Vane, will have in its cast Leslie Howard, Dudley Digges, Beryl Mercer, Alison Skipworth, Dougles Fairbanks, Jr., O. P. Heggie, Helen Chandler, Lionel Watts, and Montagu Love. Direction, between Ray Enright and Robert Milton.

Roles in "Steel Highway" are assigned to James Hall, Grant Withers and Marian Nixon. Grant Withers will also appear in "Barber John's Boy", by Ben Ames Wlliams.

Faith Baldwin, novelist, is on the list with "Office Wife", which Lloyd Bacon will direct, and whose cast will be composed of Dorothy Mackaill, Lewis Stone, Joan Blondell, Dale Fuller, Hobart Bosworth, Natalie Moorehead, Blanche Federici and Walter Merrill.

Robert Hanna's play, "Husband's Privileges", wil-

"Good Taste" Requirement Left to Individual Judgment; Sales Code Next

Codification of the industry grows apace. To the producers' code now is being added an advertising and publicity code, with a salesman's code in prospect.

The advertising code is about set. In its completed form it will contain about 12 provisions, as contrasted with the approximately 30 at first proposed. Signatures of all advertising and publicity men are reported in.

The chief clause is general in its scope and gives a wide latitude in advertising. It states that signatories are to be bound not to use any copy or do any exploitation which is contrary to the canons of good taste.

No provision has been made, it is understood, as to who is to determine the matter of good taste, that being left to the individual's judgment. This phase of it precludes any worry about the matter on the part of advertising men, who decline to be disturbed over the code.

The impression prevails in several quarters that two months from today the code will be a fond memory.

Seek S.R.O. Ban

Washington—Ban on sale of S.R.O. admissions in the District of Columbia is provided for in a bill introduced by Rep. Michaelson of Illinois. Violation of the act would be punishable by fines running from $100 to $1,000, or imprisonment, or both.

burden would become greater in the near future.

Hints at One Big Company

The Warner chief who later said he had planned to talk for only a few minutes apparently felt the occasion was ripe to let himself go. Spilling additional inside facts, he said the only reason why every important company in the industry was not linked up into one gigantic organization was because of the fear that the Federal government would not permit it.

"If the government would approve such a step, take my word for it, it wouldn't be long before that came about. There is room for only three companies in the industry as it is developing today. I would rather be poor than not be one of those three.

"If the day should come for the one company plan to become fact, this is the company which will be that one," he added.

Rift with Paramount

It has been reported for some time that the Warners have been experiencing difficulties with Paramount-Publix. Several Warner and First National sales managers who refused to be directly quoted told a reporter for Motion Picture News at Atlantic City that Publix bookers had persistently bothered them with picayune affairs regarding theatre dates during important convention sessions. These men openly charged the move was deliberate in its attempt to cut into their morale.

On the inside it has been reported but never confirmed that Warners and First National have had increasing trouble with the Paramount theatre department over bookings. It is pretty much of an open secret that the W.B.-F. N. group is considerably annoyed over the turn their business relations with Paramount have taken in the last few months.

A Paramount official who declared he was present at all major convention meetings in Atlantic City and San Francisco yesterday flatly denied there was truth to the report that any statements derogatory to the Warners had been made.

"Gutter Copy" Out, Franklin Edict to Division Heads, Hitting at Ad Liars

Resume Stage Shows

San Francisco—Stage shows have been resumed at the Paramount here. They also are routed to Portland, Seattle and other Coast cities. The units are produced by Paramount Publix on the Coast.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS pointed out several weeks ago that all-talker programs are flopping in many key cities and that the return to flesh-and-blood presentations was definitely on the way.

Clean, Decent Advertising Is Essential, West Coast Head Emphasizes

Los Angeles—Cleanliness in advertising and decency in advertising thoughts was ordered for Fox West Coast Theatre houses by President Harold B. Franklin, at the convention here of division managers. Advertising, he said, is the "second most important consideration in our business," coming after the attractions presented.

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN

"Be truthful in your advertising," was his message. "Would you purposely lie to a friend? Then don't tell advertising lies to your patrons because they are your business friends."

He also ordered an anniversary week for each theatre of the circuit and the cutting down of passes, and stated that Greater Talkie Season will be held in August. Business conditions, he added, are "not good," in spite of all prosperity talk, calling upon his staff to cut expenses and prepare for hard times.

Says Expansion Is Fair

Los Angeles—"No man has suffered through the expansion of Fox West Coast," Harold B. Franklin, company president, declared at the convention of division managers here. The expansion, he said, "has been honest and fair." There is nothing of monopoly in the firm's business methods, he stated, adding that "we encourage competition because we recognize in competition a stimulus to business."

On June 17, the government's action against Fox West Coast and a long list of distributors on a conspiracy action revolving around protection and zoning goes to trial in Los Angeles.

Paramount N. Y. One Reel Subjects in Three Groups

Three subdivisions of the group of 104 one-reel subjects to be made for 1930-31 release by the Paramount New York studio have been made. They are the comedy, personality sketch and novelty units. In addition to the one-reelers, 26 two-reel subjects are to be made for the new program. Comedy is to be the keynote of the two-reel program.

Franklin Honored

San Francisco—Motion pictures have been officially recognized as one of California's basic industries. They will have a representative for the first time on the directorate of the State Chamber of Commerce, Harold B. Franklin, president of the Fox West Coast Theatres, being the new Roy Del Ruth is to direct "His Brother's Wife", "Divorce Among Friends", Under Cover", and "Just An Hour of Love", adapted from the novel "Ex-Mistress", conclude the list.

"Little Fellow" in Danger of Oblivion As Census Shows Movement to Big Cities

Decrease in Population of Villages and Towns Hurts the Small Exhibitor

Chicago—Need for a "help the little fellow" policy on the part of distributors is emphasized in the number of houses dark this year, backed up by the census report which shows that small towns are fighting against the very real threat of diminishing potential patrons.

There is danger, it is indicated by the census figures, that small town and village houses will follow the road to oblivion already traveled by a number of former rural institutions. This, of course, would eliminate some and imperil the position of other small town showmen who depend upon surrounding villages for draw. Add to this the strong competition of chains in the larger nearby towns, and the situation presented is a serious one.

In the eight states surrounding this center of population, a sharp drop in population of 60 per cent of towns counted was noted. These drops range from 5 to 100 per cent.

Films Contribute to Change

The population of the nation has increased materially since 1920, but the increase is mainly in the cities, due to the influx of rural Americans. This is attributed to motor travel, the employment situation and the broadened viewpoint of country dwellers, due to the radio and pictures.

Illinois, with the largest number reported, had 62 per cent of them showing decrease in population, Iowa and Nebraska have a slightly higher percentage of decrease, Indiana and Minnesota have 75 per cent, and Missouri, 80 per cent. One instance is cited in Illinois, where a hamlet was abandoned and auctioned off as a deserted village.

Lexington 'Indie' Firm to Continue To Stand by Guns

Determining that the Phoenix Amusement Co., Lexington, Ky., will stay in business, Mrs. Annabelle Ward, assistant managing director of the firm's three Lexington houses, left New York Thursday for her home city. Satisfactory settlement of the grievances which brought her to New York are understood to have been ironed out at conferences with Sidney R. Kent, Sam Katz and C. C. Pettijohn.

The Phoenix firm, it is understood, experienced difficulty in securing product, due to a Publix-operated theatre at Lexington. Proposal to sell or to buy the Publix house brought Mrs. Ward to New York. With Radio-Keith-Orpheum also seeking to buy the Phoenix houses, Mrs. Ward and associates have decided to stay in business.

Consolidated's "Safety First" Plants in Work

Hollywood—Construction of a series of new laboratories for Consolidated Film Industries, which will concentrate on "safety first" methods, in order to reduce to a minimum the dangers inseparable from the handling of film in large quantities, is under way here. Insurance and governmental authorities were presented with copies of plans for suggestions to eliminate fire hazard.

Charge Showmen With Squawking To Get Bargains

Squawks of exhibitors over poor business are due to their alleged desire "to present their current position and outlook in the very worst light" for trading purposes in buying new season's product, Standard Statistics, New York business analysis firm, asserts. Exhibitors, the company would have you believe, purposely encourage a slump for trading purposes.

However, the company admits that a general survey shows that attendance at picture houses in many cities of less than 150,000 population, particularly in the agricultural states of the Middle West, is considerably below a seasonal normal. No further decline should be anticipated, it is said. Depression is only slightly below normal for this off-season, it is stated.

"The general feeling, even on the part of the exhibitors, is that as soon as the fall crop movement begins, present conditions will be corrected and an optimistic feeling concerning the outlook for next autumn is quite apparent," the company states.

Constance Bennett's Operation a Surprise

Hollywood—Constance Bennett is reported recovering at a local hospital from a "surprise" operation. She had postponed the operation several weeks so it wouldn't interfere with her picture work.

Morhange in New York

Marcel H. Morhange, J. H. Hoffberg Co.'s South American representative, has arrived in New York. During his stay purchases of pictures will be made for independent distributors in the South American markets.

50 Closings in Phila. Zone Due To Poor Trade

Philadelphia—High rentals without adjustments, increased overhead, general business conditions and lack of quality product are cited here as reasons for the epidemic of small town theatre closings. About 50 houses of the territory are dark, with the number increasing rather than decreasing.

Council Panned Over Emrich's Hays Payments

Federal Council of Churches is again put on the spot and severely trounced by "The Churchman," national Protestant Episcopal organ, because of the acceptance of "expense money" by Mrs. J. Emrich from the Hays organization for delivering speeches plugging the film industry while she was a paid employee of the Council.

The publication questions the ethics of the Council and flays it for "so lightly" dismissing "such practices as those indulged in" by Mrs. Emrich, who is charged with accepting "expense money" for "using her influence to promote the movie industry."

Results Don't Please; "U" Orders Retakes on Nolan

Hollywood—After Ernst Laemmle had finished direction of "What Men Want" for Universal, company officials decided the picture would be materially strengthened by remakes of several sequences. Unlike the usual procedure in retakes, Laemmle was assigned to direct the new scenes.

"What Men Want" was started with Mary Nolan starred, but it is reported Laemmle could not handle her and that she walked out after a few days' shooting, with Pauline Starke substituting in the lead.

Arrogance, Path to "Damnation," Kent Declares, Stressing Duty of Chains

Dallas Fans' Likes

Dallas—Results of the Daily News poll among picture fans show that:

Eighty-four out of 100 want vaudeville.

Fifty-eight out of 100 want screen drama in preference to stage drama.

Ninety-two out of every 100 want a human orchestra.

Conrad Nagel and Clive Brook are the favorite actors.

Ruth Chatterton and Norma Shearer are the favorite actresses.

The average Dallasite goes to the theatre about twice a week.

Seventy-one out of every 100 thinks the stage musical show has the screen musical show beaten.

"Rio Rita" was voted the year's best screen attraction, with "Sarah and Son" and "Anna Christie" coming next.

Paid Valentino Funeral Expense, Ullman States

Hollywood—When Rudolph Valentino died his estate was not large enough to cover the funeral expenses of the film sheik, S. George Ullman, his manager, testified here before Superior Court Judge Albert Stephens. Ullman is under suspension as executor of the estate pending the hearing of charges of mismanagement filed by a brother and sister of the late star. They allege that he made unwise loans, causing a loss of about $100,000. The hearing was postponed until June 20.

"When Valentino died in New York in August, 1926, he owed much money and had as assets only his personal effects," Ullman declared. "I personally paid the expense of bringing his body here and the funeral costs.

"I used every effort to keep from the public knowledge of the unfortunate financial condition that Valentino was in when he died."

In defense of one charge that he had made a poorly secured loan of $40,000, Ullman asserted that it was made at the request of Valentino's sister, Maria Strada. Her brother, Alberto Gugliemli, is co-plaintiff with her in the case.

Otterson Joining Ross For German Conferences

Although German circles continue skeptical regarding "peace" in the sound patents "war," J. E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, is sailing Friday for Europe in connection with the situation. Upon his return last week, Adolph Zukor stated that he believed an amicable settlement would be effected and that the German group would meet with W. E. and RCA Photophone representatives in June. C. J. Ross, executive vice-president of RCA Photophone, now is in Europe.

Warning Sounded On Chain Abuse Of Buying Power

Washington—The chain operator cannot with "safety and justice use his great buying power to the disadvantage of distributors and exhibitors," writes Sidney Kent in the initial issue of "The Allied Exhibitor," house organ of Allied States Ass'n.

"Any selfish abuse of this power will redound to the detriment of the chains in that it will affect the income of distribution and in turn imperil the quality of production," he writes. "This is from a purely selfish standpoint, quite aside from the matter of injustice to the smaller exhibitor.

"Thirdly, the small, independent exhibitor must face the fact that with the coming of sound pictures this business has undergone a radical change. With this change has come also a change in the small man's situation. It is the obligation of big chain operators and distributors to help the small man just as much as possible, but the small exhibitor has got to face the fact that some of these questions have been raised by the natural development of business circumstances which nobody in this business could control.

Should Get Together

"I think it is fairly apparent to everybody in this industry that the logic of business developments in this industry in the last two years makes it imperative that all sides try to get together and work out their problems in a business-like manner. Speaking as a distributor, I know that distribution has been confronted by questions in the correct solution of which we need the help not only of the big chain operator but also of the exhibitor who owns only one or two small theatres. The chain operator, on the other hand, cannot with safety and justice use his great buying power to the disadvantage of distributors and smaller exhibitors."

Says Circuit Operation Can Be Made Dangerous If Not Tolerant

Hollywood—Chain theatre operation can be made dangerous, "unless we through the personality, the friendliness, the willingness to work in community betterment of our representative—our theatre manager—is manifest in that community," S. R. Kent, vice president and general manager, told division executives of Fox West Coast Theatres, at their convention here.

SIDNEY R. KENT

"Today," Kent said, "it is dangerous to pull up any old and well-set roots in any community unless we put back the fresh roots of our own personality."

"Be awake to your opportunity and your peril," was his injunction to the convention delegates. "Humanize your company, your circuit, through yourself. Be a pleasant power in your city, be alive to the opportunity to serve. Let your neighbors judge the fairness of your company by your own fairness. Be a well loved and useful citizen—and your company will gain prestige in that community.

Must Avert Arrogance

"As we grow, we of circuit operation," he continued, "the temptation of arrogance grows with us. This is a grave mistake. Let us be humble. Let us be grateful and thankful. Never can we be too kind or too thoughtful, because in this lies our salvation—in arrogance lies our damnation.

"Use your power wisely. Because you are big, you must be tolerant. Never forget to be a gentleman for the morale of your organization depends upon your morality.

Avert Arrogance

"The talkies have made this a business of style. The producers do know the taste and pulse of your community. They must know it better than you do, because they must make the pictures to build for your success.

"The advantage is off on sound pictures. They are no longer a novelty. Now we must go back to the essentials of showmanship, now we must intelligently and thoroughly merchandise our programs."

Clarke Week to Be Put Over by Fox Force in Sept.

Sales force of Fox has set aside the week of September 7-13 as Clarke Week, as a gesture to Harley L. Clarke, new president of the company.

FoxConventioners Trek Home with Sales Fodder

Kansas City—When the Fox convention special, running as a section of the eastbound California Limited, reached here Tuesday night, copies of Motion Picture News, carrying the Fox product announcement, were distributed to the homeward-bound conventioneers The stunt made a decided hit.

Jim O'Loghlin, Canadian sales manager, celebrated his wedding anniversary while attending the convention. Naturally Mrs. O'Loghlin was at home but she wired her condolences.

A silver service set was presented to James R. Grainger at the concluding sales meeting Friday afternoon with appreciation from the gang. Roger Ferri was remembered at the same time with a Hamilton wrist watch upon his promotion to coast headquarters.

Statistics

Hollywood — Here's Roger Ferri's estimate of the consuming proclivities of a Fox convention: Enough

Fish to feed the Scandinavian army.

Beef to feed all the natives of Nicaragua for two months.

Butter to grease all the cars turned out by Ford in a month.

Bread to fill up the Grand Canyon.

Cigars and cigarettes to smoke out the African jungle.

Playing cards to sink a battleship.

Chips to outnumber all the marks in Germany.

Franklin Ditches Old Contract and Signs for 5 Years

Hollywood—With 20 months to go on his old contract, Harold B. Franklin has signed a new five-year contract as president and general manager of Fox West Coast Theatres. He has been president of the circuit for the last two years, during which he has directed operation and expansion of the chain.

Franklin's first theatrical job was with Sullivan, Harrison & Woods, when he was but 15 years of age. After being graduated from college, he became manager of a house. Later, he was booking manager for a vaudeville circuit of 40 houses, then organized and operated stock companies in and around New York. Becoming interested in pictures, he became manager of Shea's Hippodrome at Buffalo, where he attracted national attention. He left that post to become operating head of Paramount's chain, from which he resigned to accept his present position.

Attorney Who Figured In Fox Case Is Cited

Stanley M. Lazarus, attorney for a minority stockholder in receivership action against the Celotex Co., has been cited to the New York Bar Association, by Assistant Attorney General Watson Washburn. The stockholder, David Adler, testified that Lazarus had purchased 50 shares of Celotex stock for him before filing the suit. Lazarus brought a receivership action during the false difficulty, for which he is said to have been paid $25,000 to settle.

75 Grand in Prizes on Fox Sales for New Year

Another $75,000 is to be awarded by Fox Films for outstanding individual and exchange performance during the 1930-31 season. Of the amount, $12,000 will go to the home office executive staff.

The Fox Force Looks for the "Birdie"

Hollywood—Obeying the photographer's instructions on the lawns of the Ambassador, the Fox sales crew is "shot" to prove to the wives at home that there really was a convention. The favored few occupying the seats are, left to right: Harry F. Campbell, Glen Allvine, Pat Flaherty; Chris Buckley, Albany exhibitor; Jimmy Grainger, Joe Johnson, John Nolan, Jack Sichelman, Bill Kupper and Clyde Eckhardt.

Tiffany to List 26 to 36 at Meet June 23 at "Chi"

Between 26 and 36 pictures which are to comprise the new season's line-up will be announced at the company convention, June 23, 24 and 25, at Chicago. It is the last of the national sales conventions. Under terms of its five year franchise, Tiffany is to release a minimum of 26 pictures.

Building for Warners

Warners plan a new building at its Brooklyn studio to house its newly-created industrial and commercial, and a department for Brunswick research work and recording. The company also is planning a new wing to its New York headquarters. The new industrial and commercial department is headed by A. Pam Blumenthal of the Stanley Advertising Co., which is to be the nucleus of the new department.

Gus Hill to Produce Two

Gus Hill, who has disposed of four series of short cartoons, will make two feature talkers for State Rights distribution.

Reported Warner Buy Cancelling Coston Bookings?

Chicago—Between 15 and 20 theatres are reported to have cancelled booking arrangements with the Coston Booking Circuit during the last several weeks. Reasons advanced by several independents who formerly subscribed to the Coston service are primarily wariness over reports of the sale to Warner of theatres of the Coston circuit which, they feel, may leave them out on a limb if and when such sale is consummated. Others professed minor dissatisfactions over past bookings. The Coston office, until recently, has been booking about 68 houses.

Hoffman All Set with Plans for Liberty

Practically concluding all arrangements for the launching of Liberty Prod., M. H. Hoffman returns to Hollywood shortly to commence work on the first of a series of 20 to be made under a new process which gives wide film effect with 35 mm. stock.

Eddie Kleine will have charge of Eastern distribution activities, which are expected to develop into a five-year franchise plan for territorial exchanges buying Liberty product.

Victor Halperin is vice-president, and his brother, Edward, is secretary. H. M. Gumbin, a newcomer in films, becomes treasurer.

Questionnaire Also Designed to Eliminate Demands for Censorship

Bringing back the kids and removal of alleged causes of criticism by organizations habitually demanding censorship is the object of a survey being made by the Hays organization via Film Boards of Trade. Exhibitors are being called upon to answer a questionnaire as to their part in the work.

The questionnaire asks data on kid matinees, whether special selections of pictures are made and, if so, what type of films are selected. It also asks whether any complaints have been received from parents or any organization on the type of films shown children and asks the exhibitor to specify the nature of the complaints. Information on family nights also is solicited, as well as suggestions from the exhibitor as to what kind of films are best suited to children and what kind to both adults and children.

Universal Weekly to Suspend Publication

After 17 years of continuous publication, "Universal Weekly" will be suspended next week with Vol. 31, No. 20. Universal officials state that the growth of circuit buying and the elimination of the small exhibitor are responsible for the move and that company house organs of the kind have outlived their usefulness. Its yearly cost is reputed to have been $50,000.

Gertrude Warburton had active charge as managing editor, with Paul Gulick's name on the flag as editor. The "Weekly" broadcast news about forthcoming "U" productions and box-office records of released pictures. Miss Warburton's plans for future activities are unknown.

Jack Warner Receives Emblem from U. of S. C.

Hollywood—In recognition of his services to the University of southern California, J. L. Warner, vice-president of Warners, will be awarded a diamond emblem by the university at its fiftieth anniversary celebration. Film Industry in All of Europe At a Standstill Except U. K., Gov't Says

Continental Leaders Believe Multilinguals a Necessity For Amortization

Washington. — Legislative difficulties, patent litigations, credit stringencies and a caution resulting from the uncertainties of sound are blamed by the United States Government for checkmating the progress of the film industry in all countries of Europe except Grat Britain.

This official disclosure was arrived at following the third annual survey of European picture conditions made by the Dept. of Commerce, M. P. Bureau.

In practically every country of Europe, sound films have been presented and most communities give evidence of sound duplicating the degree of popularity attained in the United States.

Unprepared for Sound in '29

Europe found itself confronted during 1929 with great difficulties in assimilating sound, the report states. The silent film had not ceased to provide satisfactory entertainment, and a change was consequently unnecessary for economic purposes. In fact, sufficient headway had been made in silent films during 1928 to inspire European producers to proceed during 1929 with plans for greater stability and a more even level of production. However, the suddenness with which sound succeeded in the United States threw the European picture business into an unsettled condition from which it was only beginning to emerge at the end of 1929. The report continues:

Feature production decreased considerably under the record figures of 1928; new theatre construction lagged and was not so systematic as in the immediate preceding years progress in the wiring of theatres for the reproduction of sound films was disappointing; legislation unfavorable to foreign interests further hampered film trade, because of both the general effect of the Franco-American controversy on quota and the growing European appreciation that existing measures tending to restrict film imports are not efficacious now that the sound film is a factor.

Sound, the Future Entertainment

One outstanding feature of the European situation was the readiness with which British film organizations grasped the significance of the sound film as their possibility of achieving a leading place in the industry, after a distinctly unsuccessful 1928 season, when an overproduction of silent features was quite sud-

Reports in Detail to Appear in NEWS

Detailed reports of the Department of Commerce on trade conditions in Europe will appear, country by country, in Motion Picture News beginning next week.

The analyses give a real insight into the trend of the continental trade and turn the spotlight of exhaustive investigation on the American industry's most important overseas markets.

Bryson Warns on Wide Film

London—"I can see the handwriting on the wall: We are going through another revolution during the next six months or a year—and that will be—wide screen," stated James V. Bryson upon his return from a visit in New York and Hollywood in connection with the new Universal program.

"The Hays organization and Western Electric are moving heaven and earth to keep back the coming of wide screen as long as possible—realizing what it will mean to the smaller theatres," according to Bryson.

Percentage and Guarantee New F. N. Sales Policy

Guarantee and percentage only is the policy under which the 35 features on the 1930-31 First National program will be sold. In some instances, where the company is satisfied that it will be protected for the period, five-year franchises will be sold. The year's program is known as the Prosperity Group.

First National's regional sales convention started last Sunday at New York. They will continue this Sunday at Chicago, where a two-day gathering will be held. Other regional meetings are scheduled at San Francisco, June 14 and 15, and at New Orleans June 21 and 22.

The regional meetings follows the annual sales convention held last week at Atlantic City where Ned E. Depinet, general sales manager, outlined the new product, major portion of which was outlined exclusively May 24 by Motion Picture News.

He was assisted by his first lieutenants, A. W. Smith, Jr., eastern and Canadian sales manager; Gradwell L. Sears, western sales manager; S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, and A. W. Schwalberg, sales and contract department.

The new season's product is divided into two groups, the 15 de luxe attractions and 20 specials. They are:

The De Luxe Attractions

"Sunny," starring Marilyn Miller, an adaptation of the musical comedy star's stage vehicle, which will mark her second appearance on the screen.

"Adios," starring Richard Barthelmess. Frank Lloyd will direct. The second Barthelmess subject has not yet been chosen.

"Kismet," starring Otis Skinner, from the famous stage play in which he starred.

"The Bad Man," an adaptation of the stage play in which Holbrook Blinn starred. Walter Huston heads the cast, which includes Dorothy Bevier, Sidney Blackmar, James Rennie, O. P. Heggie, Marion Byron and Guinn Williams.

"The Honor of the Family," starring Walter Huston.

"Bright Lights," with Dorothy Mackaill and Noah Beary as the leads. All color.

"The Girl of the Golden West," with Ann Harding and James Rennie. From the play written and produced by David Belasco.

"Toast of the Legion," an adaptation of "Mlle. Modiste," by Victor Herbert, with Bernice Claire and Walter Pidgeon featured. All color.

"Mother's Cry," based on Helen Grace Carlisle's novel.

"Top Speed," with Joe E. Brown, Bernice Claire and Jack Whiting, from the musical comedy success.

"Woman Hungry," featuring Lila Lee, Fred Kohler and Sidney Blackmer. All color.

"Captain Blood," Rafael Sabatini's novel, to be directed by Frank Lloyd.

"The Right of Way," based on Sir Gilbert Parker's novel. Conrad Nagel, Loretta Young and Fred Kohler are in the cast. Frank Lloyd directed.

The List of Specials

"Numbered Man," with cast including Conrad Nagel, Bernice Claire and Ralph Ince.

"Broadminded," with Fred Kohler, James Rennie and others.

"Little Caesar," in which Edward G. Robinson heads the cast.

"Father's Son," by Booth Tarkington. Leon Janney, juvenile actor, in cast.

"The Gorilla," with Joe Frisco in screen version of the play.

"The Reckless Hour," based on Willa Cather's novel, "The Lost Lady."

"The Hot Heiress," an original by Fields, Rogers and Hart.

"The Lady Who Dared," with Billie Dove and Conway Tearle.

"The Way of All Men," with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Dorothy Revier and Noah Beery.

"The Truth About Youth," with Loretta Young and Conway Tearle.

"One Night at Susie's," starring Billie Dove, with Louise Closser Hale in support.

"The Road to Paradise," with Loretta Young, Jack Mulhall and Raymond Hatton.

"Deep Purple," adapted from the play of that name.

"Broken Dishes," with Loretta Young and Grant Withers featured.

"Going Wild," taken from "Going Up," stage comedy, with Joe E. Brown in lead.

"Queen of Main Street," from Juliette Wilbur Tompkins' novel, with Lila Lee and Ben Lyon.

"College Lovers," a football story.

"The Naughty Flirt," starring Alice White.

"The Widow from Chicago," with Alice White, Neil Hamilton and Edward G. Robinson.

"Scarlet Pages," with Elsie Ferguson and Marion Nixon.

Stop, Look and Listen Pow-Wow In Music Field

To create an open forum of the music publishing business, a meeting has been called in New York June 10. Papers on a number of subjects will be read and discussed. There is no attempt at concerted action in tackling the matters under discussion, the purpose being only to interchange ideas, it is said, in view of "the rumors and counter-rumors" now prevalent.

Subjects to be discussed include: Overproduction of music; adequate and economic methods of distribution; the effect of the mechanical invasion on the sheet music sale; the general conditions of business which have led magazine publishers and book publishers to radically readjust their business, and other similar matters.

denly faced with a greatly restricted outlet as first and second-run cinemas were demanding sound films.

Another feature was the strong indication that the dissimilarity in the respective tastes generally of the American and continental markets for the sound film, particularly concerning the language question was gradually being overcome. Continental film leaders are now of the opinion that not only is the sound film the entertainment of the future, but that the multilingual feature, for export purposes, is a necessity to amortization of production costs.

Production Suffered

Under conditions existing during the year, it was natural that feature production in Europe would suffer materially. Primarily, Europe lacked money for experimental purposes; its producers were compelled to await definite signs of public approval of the sound film before launching into any serious production schedule, and its exhibitors felt the necessity of biding their time before purchasing at great expense equipment for the reproduction of sound films until such time as a definite film supply was obtainable. As a result, European production fell from 521 features in 1928 to 412 features in 1929, drop of 21 per cent, while production costs declined from $24,260,000 in 1928 to $15,135,500 last year, a decrease of approximately 38 per cent.

Many films were produced during 1929 with both silent and sound versions, and, in the latter case, to a lesser extent reproduced multilingually. This obviously makes an exact determination of production cost impossible.

The table below, based on reports from Department of Commerce offices in Europe, lists by countries the number of feature films produced during 1929, together with the estimated production cost, as compared with 1928. It will be seen that European production continues to center in Germany, France, and Great Britain. It is believed that the output of the other countries had very little, if any, first-run success outside of their country of origin.

Theatre Construction

A gradual disappearance of the preponderant small-size cinemas was evident during the year, with their places being taken by considerably fewer but larger houses in localities capable of supporting such houses. These were constructed purposely with a view to the exhibition of sound films, hence more intensive consideration was given to acoustics than heretofore.

It is impossible to state in detail the changes in cinema construction during the year. Accurate statistics have never been available and no records seem to be kept systematically of houses eliminated entirely from business, enlarged for purposes of better commercial possibilities, or converted to cinemas from other types.

The following table gives the estimated number of new cinemas constructed. While only a relatively small decrease is revealed for 1929, it must be borne in mind that this was due chiefly to the favorable British situation, where cinema changes were hastened on account of the popularity of the sound film. The Continental state of affairs was not nearly so encouraging.

Market for American Films

Aside from the innumerable petty problems involved in the distribution of films, censorship, music rights, and patent litigation, the chief problems of the American film industry in Europe were the language barriers and legislation inimical to the film importer. The latter problem is probably the more important, inasmuch as it is impossible to foresee market conditions when these indefinite restrictions remain, just as it is extremely hazardous to make financial investments in an attempt to strengthen demand for motion pictures. In some instances, it is felt that existing film restrictions have been invoked in order to compel, or at least attract, American investments in local film units. In any event, American investments in Europe on film projects, especially on the Continent, are a hazard so long as the film quota or contingent system, with its susceptibility of alteration to the needs of local industry remains a factor.

There is very little doubt in the minds of

Language the Chief American Film Barrier

European film leaders that the United States will eventually be able to furnish enough satisfactory sound films for European exhibition, though the question of production cost of foreign-language films in its relation to possible yield induces the thought that America will be unable to compete with European production. This, however, resolves itself into a matter of bookkeeping and experiment. Attractive playdates will continue gradually to expand, and as new distribution policies attended by reduced overhead expenses enter into the situation, these should contribute to profit in the continental market.

It seems to be an accepted fact that little progress can be made in the immediate future in the small European markets, on account of the language difficulty. In the past, these markets have offered only small markets, at best, for American feature films. Now, it appears that the few wired cinemas in these countries will provide more lucrative returns for sound films than previously was the case with silent features, provided that sound films are offered (a) in the country's second language; (b) as synchronized with sound effects without dialogue, or (c) with a little foreign dialogue and domestic subtitles superimposed on the film.

The question of the so-called "medium" markets, which are in themselves desirable, but which for the time being do not appear to be able to support talking films in their own language, is quite serious. They appear already to be tiring of films in foreign dialogue and are clamoring for a change.

While it is too early to prepare a guide covering present-day distribution, in view of indefinite plans of the various world production centers, the following division of countries by types of film that serve the best purpose is submitted:

Group I, which can be supplied with films in one of the leading languages (English, Spanish, German and French) are Great Britain, Germany, France, Belgium (French), Switzerland (French and German), Spain, and Austria (German).

Group II, whose territory is too small for economic production of films in the domestic language and where the exhibition of films in the second language is risky, are Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Italy, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland.

Group III, small countries where films should be released in the second language (indicated in parentheses) that are merely sound synchronized or have native titles superimposed on the screen, are the Netherlands (German), Portugal (Spanish), Turkey (French), Greece (French), Bulgaria (French or German), Rumania (French), Yugoslavia (German), the Baltic States (German), and Finland (German).

Language Barrier Difficult

In the above consideration the second language was picked from the four languages that seem to be preferred in the production of multilingual films. It should be borne in mind, however, that, in some instances, the second language, though readily understood, is unpopular on account of national sentiment.

Specifically, the outstanding obstacles of the American trade during 1929 were the patent litigation in Germany and the six-month recess in sales activities in France on account of the Franco-American film quota controversy. Both of these instances caused unfavorable indirect reactions in other channels.

Patent litigation occurred in several different countries, but without serious effect or annoyance to the American trade except in the case of Germany. There the German sound film interests secured a court injunction against the use of American reproducing equipment alleged to infringe German basic patents, and later obtained a court decision sustaining the original petition, which, pending an appeal to the higher court, seems to preclude the possibility, barring an arrangement outside the courts, of the installation of adequate American sound film equipment in German theatres.

This situation caused reverberations in othee directions. German cinema owners became hesitant about wiring their houses in view of the closed doors to American equipment; and the apparent necessity of purchasing German-made equipment or none at all failed to hurry them, since there was a great lack of sound films on the market and most of the American producers were refusing to release their sound films for reproduction on German-made apparatus. Negotiations are now under way between the respective electrical companies involved for a settlement out of court.

In the Franco-American dispute, American subsidiary companies in France found it necessary to suspend sales operations from the 1st of April to the early part of September because the French Government proposed to raise the existing film quota from 7 to 1 to 3 to 1 after October 1. As a consequence, American business dropped very considerably from the 1928 volume.

Sound Films

Although slow in starting, the principal European producing countries (Great Britain, Germany and France) show, even in their present small output, a standard in sound films which compares very favorably with their former production of silent films. The first issues, naturally, were very crude, but subsequent features indicated an ability to overcome technical faults previously apparent. Although much depends on the development of directing technique, it is believed that European producers' sound films with dialogue will more nearly suit popular tastes of European audiences than their silent films did. Unquestionably, the idiomatic expressions and subtle humor contained in the dialogue of domestically made European feature films will be more appealing to the cinema-going public than those of foreign manufacture.

It is evident that the European market for recording equipment was limited during the year to three major systems, two American and the Tobis-Klangfilm of Germany. All other recorders appeared to be inadequate.

The high cost of these instruments has necessarily retarded their sales in Europe, yet at the end of 1929, 22 different European studios were wired for the recording of sound films and 48 recording sets were employed. Of these, 25 were American manufacture, as shown by the following table:

EUROPEAN MOTION-PICTURE STUDIOS EQUIPPED FOR RECORDING SOUND

[As of Dec. 31, 1929]

Country	Studios wired	American recorders	Foreign recorders	Total recorders
Great Britain	10	14	6	20
France	5	9	9	18

Spain	1	..	1	1
Denmark	1	..	1	1
Poland	1	1	..	1
Austria	1	..	1	1
Total	22	25	23	48

In addition, there are in Europe several sound-equipped trucks that are used for location work. Some of these are of American manufacture. Some American production companies have their own sound trucks in Europe engaged in "shooting" sound newsreels.

The European market is overcrowded with different types of apparatus for the reproduction of sound films. The majority of these, however, may be classified as distinctly inferior and will not be able to stand the heavy competition of the few leading types. Lack of servicing alone will limit their market, and many installations of this inferior type will have to be scrapped in favor of more substantial systems. It cannot be denied that the present sales prices of the leading makes are altogether too high for the numerous small cinema proprietors, and consequently these exhibitors will be obliged to disappear from the trade within a year or two unless the cost of the leading types of reproducers is reduced or satisfactory small equipments within their purchasing power become available.

Available statistics show that 1,670 European theatres were wired for the reproduction of sound films as of December 31, 1929 of these, 936 involved American apparatus, and 734 foreign. The following table describes this situation by countries:

Changes in Legislation

The sound film seems to have dislocated the basis of most of the serious European legislative restrictions on film imports. Though the British films act seems adjustable to new conditions, continental regulations are not. Either the countries involved found it very difficult to turn out sufficient product to maintain their quotas, or, where a particular law or regulation restricts imports, insufficient foreign films were available to meet domestic demand. Yet changes during 1929 were inconsequential.

Great Britain is entering upon the third year of its film control as prescribed in the law.

Germany, unable to cope with the present state of affairs, decided to maintain its status quo as an experiment, but with the reservation that, if necessary, special provisions would be issued in connection with the importation of sound films.

After negotiations extending over six months, already mentioned, France extended the ratio of seven imported films to one French film until October 1, 1930, with a possibility of a further extension of one year.

Hungary instituted a change in its decree, which, in addition to a slightly larger tax for merchandising by film importers, also affects the short sound film.

Austria widened its film quota just before the new year to permit of some additional licenses for necessary features for exhibitor demand.

The liberal regulations of Italy continued without change, though the government did issue an order banning the exhibition of sound films with songs and dialogue in a foreign tongue. The prohibition relating to songs has since been lifted.

The entertainment tax scale continues in Poland to the extent of practically destroying the market for foreign films. Increased taxation on amusements and a special censor tax of two lei per meter further depressed the Rumanian situation.

The Portugese regulation prohibiting the use of foreign languages in titles is understood also to become effective as regards dialogue in foreign languages, although no cinemas were wired for the reproduction of sound films during the year.

From the American point of view, continued success in Europe, while affairs are being adjusted to new conditions, would seem to depend on the continuance of the British appreciation of American sound films, a sufficient supply of sound films adaptable to the ready continental market, the clarification of the patent litigation which has practically closed the German market to our product, the materialization of the plans of leading American sound equipment manufacturing companies in the wiring of European cinemas, the gradual liberalization of European quota restrictions, and the normal growth of fair-sized cinemas.

Outlook Difficult to State

In view of the rapidity of change in the industry, it is quite impossible to indulge in detailed prophecy for 1930. Intensive research being made in technical developments foreshadows great progress, particularly in the production and servicing of sound recording and reproducing equipment. The rationalization of the European industry obviously requires both the elimination of the weaker production companies and the addition of adequate cinemas in key cities. The coming of sound films has, of course, complicated the entire European situation, but with energetic European efforts being made to attract new capital and effect important mergers, there seems every prospect that this new development will prove helpful rather than harmful to European interests.

It is naturally supposed that the future movement of American films will be considerably smaller than during the silent days, since fewer units of American output will be adaptable to European tastes and since also playdates will be very much fewer through the small number of wired theatres, together with the extended runs of sound films in first and second-run houses that are wired. This smaller movement will, however, greatly reduce the number of films that have formerly been merchandized in Europe without profit.

In the matter of restrictive legislation, of which the American trade is the chief object, it appears probable that this will continue in several countries as a protection to the local industry, although there are signs of increasingly strong protests on the part of the public, as well as the exhibitors.

Viewing the outlook as a whole, 1930 gives promise of raising the film business to a new peak of prosperity in Europe. The year will not be without many problems and difficulties, but its general effect should be one of distinct advancement. From the American standpoint, Europe should prove to be a distinctly better, though a highly competitive, market.

Ontario Censors Hit "Lady Lies," "Hello, Sister"

Toronto—The Ontario Censor Board didn't think "Hello, Sister" (Sono Art-World Wide) was nice enough to appear before the public, and before approval was granted drastic changes had to be made. Then it took such a dislike to Paramount's "The Lady Lies" that it turned it down definitely, although it has been passed by the Quebec Board. "Evangeline," likewise, got the axe in Eastern Canada, despite the fact that it received an official O. K. in British Columbia.

Gilbert, Tully to Mix It Again; This Time in Film

Hollywood—M-G-M has apparently purchased the picture rights to the sequel of the now-famous John Gilbert-Jim Tully battle, but will use the scenes to good advantage in Gilbert's next talker, "Way of a Sailor."

Although the script probably calls for Gilbert to emerge from the encounter as the conquering hero, there is still a good chance that Tully will mix things up too strenuously with Gilbert getting dropped for a long count. Both battlers are now said to be friends, but Gilbert can never forget his Brown Derby defeat by One Punch Tully.

French Aviator to Make Talker on Ocean Flight

Paris—Dieudonne Coste plans a talking picture of his proposed flight to New York in June. The film will be called "Paris-New York." THE STUDIO SLEUTH

They say Quaint

THE wise word around Hollywood this week was to the effect that before the end of the current year the whole industry, in so far as the executive end is concerned, will be reorganized to a point where the Hollywood production plants are nothing more nor less than "branch factories."

One sentient film exec, giving his opinion, said: "They've been working from the bottom up. Starting with the extras, then going to the bit people, then to the featured players and now to the stars, payroll economies have been effected. The studio chiefs are good at that, with their years of experience, but now they're going to feel the retrenchment program themselves. While the title will remain, pretty soon there'll be no such thing in fact as a producer. Those who carry the title will become nothing more nor less than superintendents, carrying on the production work for the New York money interests the same as any superintendent of a branch factory in other lines of business."

The New York interests are reported to be considering this their final coup in transforming an enterprise into a methodical business of rationalized returns. They are said to feel that the former type of producer, who operated as a mogul, is an unnecessary middleman, and one whose office gave him too ready an access to dipping into the profits. Under the new system, they are declared to believe, the outlets for income leaks can be stopped at their beginnings, as there will be no general sweep of authority. The balance sheets will go in for auditing and an immediate questioning on all dubious items as regularly as a salesman's expense account.

With the change, it is expected the present crop of producers will be gradually let go, and new ones will be shipped out from the New York picture offices.—Inside Facts, Los Angeles.

THE man Hollywood needs is an expert diagnostician who knows the public mind. The influence of the movie was never better illustrated than by a recent incident cited by Mr. Will Hays: "In one of our great cities," he said, "there was a theatre strike. The theatres were closed. It was necessary for the well-being of the city that a place of amusement and relaxation be provided for that vast citizenry. And so the theatres were opened." He adds, justly, that in one generation the motion picture has become a public necessity. Attendance at moving pictures last year increased by fifteen million a week.

ONE of the romances which makes a 1930 bride of a prominent Hollywood star, had a strange beginning. She and her husband-to-be announced their engagement more than a year ago, when an old sweetheart of the girl's was returning to Hollywood. The rejected suitor has a bad reputation, and the girl, who had suffered much through him, was afraid she might still be susceptible to his charms, so she immediately cooked up an engagement with one of the flicker colony's juveniles.

She was in the habit of consuming considerable liquor, and he drank not at all, so as the pseudo engagement progressed, she turned a new leaf and started taking orange juice and ginger ale, plain. She was careless about her appearance, usually, but through his suggestion and advice, she became well groomed and more attractive than she had looked in years.

The old sweetheart remained in town for a long time, and as the young lovers maintained their masquerade, they grew to depend on each other's company and enjoyed being together. Then the discarded one departed on a foreign trip, but the pair learned, to their surprise, that they had really fallen in love with each other. that — Quips Lifted and Sifted

THERE was a time in the past when bookings were made on basis of confidence. Exhibitors paid top prices, expecting an adjustment when results proved that these figures were too high.

Now, the situation is exactly the opposite. One exchange manager recently received a two-page telegram in which he was advised that if any adjustments were requested to be approved by the home office they would be accepted as evidence that the manager was not competent to conduct the exchange. Wording was diplomatic, but essence of the telegram was as above.

Truthfully, it places the branch managers, who know their territories, much in the same position as office boys.

Sales managers, spurred on by the bankers in control of the film companies, are sacrificing more than they can gain. While they show no adjustments on their balance sheets, likewise they have no rentals from houses which might have remained open if a more sensible brand of business policy were shown. A certain New York writer who has one of those lucrative Hollywood contracts will get screen credit for the dialogue on a certain production destined for Broadway showing in the near future. He's one of those wise New Yorkers who went out to the Coast just to show the movie makers what was wrong with the industry, when as a matter of fact all he and some of his brethren have done is to increase production costs and add to the burdens of directors. He turned in what was a pretty poor script on a story intended for one of the he-man featured players.

Long-winded dissertations and soliloquies which might be all right in a footlights pastoral, cluttered up dialogue and held up the action. But you couldn't tell the imported writer his paper wasn't perfect. He'd arrive at the studio hours late and the director would be tearing his hair as he tried to wade through the typewritten junk. "Come, let's do something with this stuff," he pleaded to the writer, who would benevolently respond, "You don't know it, but I've been working for you all morning; I've been sending out good thoughts about you." Which, as any director will tell you, is no excuse to hand in to the powers-that-be when the box office grosses flop.

And twenty-four hours before the film was to be photographed the director went home, rewrote the entire script and shot it according to his own ideas. None of the original palaver remained and preview reports have it that the talkie is a knockout. The writer has his hands open already waiting for the bouquets.—N. Y. Graphic.

IT IS BY NO MEANS certain that Hollywood will retain her unchallenged monopoly in the film industry of the nations. At the present moment she queens it in greater splendor than ever. Her sound films are believed in some quarters to threaten the very existence of the living theatre. They have already drawn to the Coast much of the vocal acting talent of Broadway. But the signs of a reaction are at hand.

The talkie seems destined to restrict if not quite to break up the unity of mankind established by the movie. The silent film is the most universal single interest ever evolved by the race, more comprehensive, when measured by range and mass, than any one religion, empire, language in history.

Now the universal brotherhood of the [illegible] is menaced by the advent of the sound film. The story of Babel comes all true again.

Seidelman Makes Changes In Para. Foreign Staff

J. H. Seidelman of the Paramount Publix foreign department has returned from Europe, where he presided at the convention in Paris of company representatives from all European countries. The meeting was attended by Adolph Zukor, John Cecil Graham of London, general foreign representative, and I. Blumenthal of Berlin, general manager for Germany and Central Europe. New releasing programs were outlined for each country, consisting of suitable American pictures supplemented by the local language productions to be made in the company's Paris studios now in operation.

The following changes in the personnel of the European organizations were announced by Mr. Seidelman in line with the plans for increased distribution and exploitation of foreign language Paramount pictures:

Gus J. Schaefer, formerly general sales manager for Central Europe, appointed general manager of distribution for Continental Europe, with headquarters in Paris.

David Souhami, formerly general manager of the Italian organization, becomes general manager for France, Belgium, Switzerland and Egypt, succeeding A. Osso, resigned, with headquarters in Paris.

A. Aboaf, formerly manager of distribution for Italy, is appointed general manager for Italy, with headquarters at Rome.

E. J. Lipow, formerly special representative for Poland and the Baltics, becomes district manager for Austria, Poland and the Baltics, with headquarters at Vienna.

A. Ullmann, formerly manager of the Paramount theatre in Paris, is appointed general manager of all Paramount theatres in France and Belgium, with headquarters in Paris.

Producers Turning More To Originals, Says Smith

Hollywood—The original story, as a source of supply for the screen, is in the ascendant, in the opinion of Wallace Smith, novelist. Picture plays are derived from stage plays, novels, or published stories chiefly, but there has been a tendency of late to give more recognition to the original screen plot, declares Smith.

Examples of recent hits on the screen that were of writing for it," in the opinion of Smith. Public Demands Orchestra Return, Says Union Head

The public is tiring of mechanical music and will demand the return of orchestras to picture houses, Joseph N. Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians, predicted this week. Sound pictures will not wane in popularity, he said, but are developing better tastes in music, he added.

"The trend toward mechanization of the art appears to have suffered a setback," Mr. Weber said. "By that I do not mean that talking and sound pictures are losing their popularity, but rather that millions are becoming articulate in their demand for real music in addition to screen entertainment.

Union Continues Opposition

"Our union will continue the struggle against the substitution of mechanical music for real music with confidence in the eventual outcome. We are not opposing industrial progress. We are not even opposing mechanical music except where it is used as a profiteering instrument for artistic debasement. Workers have often suffered defeat in fighting the machine. This is a different sort of fight. The usual function of the machine is to enhance the value of a product, while the machine we are opposing debases a product."

Unemployment among musicians, due to the advent of talkers, is still acute, according to the union president, but he predicted that this will be alleviated to some extent by the adoption next year of mixed picture-vaudeville programs. He said that the Music Defense League, sponsored by the union, now has 2,500,000 members. The Federation is to open its annual convention in Boston next Monday.

Meloton Closes Deal for Sound-on-Film Attachmen

Berlin—An agreement was reached recently between Kinoton-Vertriebsgesellschaft and Nitzsche A. G., manufacturer of the Nitzsche sound-on-disc apparatus, Meloton. Meloton sets will be supplied to German theatres seating up to 350, and in cities up to 5,000 inhabitants, with 500 seats, with Kinoton amplifiers (special construction for sound-film projection purposes).

U Buys "Bullet Proof"

"Bullet Proof," a forthcoming novel by W. R. Burnett, has been acquired by Universal as a vehicle for John Wray. It is a gangster story.

Cooneys Form Hammond Firm

Indianapolis—Calumet Theatre Corp. of Hammond has been formed here with 1,000 shares of no par common. John J. Benjamin and Cornelius Cooney are on the company's board of directors.

Beck Back; at Tiffany

Hollywood — Arthur Beck, former producer-director of Leah Baird features released by Pathe, has been added to the Tiffany group of production supervisors.

Snores?

Bellingham, Wash.—In its announcement of the wiring of the Dream Theatre here the Morning Herald ran the following headline:

DREAM GETS SOUND

Lightner-Brown Expected To Continue as W. B. Team

Hollywood—Warner Bros. will produce a sequel to "Hold Everything" under the title of "Set Right." Story is an original by the scenario staff and calls for co-featured billing of Winnie Lightner and Joe E. Brown.

The Lightner-Brown comedy team may become a fixture on the Warner schedule with three or four pictures from them yearly.

Zierler Appoints Meyer As G. M. of Cruze Prod.

Hollywood — Art Meyer has been appointed general sales manager of James Cruze Prod. by Samuel Zierler.

Previous to joining the James Cruze organization, about a year ago, Meyer was editor and publisher of the Motion Picture Bulletin, local trade paper.

Guarantee on Percentage Booking Dropped Abroad

London—Wardour Films has dropped the guarantee feature of percentage contracts. Exhibitors, generally, have been protesting against guarantees. The big circuits, according to Arthur Dent, managing director of the company, do not pay the guarantees, so it is unfair to exact them from the smaller exhibitors. The acid test, he says, is the picture, hence guarantees are unnecessary.

Lunnon in Tough Fix Over Film Shortage

London—Exhibitors here are in a quandary for product, a shortage having resulted from the quota law, which, this year, has advanced, automatically, to 50 British features.

Only 40 domestic pictures, suitable for showing at the first run West End houses will be available.

Novarro in "Daybreak"; Straus to Musicalize

Los Angeles—An early Novarro talker will be Arthur Schnitzer's "Daybreak," for which Oscar Straus will write all music. M-G-M has assigned adaptation to Frances Marion, but the directorial assignment will not be made for at least three weeks.

Daphne Joins Sennett

Hollywood—Daphne Pollard returns to the talking screen again in the Educational-Mack Sennett talking comedy, "Goodby Legs." She is featured with Nick Stuart, Andy Clyde and Ann Christy.

Akron House Closed

Akron, O.—Max Federhar, owner of the Regent, Cameo, Waldorf and People's theatres, has closed the People's for an indefinite period.

Tampa Ministers Can't Agree on Midnight Shows

Tampa, Fla.—It all started with the introduction of a resolution at the bi-monthly meeting of the Tampa Ministers Assn. condemning Saturday midnight shows. No sooner had the resolution been introduced than several opposed it as they felt the impression would prevail that they were not opposed to the regular Sunday performances but only to the two hours following midnight.

Addresses had been made condemning the midnight shows for the reason that they kept the people out so late they would not get up Sunday morning and attend services and Sunday school. The discussion brought out the fact that several were in favor of going after the whole Sunday lineup, but the movies had a real friend in Dr. Willis G. Clark, rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal church, who, though strong for the discontinuance of the midnight shows, said he was not so much concerned about regular Sunday performances as it was better for people to be in the picture shows "than drinking liquor and tearing around in automobiles." There was so much discussion that no decision was reached at this meeting and it will be taken up at the next.

Milwaukee Legit Theatre Swings to 1st Run Films

Milwaukee—Control of the Davidson, local legitimate theatre, has been assumed by the Boston Store, owners of the property. Sherman Brown, for 40 years connected with the theatre, has relinquished management. Financial difficulties and failure to meet rentals, are given as the reason for the change.

The theatre will be conducted by L. K. Brin, and actively managed by Henry Goldenberg. "White Cargo" is playing now on for an indefinite run and, if business is good, several other pictures will be in the next several weeks.

Temporary sound equipment has been installed and the house will be closed this summer to allow the installation of permanent equipment. Road shows and road show pictures will be the policy during the fall and winter season, according to Goldenberg.

Writ to Block Theatre Fails

Mansfield, O.—Work on rebuilding the Madison, recently destroyed by fire, is expected to get under way at an early date, following victory of the Memorial Building Co. in the court action brought by Ben Schwartz, head of Empire Amusement Co. Schwartz sought to prevent rebuilding of the house, charging the proceedings of the building company were illegal.

Ellenville Stays "Blue"

Ellenville, N. Y.—This town is not to have Sunday shows during the summer season, despite action of the town board in modifying Sunday closing laws. The Shadowland was closed Sunday upon insistence of a group of local women that the "blue" law be enforced.

The Story of a "Mug"

"Take a tail and grow a dog on it.

"That was always one of my childhood ambitions, but at last I can see something similar to that happen, if not that itself.

"Hollywood is taking its foreign voices and growing bodies on them, which is just as great a miracle.

"For a long time foreign actors have been finding their only means of expression in strutting in night clubs where English is taboo.

"Then the voices oozed out like specters, disembodied, searching for a resting place. Often they came to rest in uncomfortable English-speaking bodies and gave the body the power to speak a strange tongue, and thus we had synchronized foreign versions.

"But the voices wandered from place to place, singing and chanting their native tongues from across the threshold through the medium of the different actors.

"But finally—and here's the tragedy—the voices returned home and their own bodies got onto the screen. And every one wished he'd stayed away, because they'd been so long afield that they didn't even resemble themselves. And while the voice may be beautiful, the face is just another mug."

Spain Going Slow With Sound Owing to Dialogue

Washington—Spain has made less progress than any other leading Continental market in assimilating sound, according to a report to the Dept. of Commerce M. P. Bureau by Trade Commissioner George Canty in Paris.

Canty's report points out that this is particularly reflected in the low number of cinemas that have been wired—38 as of Mar. 15, of which about 20 may be said to be of the "bootleg" type that will possibly be scrapped when competition increases. This situation can not be ascribed to any stringency of money or credits in Spain nor to a lack of interest in sound. It is rather due to the uncertainty of the dialect when Spanish all-dialogue films come on the market in number sufficient to meet wired cinema demand. Thus, whereas other Continental countries at present complain of a lack of dialogue films in the native tongue, thus retarding sound installations, Spanish exhibitors are further crippled in their attempts to meet public demand by the belief that films in Spanish dialect, such as those likely to be turned out in America, will meet with certain failure in Spain.

Sundays for Smithtown

Smithtown, L. I.—St. James, King's Park and Smithtown henceforth are to have Sunday shows under an ordinance passed by the town board, over protests of local ministers. Petitions signed by 700 taxpayers were presented to the board, asking a chance in the law.

Dickinson Adds Another

Marceline, Mo.—Glen W. Dickinson Enterprises of Kansas City has leased the new Cantwell here. The house is not yet completed. The name of the theatre has been changed to the Dickinson.

Sunday Shows Gaining Ground In Iowa Towns

Des Moines — Although meeting with stubborn resistance in some sectors, Sundays shows are continuing their successes throughout Iowa.

After fighting the issue for two years, Montezuma elected a mayor who campaigned on Sunday pictures; Lenox voted in favor of Sunday shows after rejecting them in March and Fontanelle and Guthrie Center have dropped the "Sour Sabbath."

In a majority of towns which are swinging to Sunday shows the installation of sound equipment is proving the determining factor. Merchants, convinced that sound pictures are essential to keep people in town on Sundays, are backing moves for Sunday shows.

At Bloomfield, Ia., H. E. Rehfield is prepared to fight charges of violating the "blue" law. Last January, an injunction prevented a vote on proposed liberalizing of the Sabbath.

Local Censorship Looms For Theatres in Madison

Madison, Wis.—Despite protests by local theatre managers and Henry Staab, executive secretary of the M.P.T.O. of Wisconsin, the city council license committee favors a censorship ordinance.

The proposed measure would create a Madison theatre commission made up of five aldermen and five citizens, appointed by the mayor. This commission would have the power to recommend that the council revoke the license of theatres showing offending pictures. The committee would be empowered to act beginning July 1, 1930.

The ordinance would further provide that each theatre be obliged to submit on the first and fifteenth of each months, a schedule of tentative bookings for the ensuing two weeks. All that is now necessary is for the city council to adopt the recommendation.

Another Goes Sound

Cincinnati—The Hyde Park, suburban, has reopened after remodeling and installation of sound equipment. Reopening was made a gala event, with Hyde Park Business Club in charge of celebration. Charles Weigel is owner and manager.

Gores in Auto Game

Hollywood—The Gore Brothers, original organizers of West Coast circuit with Sol Lesser and others, have invaded the automobile business on a large scale. They have organized their own company and acquired Southern California distribution of the new Austin car, which makes its appearance on the market within the next month.

Historic House Passes

Winnipeg—One of the pioneer theatres of western Canada, the National, is in the hands of the wreckers and an office building is to go up on the site. The house was a popular one in its day under the management of M. J. Williamson.

Stucky Socking Sunday Shows; Scorns Sanity

Dover, O.—The mayor of this town, W. R. Stucky, is a whole army of righteousness in himself when it comes to closing picture houses on Sunday, but, like other reformers, he has no scruples about the legality of his actions or the weapons he uses.

When he ordered the chief of police, William E. Byers, to throw tear gas bombs into the Bexley theatre, the chief promptly resigned. The city electrician likewise refused to cut the wires supplying the current for the house. Both pleaded that such measures would result in a panic. Thereupon the mayor ordered the theatre closed and caused the arrest of William E. Burton, manager; Martha Joyce, ticket seller Oscar Allman, ticket taker; Glenn Hiller, usher, and Robert Blackenhorn, assistant manager.

Burton refused to stop the show when so ordered by Acting Chief Frank Javens. The operators, locked in the projection booth, refused the raiders admittance until they forced open the door. The prisoners were taken to jail and held for the grand jury.

This is another outbreak against Sunday shows which has occurred sporadically during the past eight years. The Bexley and Pike opened Sunday shows about six weeks ago. Managers of both houses stated they would carry the issue to the state courts. Two years ago an effort was made to operate picture houses on Sunday. P. V. Groh, then mayor, closed them under the blue laws. The county grand jury threw out his charges, but the theatres did not reopen on Sundays.

Newspaper Denounces Act

The mayor's action aroused the indignation of the Columbus Dispatch which made the following editorial comment:

"On the face of things, it looks very much as if the mayor of Dover, Ohio, has made a spectacle of himself in his single-handed war on Sunday motion pictures in his town. His scheme to resort to gas bombs and the cutting of electric wiring to stop a performance in a picture show was as wild and woolly as anything seen upon the screen of that iniquitous place, we'll wager.

"Fortunately, there were some cooler heads among the town officials. The police chief threw down his badge and resigned, rather than adopt such theatrical tactics, and the electrician balked at cutting the power wires and throwing the theatre into darkness. Neither had any desire to create what might have been a disastrous panic, merely to aid the mayor's moral crusade.

"The mayor now snaps his fingers at the county's grand jury, which has refused to indict the managers of picture theatres for Sunday performances, and announces that, regardless of any action by that body, he will stop all future Sunday shows.

"The failure of grand juries to indict in these Sunday theatre cases and the widespread patronage of the theatres on that day would seem to indicate that it is the desire of the majority of the community that such entertainment be permitted. The Dover mayor failed to defend successfully a recently enacted ordinance, which he sponsored, against a referendum move made by the theatre managers, and this referendum now is relied upon to furnish a true reflection of the community's sentiment in the matter.

"No community should bow humbly to the will of small, despotic groups or individuals in matters involving mooted moral questions, of which Sunday movies is one. Where doubt exists concerning community sentiment, there certainly should be a referendum.

The Booster

Ottawa—Joe Franklin, of B. F. Keith's, objected so emphatically and so often in daily newspapers and otherwise regarding lack of civic advertising that a number of illuminated signs are now being placed on highways and tourist information offices have been opened in other cities.

Pacent Launches Twelve New Reproducer Models

Pacent Reproducer Corp. has put on the market a complete new line of reproducer systems and had broadened its price scope. This ranges from $995 to $12,500 for synchronous equipment, with non-synchronous being offered for as low as $380.

Among the new sound-on-film models is the type VSPF double projector, for $1,995. While it has all the features of Pacent's larger models, it is designed for houses of 500 or less. A new feature is the Pacent tone color control to compensate for acoustical differences in auditoriums. Eleven other models are announced.

New Virginia Company

Appalachia, Va.—The Appalachia Amusement Corp. has been chartered with authorized maximum capital stock of $10,000. Officers, directors and incorporators are: R. W. Holley, president; H. H. Hull, vice-president, and J. F. Richmond, secretary-treasurer, all of Appalachia. The purposes of the corporation, as set forth in the charter papers, are to establish, maintain, operate, manage and control a theatre or theatres, a place or places of amusement and to present various attractions, including dramatic, operatic, theatrical performances, vaudeville, motion pictures, talking pictures and intellectual and instructive entertainments.

"Father's Son" to Beaudine

Hollywood—William Beaudine will direct "Father's Son" for First National, with Leon Janney featured. The picture is a talker remake of "Boy o' Mine," a silent production made several years ago, which Beaudine directed.

Old Theatre Passes On

Pawtucket—The Star, one of the oldest theatres in Rhode Island, which once was a Masonic Temple, has bowed to the march of progress and soon will be dismantled.

First German Review

Berlin—Ufa is preparing the first German sound review. German film, stage and vaudeville names will be seen and heard. The musical supervision will probably be in the hands of Rudolf Nelson.

Syracuse Exhibs Fight Daylight; Victory Assured

Syracuse—As a result of a heavy barrage engineered by theatre owners and their friends, there is little likelihood of daylight saving time being adopted here. Hundreds of complaints against advance time have been registered during the past few days with the aldermen, and as a result one alderman, at least, has announced that he will abide by the requests of his constituents and vote against daylight saving. Theatre owners of the city have played a prominent part in the campaign and if they are successful in defeating the proposed daylight saving it will mean thousands of dollars additional in the way of receipts during the coming summer.

A. M. Shows Out

Tampa, Fla.—With the change of policy from three-a-week to full-week stands, the Strand advanced its opening hour to 11 A. M., with a special price for the early show, but the public failed to take advantage of the cheaper price in sufficient numbers to make it profitable. So after two weeks' trial the house went back to the 1 P. M. opening, with the exception of Saturdays.

F. & M. Ideas in Pantages

Hollywood—When the new Pantages opened on June 4, it presented a special Fanchon and Marco Idea, featuring the Sunkist Beauties as aerialists. Slim Martin, Fanchon and Marco musical director, will m. c. the Ideas in the new house.

RKO Switches "Railroad" Title

Hollywood—"Record Run" is the title under which Radio will release the railroad yarn previously called "The Stalwart" and later "The Railroad Man." Having finished scenes in Montana, the company is en route to Chicago for additional shots.

To Test Ontario Operators

Toronto—Operators throughout Ontario have been notified to prepare for examinations provided for in a law recently passed. All operators must pass the test, regardless of experience.

Van Praag Back

M. Van Praag, former sales manager of Universal, has returned to New York after an eight weeks' rest and expects to announce new plans in a few days.

Fire Destroys Pastime

Albany—Fire last week destroyed the Pastime at Granville, N. Y., with a loss of $30,000. Just how the fire started is not known.

CONSTRUCTION TRENDS

On a plot large enough to accommodate a 4,000 seat theatre, Michael Mindlin has erected a 436 seat house in Newark, N. J. What he did with the rest of the ground makes an interesting yarn, crammed full of ideas for showmen who are on the hunt for novelty.

The Pantages in Hollywood threw open its doors on Wednesday night. How the impending battle in wide film will be met at this new house is graphically described.

The originality of the German artisan is strikingly revealed in a startling theatre in Berlin known as the Titania. A breath-taker, the pictorial study in this issue of THE SHOWMAN must not be missed.

CARPETING ECONOMY

Some things the showman probably doesn't know, but should. There are short cuts to carpeting economy and several of them are analyzed in a specially prepared article by an expert who knows.

The decoraitons of the foyer are black with red background. The triangles alternate in red and silver, the ceiling is silver and the couches, jade green.

NEWARK—With enough land at his disposal on which to construct a 4,000-seat theatre, Michael Mindlin limited the capacity of the Playhouse, recently opened on Broad Street, to 436 and devoted the remainder of the 22,000 square feet of floor area to features usually associated with a social and recreational center.

The new house has a ballroom, ping pong courts, billiard room, indoor golf room, two lounges where coffee and cigarettes are served free, a card and game room, and a foyer which can be converted into an art gallery. In addition to these, he has set apart a room measuring 200 square feet which he expects to employ as a television studio for the reception of broadcasts over this medium, when and if it becomes practical for theatre use.

From top to bottom, the Playhouse is visually and decoratively original. It is cast in the bizarre restraint of advanced modernistic design.

Noise Penetration Prevented

The auditorium occupies an area of 6,874 square feet for its seating capacity of 436. In construction, it represents an effort to obtain the best possible reproduction of sound. When the sound leaves the loudspeaker backstage, it is projected upward toward the ceiling, so constructed as to resemble a rectangular megaphone. This has the effect of distributing the sound evenly throughout the theatre, and it is claimed that those in the front rows hear the sound no louder than patrons seated in the rear.

On either side of the auditorium, arched columns have been constructed parallel with the walls. This arrangement makes the aisles on both sides tunnel-shaped, and to a great extent prevents the penetration of noise caused by patrons going to their seats or leaving the theatre. This is declared to be an innovation in sound theatre construction.

The decoration of this part of the Playhouse is also unique. The walls and the ceilings have been left in their original plaster-white color. This permits the use of a "colorama" which can "paint" the interior in any color the occasion may require. By mixing the various colored lights, it is possible to obtain about 15 different shade effects. The floor is carpeted in black, and the chairs are in black and silver, with spring cushion seats and backs. Provision has also been made for larger-than-regular size pictures. The screen is normally 20 by 25 feet, but can be enlarged to an area of 40 by 35 feet.

Main Lounge Rectangular

The main lounge, which forms the entrance to the auditorium, occupies 2,800 square feet of space and is rectangular. This is the most impressive part of the theatre and sets the motif for the remaining play rooms. Colorful, soft-cushioned chairs and couches, a jet black marble bar for the serving of coffee, and a corner bookcase and writing desk are features. The silver ceiling is divided into three units in order to preserve an intimate atmosphere. Lighting fixtures are in chrome and aluminum to match the decoration of the ceiling. Instead of the carpet being of one piece, it has been cut into odd shapes, various colors blending and "blue-noting" with one another.

The carpet, however, is not merely decorative. It serves the peculiar function of forming a directional line into the auditorium and also the ballroom. Thus, by following a black strip of carpet from the entrance, a patron will find himself at the doors of the auditorium. Leaving the auditorium, and following the black line again, he will arrive at the ballroom. The color scheme of the lounge is turkey red, blue, silver and black.

The other end of the lounge. The soda bar is black, trimmed with silver. The stools have black legs, red leather seats and chromium trimmings.

Another slant on the social aspect of the Playhouse. The billiard room, where audiences may drop in before or after the performance.

The ballroom, just off the main lounge, covers 1,500 square feet. The dance floor, sunk one foot below the promenade which surrounds it, is large enough to accommodate 50 couples, and is finished in ebony black, relieved by a red strip at the base. Beginning as deep lavender above the silver baseboard, the color of the walls graduate into an orchid pink at the ceiling. Couches of royal purple satin are built into the four corners of the walls. Music is obtained from concealed loudspeakers connected to a junior model of Orchestraphone.

On the main floor also is situated the ping pong room, where four regulation tournament tables are installed. On either side of this room are galleries capable of holding about 150 spectators. Almost alongside is the proposed television room, which is now awaiting completion as a minature theatre.

A Neutral Effect

The mezzanine floor houses the sections devoted to billiards, indoor golf and bridge. In the billiard room, equipped with two tables, utility rather than effect has been the object of the decorations. Imported French salubra wall-paper has been employed to give a neutral effect. The drapes are green and yellow, reflected light creating that mellow atmosphere essential in billiards.

Adjoining this is the indoor golf room, furnished with two putting greens and a mechanical golf course. Here an effort was made to simulate the outdoors. Consequently green is the predominant color. The lower half of the walls is in green monk's cloth, and the upper part in blue. The ceiling is white, with drapes in green, blue and tan mixture. Besides the putting greens and the mechanical game, vari-colored awning chairs and outdoor benches of pine complete the decorations.

In the card room, also located on the mezzanine, there are eight tables, seating 32 people. Here the decorators have sought a gayer mood. Again silver has been used for the ceiling, while the walls are entirely in red. The chairs and tables are of solid tubular aluminum, covered in red leather.

In outfitting the Playhouse, much use has been made of chrome and aluminum. Not only are all of the lighting fixtures made of these metals, but also radiator covers, chairs, tables, couches and clothes racks. In contrast, with the severity of line resulting from their use, the decorators have surrounded them with the most extravagant colors as can be noted from the foregoing.

The policy of the Playhouse is American talking pictures only. Mindlin has reached no definite decision as to whether to present first or second runs, although both have been shown. It is his belief that the theatre offers so many diversions besides pictures, that the matter of run is not important. The house operates on a grind policy from 11 A.M. to 11 P.M. The price scale is slightly higher than at other Newark theatres where no vaudeville is presented.

Since the opening of the Playhouse, Mindlin has had plans drawn for additional features to include in his social center picture theatre. These include a radio broadcast station, a Tom Thumb golf course, a tea room, a circulating library and special rooms where women's clubs of Newark and the suburbs can hold regular meetings.

The radio station, already assigned the letter WNJ by the Radio Commission, will operate on a wave-length of 207 millimeters and 1,450 kilocycles. It will be situated on the mezzanine lounge and will be glass enclosed so that patrons of the theatre may be able to see artists during the broadcasts.

The roof of the theatre will house the Tom Thumb golf course, which is reported to be meeting with success as an individual attraction throughout the country. It will contain nine holes and will be free to patrons at all times.

Tea Room and Library

The tea room and library have been a consideration since before the opening of the theatre, but due to many obstacles encountered during construction these were temporarily neglected. The tea room will be situated in a room midway between the entrance and the television room. Light luncheon will be served. This is the only feature of the house where patrons will be expected to pay. The circulating library, in the main lounge, will be under the supervision of a librarian. Patrons will be permitted to borrow books without charge.

Two rooms, at present unused, will comprise the clubrooms for women. No charge will be made for their use, although all members will be expected to pay the prevailing scale at the box-office before being permitted to enter.

The decorations were designed to "lead" the patron into the mood of the entertainment. The lobby, in red, silver, black and gold tiles, acts as a bizarre "come-on." But on going into the entrance lobby, which is really the patron's first view of the interior of the house, an attempt has been made to induce restfulness. Grey is here the predominating color, with the ceiling in a glowing yellow and silver and black trim for the doors. The carpet, while following the concepts of crazy-quilt modern art, is never obtrusive and always in the mood of the surroundings.

The entrance hall is really a continuation of the entrance lobby. Here the effect of restfulness was also desired, but it had to be a step-up from the preceding lobby. Consequently green became the motivating color. Starting at the baseboard, which is dark green, the walls were divided into three distinct sections, each separated by a stripe of chromium metal. The lower panel was done in apple green, the center panel a slightly lighter green, and the top panel and the ceiling were accentuated in yellow.

In the foyer, leading directly from the entrance hall, the patron is given his first introduction to the gay mood. Reaching the entire height of the theatre building which is two stories its decorations include large gobs of red and silver, worked into triangles, rectangles and other geometric designs, creating a startling effect after the modesty of the preceding passages.

Besides the two lounges already described, still a third one is located on the mezzanine floor. This is the ladies' lounge. French wall paper reflects the purpose of this room. Against a delicate tan background, there are figures of women at the seashore, lounging in the sun, playing golf. These figures are in vivid tones of orange, blue and green. The furnishings, taking a cue from the wall paper, are in tan. Couches and tubular chairs are covered in materials to match. Carpet is grey, with vivid red borders. Mirrors with gunmetal glass reflecting borders, consoles of chromium and black glass, and original-designed lighting fixtures complete the surroundings.

"Social Cinema"

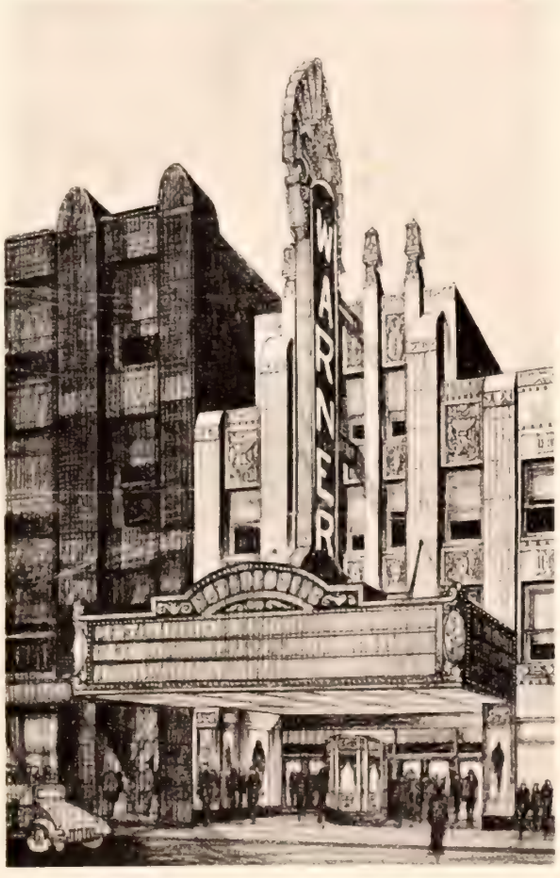
Mindlin's latest theatre is a logical development of the ideas which he embodied in the construction and design of the little cinema playhouse which he formerly operated. Tracing the inception of the idea, it will be found that on taking over the Fifth Avenue Playhouse in New York in 1926, he included a lounge where coffee and cigarettes were served to patrons without charge.

Later, in the St. George Playhouse in Brooklyn and the Chicago Playhouse on Michigan Boulevard in Chicago, he expanded the idea to include the exhibition of valuable books, paintings and sculptures.

The Little Carnegie Playhouse on 57th Street, adjacent to Carnegie Hall in New York again showed an expansion of the "social-cinema" idea. Here, in addition to the things which he had done previously, he added a small ballroom, a ping pong court and a card and game room.

The golf room where an effort was made to simulate the outdoors. Green is the dominant color motif.

Another view of the lounge. This is the desk end, decorated like the rest of the theatre with modernistic furniture.



The ladies' lounge. Note the distinctive flavor to the wallpaper and the charm of the modernistic lamps and mirrors.

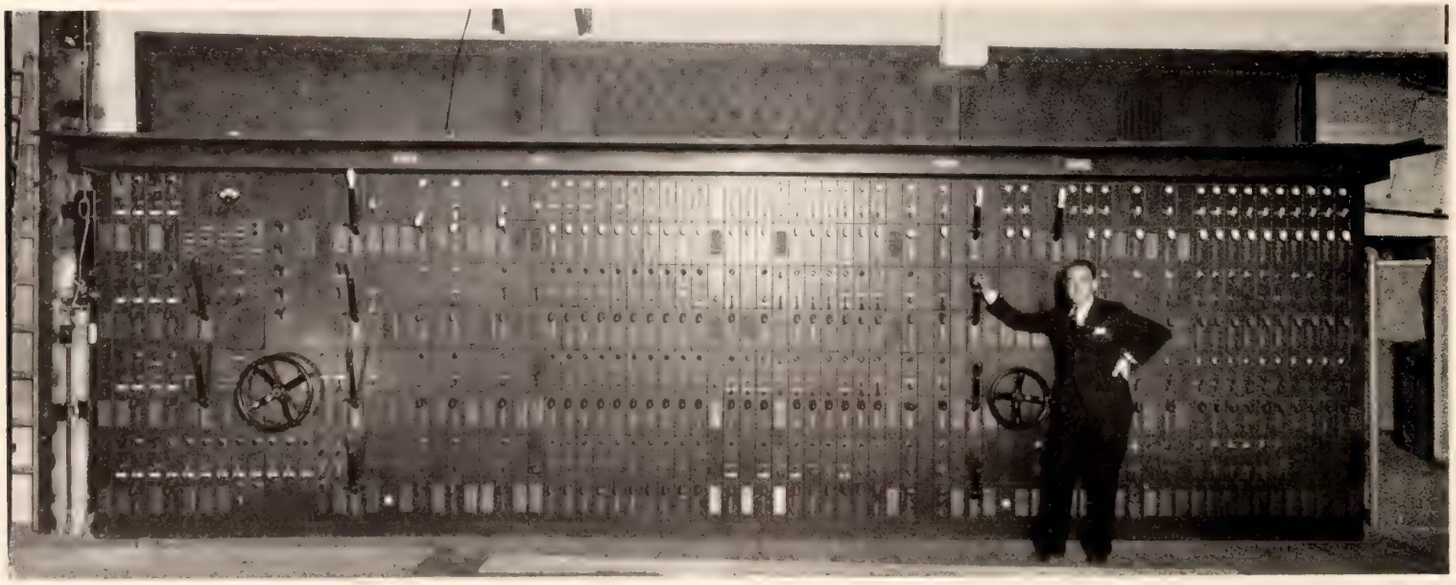
Hollywood Boulevard gets a new temple devoted to motion pictures. Drawing of the new Pantages theatre.

A House Built For Wide Films

HOLLYWOOD—Architectural trend of the future in preparation for the wide-screen-large picture development is demonstrated in the new Pantages which Wednesday was opened by Lloyd and Rodney Pantages and Fox West Coast Theatres. The house, which was erected by Alexander Pantages, has a capacity of 3,000, cost $1,250,000 and was designed by B. Marcus Priteca.

This new wrinkle in theatre construction is evidenced by the low rear balcony, height of which permits full vision of the screen at any point. The downstairs rear seats also have full view of the Grandeur screen. The width eliminates the need of distance from the stage in the seating arrangement.

Both the exterior and interior carry out the modernistic trend in a complete but subdued manner. The color scheme inside is mainly in black, gold, silver and henna, while the outside is done in white concrete trimmed with gold covered iron grills. The outside measurements of the theatre show it to be 250 feet long, 150 feet wide and 120 feet from cellar to roof.



The vestibule is done in red Levanto marble trimmed with Roseil. The ticket booth has three windows and is of gold and silver metal work with a marble base. The grand lobby's walls and pillars are of modern design and of contrasting colors. On either side is a wide staircase and on each side of these staircases are stone statues depicting achievements of modern science, aviation and talking pictures.

Off the grand lobby are the lounges and rest rooms. The wide foyer has a ceiling done in mural paintings of the modernistic trend. As in the grand lobby, the ceiling is of acoustical plaster. In the auditorium, the main floor of which seats 2,000, the walls and ceiling are of acoustical plaster, a special substance which cuts down the sound reverberations to a minimum degree. The walls of the auditorium are of modern design and coloring.

Eight Panels in Stage Curtain

The main stage curtain is done in eight panels, each adorned by a mural painting. Each painting shows the development of architecture in countries of both eastern and western hemispheres. At either side of the stage is a smaller stage which can be utilized if necessary. At the top of the proscenium arch are three murals ornately done.

The ceiling is sky blue and beneath it is a suspended false ceiling which leaves only small portions of the upper part showing through. Special lighting effects have been installed in this ceiling. The candelabra which weighs over 3½ tons is of aluminum and glass and is the largest in any western theatre. Blinker star lights have been placed in the ceiling and cloud effect machines also help to give an open sky effect as seen through the openings of the suspended ceiling. The orchestra pit is operated by hydraulic lifts and can be slid onto the stage if so desired. It will accommodate 30 musicians.

Seats of Three Colors

The seats are of three colors, red, blue and green and are of the latest design. They have velour backs and mohair seats and are placed in various designs to show off the color effect. They are also placed wide enough apart so that people coming or going will not cause those seated to rise. There are five seating sections on the main floor. The floors are covered with a special carpet which deadens the sound. Mor than 7,000 square yards of carpeting was necessary to cover the floors of the theatre.

In the balcony the seats are divided into two sections. The lower section of 500 seats comprises the loges and the second balcony of 500 seats are the same as those on the lower floor. Outside exits from the balcony are on a level with the street as are those of the main floor, due to the location of the house.

Off the balcony is the promenade which is lined with a series of arches done in black and gold of modern design. Off from here are the upstairs lounges and rest rooms which are like those on the lower floor but somewhat smaller.

Thirteen horns have been placed on the stage for sound reproduction. Besides this a public address system with horns in various parts of the house have been installed and if necessary can be connected with the sound equipment.

Three-Way Screen

The screen which has a special masking device can be used for standard, Magnascope and wide film as it is 56 feet wide and 27 feet high. The stage itself is 145 feet wide, 70 feet deep and 50 feet high at the proscenium arch.

The heating plant which is located 40 feet below the stage has three hot water boilers using oil for fuel. Two are for use in cold weather while the other supplies hot water for the house.

Three Air Conditioners

The refrigeration and ventilating plant has three separate air conditioning units and dehumidifiers. One for the auditorium in front of the balcony, one for under the balcony, and the lobby and the other for the balcony. This allows the temperature to be regulated to the same degree in any part of the house. Two 100 ton refrigeration machines, run by synchronous motors are capable of melting 200 tons of ice in 24 hours. Remote control wet and dry bulb thermometer stations, are located in various parts of the house and enable the engineer to watch the air and heat conditions from a control panel at his station.

The ventilating fans are also controlled from one station and one exhaust fan is

SATISFACTION

The modern department store, mammoth in size and varied in scope, is but the natural outgrowth of a universal public tendency to concentrate purchases in one establishment instead of scattering one's energies and capital in a shop to shop quest of needed items.

The many conveniences of big store trading are so fully realized by the buying public, that these great merchandise marts continue to flourish and prosper to the mutual advantage of buyer and seller alike.

In its own particular field the E. E. Fulton Co. presents a parallel to the great department stores of metropolitan cities. We have built up a departmentized institution specially organized to serve the motion picture theatre industry in a many sided but completely satisfying way.

So, if you are in any way concerned with theatre planning, outfitting or maintenance, let us show you how economically, promptly and efficiently we can serve you—and in a way to prove our claim to the title, DEPARTMENT STORE OF THE MOTION PICTURE TRADE.

Our all embracing, Single Contract, Single Responsibility plan simplifies matters and gives you every protection. Remember that CONTINUED SATISFACTION IS THE FULTON PLAN OF ACTION.

SEATING THE SPECTATOR

Properly—Comfortably—is a very important matter either in a Picture Palace or in just a modest movie show.

We can and do make seats for every type of playhouse and every seat produced in our factory is manufactured and finished in the most approved manner from selected material.

We know that we play a very important part in solving the many new problems which the coming of talking pictures has introduced. Our engineers have shown not only that sound is a factor to be reckoned with in connection with correct seating, but they have demonstrated also what to do to make seating harmonize with good acoustics in the theatre. It will cost you nothing for this engineering assistance.

The acoustical scheme of your theatre may be faulty because of improper seating arrangements and this is something worth inquiring into. Consult us.

Watch Horns, Batteries, Rewinding To Keep Your Sound Up to Snuff

Equipment Is a Stern Master and Requires Constant Attention, Expert to 1,500 Theatres Declares

By DR. N. M. LA PORTE
Director, Publix Department of Scientific Research, Sound and Projection

THE paramount importance of good sound distribution in the theatre auditorium is so obvious that it requires no supporting argument. This article will therefore be confined to a discussion of some of the major problems which much be solved if satisfactory distribution of volume is to be obtained.

Strangely enough a greater degree of perfection is expected by the audience when mechanical reproduction is used than when there are actual actors on the stage. For example, patrons sitting in rear or side seats at a legitimate stage production do not object when great difficulty in seeing or hearing the production is experienced, while patrons in the same seats in a talking picture presentation expect to hear just as well as they would in the best seats in the house.

The patron's ear is a much more severe critic than the patron's eye. The ordinary black and white picture on the screen is actually very little like the original scene with its color and depth, but the eye does not object to this. The ear, however, readily notices and resents small differences between the reproduced sound and that which is remembered as a real and familiar sound.

The average audience will not object to poor light, scratched film, or other projection faults as much as they will complain of slight unrecorded noises. System noises must be eliminated by unceasing attention to the details of maintenance. Most distribution problems can be solved by the proper pointing of the horns.

Correct Pointing

This article is altogether too brief to completely outline the proper methods of horn pointing, nor is it our intention that the theatre personnel do this work. The correct pointing of horns to give good distribution requires highly specialized training; we plan to merely outline some of the fundamental principles and methods in order that the theatre staff may have a better understanding of the work of the engineers, thereby fostering closer co-operation between them.

The Western Electric reproducing system uses for its sound production a type of horn which is called "exponential." It is by means of this type of horn that the sound can be directed at will in a "beam" in much the same way as a beam of light from a searchlight would be pointed.

"Beam" Property

Other types of loud speakers release the sound into the auditorium without directing it. It is because of this beam property of the exponential type horns that we may with painstaking work point them so that all seats receive approximately the same quantity of sound.

The loudness of the sound is greatest in the center of this sound beam and gradually decreases towards the edges or sides of the beam. The sound volume also decreases as the listener moves further away from the horn toward the rear of the house. Our problem of obtaining equal amounts of sound in all the seats can usually best be obtained in the following way: point the sound beam center at the rear seats and let the edges of the beam take care of the front seats.

Sound Tips

PROPER care of sound equipment and the distribution of sound in the theatre auditorium constitute one of the biggest problems facing theatre managers today. In the accompanying article, Dr. N. M. La Porte, head of the department of scientific research on sound and projection of Publix Theatres, gives some useful pointers on the subject.

If this is done the volume at the rear seats will not be too great even though the center of the sound beam strikes them. This is because they are relatively far away from the horns. The volume at the front seats will not be excessively great even though they are close to the horns because the volume near the edges is not as great as in the center of the sound beam.

In obtaining satisfactory volume distribution in the house a "cut-and-try" method of tilting of the horns up and down will finally result in a nice balance which give approximately the same volume to the front seats as is found in the rear. The distribution of the sound volume from one side of the house to the other is usually obtained by a division of the house into sections or strips of approximately the same width. There will be as many sections as there are horns. Each horn is now directed to the center of the respective section which it is intended to cover. In doing this the vertical adjustment previously described should not be disturbed.

Some Exceptions

To this general rule, like all rules, there are exceptions. In fact, the exceptions appear to exceed the number of cases where the rule may be applied. The serious difficulty in following this general rule is found in the fact that in some houses the beam of sound so directed may hit a reflecting wall and result in a disturbing echo. If this condition exists and the management is unable to economically accoustically treat the wall, it is sometimes necessary to compromise by sacrificing the sound in a few seats, in order to retain good sound in other points of the house.

Each house presents a different problem which must be solved in the light of its particular conditions.

Watch Storage Batteries

There are three good reasons why the storage batteries used with sound reproducing systems should have most careful attention in order that they will last a reasonable length of time. They are:

(1) the vital importance of batteries to the system,

(2) the difficulty of quick replacement; and

(3) the cost—both the original cost and the installation charge.

The most common cause of battery failure is overcharging. In fact, in practically all instances where there are failures in theatres, the trouble is due to the impression of the person who has the responsibility of the batteries that a great amount of power must be put into the batteries.

It must be borne in mind that the engineer servicing the equipment has carefully computed the amount of power that must be returned to the batteries after the normal run and carefully set the charging rate, based on the time the batteries will be charged. Of course, in most cases this rate will be so set that if one set of batteries are charged while the system is operating on another set, the batteries will maintain their proper condition.

Electrolysis

If the batteries are allowed to remain on charge after the fully charged condition is reached, the power going into the batteries will be used up in electrolysis, which is the breaking up of the water of the solution into hydrogen and oxygen. The positive plate is made of peroxide of lead and it is around this plate that the hydrogen collects and bubbles to the surface.

This is commonly called "gassing." The peroxide of lead of the positive plate is loosened by the resulting agitation and small pieces drop to the bottom of the cell, forming a layer of sediment. In this way the amount of useful material in the cell is decreased, reducing its capacity and shortening its life. Wet battery tops and the fact that water in the cells must be frequently replaced are symptoms of over-charging.

It is essential that the terminals of the batteries be kept clean and free from the oxide and sulphate deposits that tend to coat them. This is particularly necessary in the systems of sound reproducing where four sets of six volt batteries are so connected ("series-parallel" arrangement) they operate as a 12 volt group.

If the acidic fumes creep into the connections a high resistance is developed, resulting in less of the load being carried by a particular battery and a consequent unequal wear. There will also be a resistance to

Theatre Television Looms As New Worry for The Showman to Defeat

Demonstration on Six Foot Screen Opens Up Floodgates of Speculation— G. E. Scientist See Commercial Use Near

SCHENECTADY—Theatre television as an early development was foreshadowed here when Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson, television expert of the General Electric Co., demonstrated practically a television show broadcast from his laboratory to a six-foot screen at RKO's Proctor, one mile away.

The feat has aroused a wave of discussion pro and con throughout the industry as to the feasibility and practicality of television in the theatre. While there remains a great deal of experimental work before television actually can be counted a factor, a description of the technical method employed in transmitting and receiving is of interest.

48 Holes in Scanning Disc

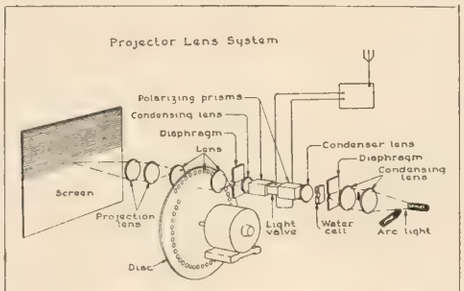
The subject to be televised stands before an incandescent lamp. Between the subject and the light is a metal disc about the size of a bicycle wheel and drilled with 48 holes. The revolving disc covers the complete subject 20 times per second; that is, there are 20 complete pictures made up of light and shade. A large square frame contains four photo-electric tubes, sensitive to light. The tubes respond 40,000 times per second to impulses reflected back from the subject.



At the theatre the electrical impulses are received and passed on to a light valve, based on an invention by Dr. August Karolus of Leipzig, Germany. The light valve is in the middle of an intricate lens system, in front of a high intensity arc lamp of a type similar to those used for the projection of motion pictures.

The light valve operates delicately and accurately to permit the passage of light in correspondence to the impulses received from the television transmitter. These light emissions are passed on through lenses to a disc corresponding in size, number of holes and rate of rotation, to the disc at the camera or originating point. Additional lens pass the light forward to the screen where these light impulses, at the rate of 40,000 per second, become the living, active image of the subject.

Projector 17 Feet Backstage

The arc lamp, with the lens system and the light valve, the whole making up the television projector, is placed 17 feet back of the screen. Heavy black cloth from the projector to the screen makes an effective light tunnel which eliminates the possibility of stray light hitting the screen. All the elements in the system, including projector amplifier and loud speakers, are mounted on wheels to permit assembly and disassembly when used as part of a vaudeville program.

Many inventors and research laboratories are experimenting with television. Dr. Herbert E. Ives of the Bell Laboratories demonstrated a system in color last June and as far back as 1927 the Bell engineers had developed a direct-scanning system or portable radio camera which photographed outdoor scenes for reproduction on a distant screen. Glaring incandescents under which the individual to be televised formerly sat were removed by this advance which also opened the way to that type of broadcasting by daylight.

Projection lens system in G. E. television system.

In England, John L. Baird has been televising for some time. In fact, he is operating a company engaged in regular business to handle television programs and broadcasts to London audiences.

C. Francis Jenkins of Washington has likewise turned television to practical use and now operates a broadcasting station for that purpose in Newark. Vladimir Zworkyin of the Westinghouse organization claims to have touched upon an entirely new basic principle, using a new type of cathode ray tube.

In Boston, an organization known as the Short Wave and Television Laboratories is attempting to work out color television. In its work is associated Station WEEI. Elimination of the revolving disc through application of a cone-shaped vacuum tube device is the objective of still another television experimenter, Philo T. Farnsworth of San Francisco.

Industry Merely Watching

In the picture industry, it is generally admitted the subject of television is one with which few executives, if any, are familiar. There is general recognition that the development will some day confront the trade as a major factor and one that will demand serious consideration.

The consensus of opinion, as nearly as the attitude of hesitant executives may be cross-sectioned, is that television is not yet ready for practical application.

This is How General Electric's Television System Works

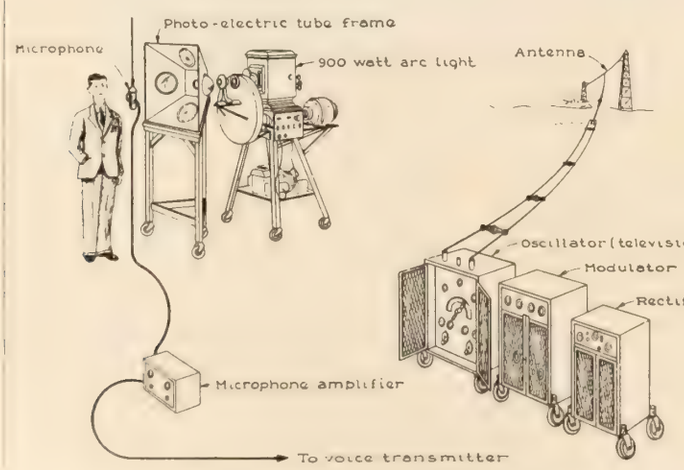


Diagram of transmitting apparatus.

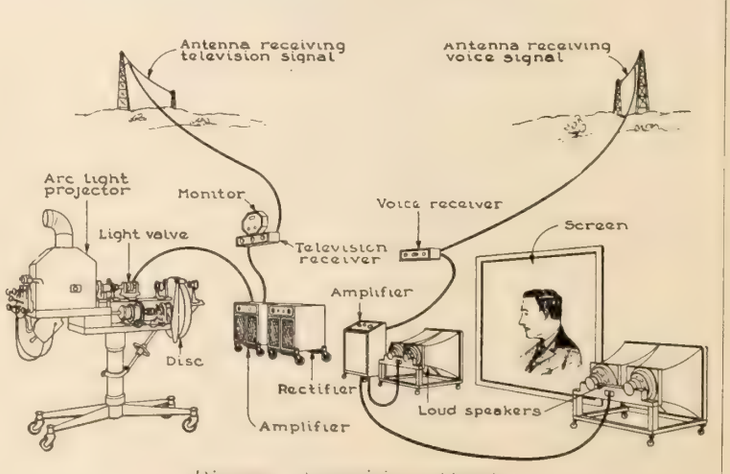

Diagram of receiving apparatus.

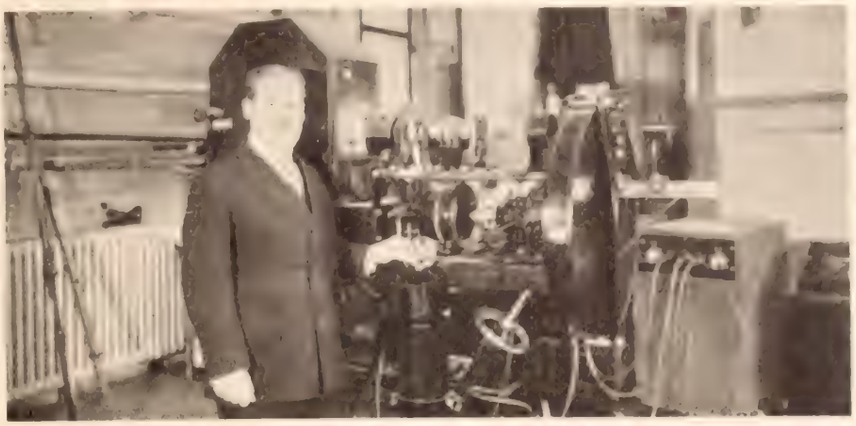
Television First Invented in '80

Schenectady—Television was invented about 50 years ago by a German, named Nipkow, according to Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson, who successfully demonstrated a television broadcast to a theatre here. This, he said, is the nearest answer to the query as to sponsorship of the invention. Nipkow, however, he said, had no radio amplifier or neon lamp, so could not complete his invention at the time. He did, however, Alexanderson points out, explain clearly the idea of scanning the picture, line after line, by a spot of light.

"Before we could produce the results seen here, he had to make several tests with different wavelengths which proved to be failures because one ray followed the surface of the earth, whereas the other was reflected from a layer of electrons 100 miles above the earth," Dr. Alexanderson declared. "We are now working with a wavelength of 140 meters in which the ground wave is predominant. For long distances, on the other hand, we have found it advantageous to use the shortest possible wavelength so that the bulk of the radiation leaves the earth and only the lower fringe of it will arrive at the receiving station. It is expected that the tests that are now in progress are going to throw much more light on the subject of wave propagation. Television apparatus is for this purpose an ideal working tool and I venture to predict that we will soon see a wave of activity in amateur television."

Experiment Makes Dent On Albany Theatremen

Albany—Many exhibitors in and around Albany attended the television demonstration at Proctor's in Schenectady last week, and were impressed by what they saw.



The demonstration was part of the regular bill and went over without a hitch before crowds that packed every inch of the theatre.

Actual pictures without the aid of film were thrown on a six foot screen of actors a half mile or more away in the G-E studio. Exhibitors watched the demonstration with a view of its possibilities later on in the theatre. The only way that one would know that it was a radio transmission was by a very slight swaying of the images as they were thrown on the six foot screen. Two years ago when the first demonstration of television was given the image was confined to a three inch square. An improved light valve intensifying waves to a far greater degree permitted the more recent showing to expand to a six foot square.

Cole Sees Television Supplanting Talkers

Dallas—Col. H. A. Cole, president of Texas M.P.T.O. and Manager Assn., stated at a meeting here that talkies and pictures may go into the discard soon, to be replaced with telephoto-phono pictures in which one master picture will be reproduced simultaneously in theatres all over the world.

Manufactured Weather in the Fox Great Lakes . . . will keep patrons cool and comfortable this summer

HERE is another progressive theatre which will offer patrons additional enjoyment this summer . . . which will provide the healthful, quiet comfort of Manufactured Weather, as produced through the Carrier System for Air Conditioning.

And not only in summer, but every day in the year, patrons of the Great Lakes will breathe this just right atmosphere . . . created and maintained regardless of outside weather conditions or the size of the audience.

In hot, muggy weather, the air entering the Carrier conditioned theatre is cooled and excess humidity is removed. In winter, the icy blasts drawn in are warmed and the correct amount of humidity is added. Summer and winter, all air is cleansed, set at the ideally comfortable condition of temperature and humidity and distributed uniformly and silently throughout the entire theatre. Thus every part of the house, from the first row orchestra to the last row in the balcony, is equally comfortable.

This is the same system which is providing ideal conditions of comfort at all seasons in many of the best known and most prominent theatres in the country. It is the only system guaranteed on a scientific db. basis as to sound level . . . that is, guaranteed not to produce the slightest sound disturbing to recording or reproduction. It is increasing patronage and building good will . . . not only in theatres, but in office buildings, banks, department stores, hotels, restaurants and public and industrial buildings throughout the country in which the health and comfort of occupants assumes a place of first importance.

Manufactured Weather is the product of Willis H. Carrier and his associates . . . pioneers and leaders in the air conditioning field for more than twenty-five years. Theatre owners, architects and engineers are invited to investigate the results accomplished by this complete, silent air conditioning system. A comparison with any other system will convince you as to its superiority.

Theatre Carpeting Vital Element In Color Scheme and Aid to Sound

Proper Floor Covering Has Become Economic Necessity In Theatres with Advent of Sound Pictures

By WILLIAM SLATER, JR.
Of the Slater Company, Chicago

A FEW years ago carpeting in theatres was a luxury. Today it is an economic necessity.

This transformation has been brought about by sound. The composition tile and linoleum floorings and other resilient materials formerly used no longer suffice. Their sound resisting surfaces have given way to the absorbent properties to be found in carpeting. Some pertinent facts concerning the selection, maintenance and use of theatre carpeting are treated here.

The first considerations are inevitably those which prevented general use of carpeting in theatres before the advent of talking pictures, namely, cost and sanitation.

The initial cost of carpeting is greater than that of many other types of floor covering; its maintenance, however, is proportionately less. It does not require a crew of scrubwomen to keep clean. A good, high-power vacuum cleaner, used daily, will keep it in good condition at an appreciable saving of time and expense. The vacuum cleaner is also your sanitary safeguard for carpeting.

Reduce Ratio of Accidents

There are further utilities of carpeting to reduce its initial cost. One is the atmosphere of luxurious comfort it lends to the theatre an atmosphere inevitably appreciated by patrons. Another is its reduction of risk from injuries sustained by patrons from falls. Almost all other types of floor covering suitable for theatre use have a greater risk element in this connection than has carpeting, which, because of its cushioned surface, is practically "slip-proof." Even in instances of actual falling, the risk element is lessened when carpeting is used because of the natural softness of the material and its cushioning.

The quality of carpeting suitable for various conditions varies greatly, and can only be definitely determined by an authority on theatre carpeting after a study of individual requirements. In the initial selection of carpeting, however, a good rule which is generally applicable is that standard, quality material from a reputable dealer be chosen.

There is no economy to be effected in the purchase of cheap carpeting. Adversely, foolish economy in this regard is inevitably more costly than an initial outlay for reliable material. It is the mistake most frequently made by the operators of small theatres in particular. Seeking a bargain, they buy price rather than material, and learn later, to their dismay, that what they have bought needs replacement in a comparatively short time. Good carpeting, properly maintained, has excellent wearing qualities.

Moreover, one of the costliest items in carpet furnishing is the labor charge for installation. The better your grade of carpet, the less frequently will this cost have to be met. The purchaser's first rule should be: Buy good carpet from a reputable dealer who is equipped to install it properly.

Protection of the wearing surface of carpets, particularly at entrances and at the heads of aisles and stairways, is important. Padding or cushioning should be given particular attention, especially where carpeting is used over concrete or extra hard surface flooring. Heavier padding cannot be used in such instances, but good surface protection can be provided through the use of heavy rubber mats and scatter rugs at these points. Nowhere should padding be less than 3/8" in thickness, and 1/2" is best.

Carpets and Costs

WHAT do you do about your carpeting problems?

Do you merely potshot in the dark, take a chance on selections without regard to architectural lines or the decorative scheme of your theatre, or do you spend your money judiciously?

There's a lot to this business of making the proper choice, particularly since the coming of sound. You may wonder what connection talkers have with sound, but read this interesting and informative article for that answer and a whale of a lot of interesting dope on carpets and what they can mean to one who understands them.

Selection of design and color is important and offers many possibilities for the improvement of auditorium and lobby appearance.

The available designs and colors are almost unlimited. It can be said that there is no restriction in these matters that would interfere with the execution of any desired decorative scheme in the theatre. Any conceivable color can be made in carpeting, while designs range from conservative Oriental patterns to the extreme Moderne. In addition, for installations of 500 yards or more, the theatre owner has the option of designing his own carpeting if desired, although there are stock lines of carpet which cover almost every conceivable arrangement of color and design that could be used.

Three Colors Required

It is important that the character of colors, designs and textures be in keeping with the quality or atmosphere of the house. Is yours a city or a country theatre? A de luxe palace calling for sophistication and elegance, or a high-class neighborhood that needs formal restraint to express its fitting hospitality? Or is it just a good-paying country house that requires practical simplicity? There is a carpet for each type.

An auditorium, taken as a whole, needs at least three emphatic colors for good balance—one to predominate, another to supplement, and a third in more brilliant values for emphasis. In this scheme your carpeting should be the darkest part of every auditorium. Lightness for ceiling and walls, for an impression of space and airiness, but dark hues for carpeting. It furnishes the foundation and should give a color sense of stability. A medium tone between floors and ceilings can be struck in the use of draperies and upholsteries of deeper color than walls and ceiling, but lighter than floors and carpeting. For emphasis, the brightest and most intense colors should be restricted to accessories. The gradations in each of these should be close enough to keep values related to every other value in order to make the auditorium or lobby a unit.

Color means light and cheer. Small lobbies can be made to appear larger through the use of small pieces of furniture and plain, two-tone or jaspe carpeting. Dark lobbies can be made to appear light through the use of carpetings which harmonize with light-colored walls and ceilings.

As for determining carpet quality, there are several specific tests which can be made by any carpet expert. There are such authorities in practically every city of any size. They know carpet and can recommend without bias the best weave and quality for a given use. If you are not a carpet expert and are not inclined to consult an authority, a good rule to follow as a basis of judgment before you buy even inexpensive or medium-priced merchandise is to see the best there is in that line, then select the nearest thing to it at the price you can pay.

Pointers on Maintenance

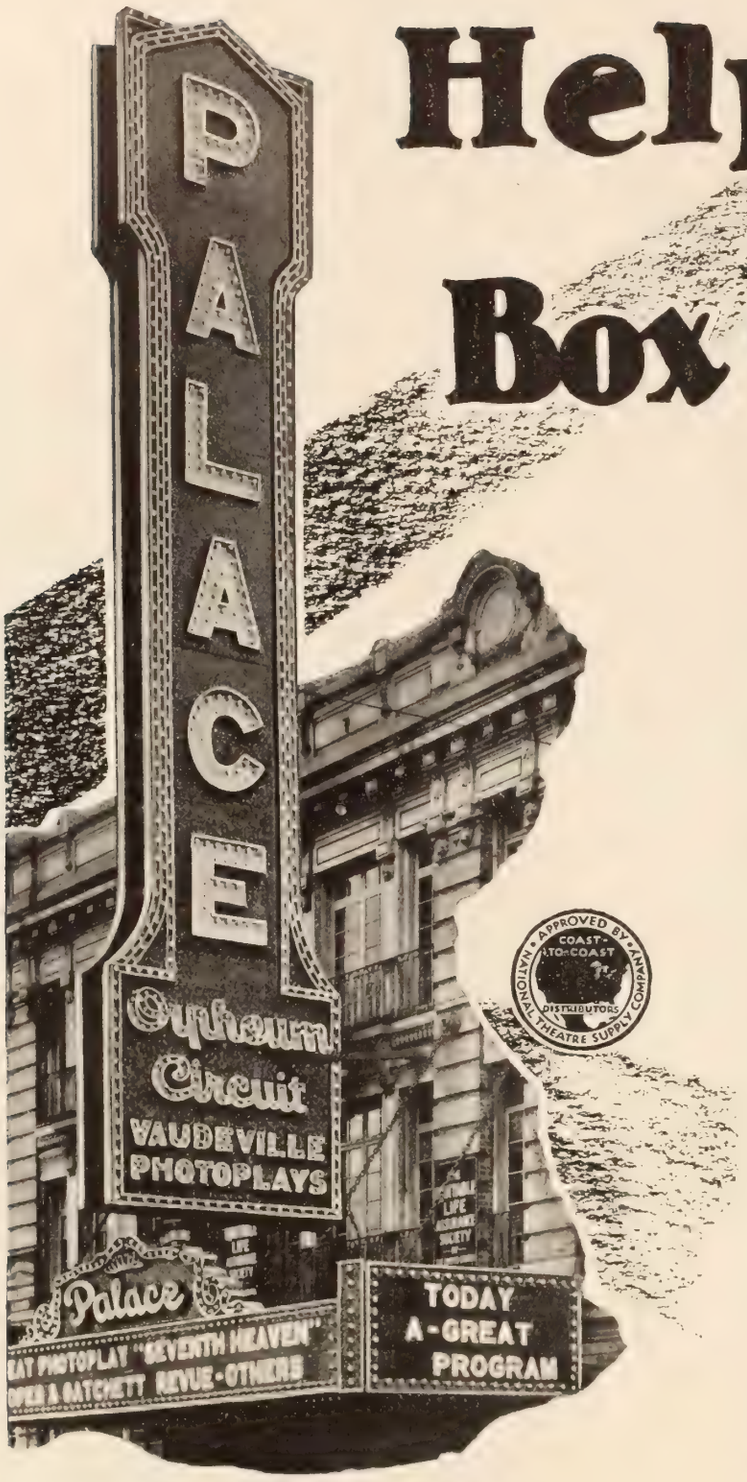
Mechanical means of testing the wearing qualities of carpet have been devised and some of these may be worth employing if your carpet purchase runs large enough to justify the expense of testing. It often pays.

Some helpful pointers in carpet maintenance are suggested herewith:

Protect the surface where traffic is heaviest.

If you are selecting an expensive carpeting, the use of scatter rugs to cover the carpet at points of greatest wear is advisable.

At corners of halls or stair landings, carpet should be butted, unless matching of pattern necessitates mitering.



Runners should be fastened at ends to prevent tripping.

To insure maximum service, rugs should be laid so that the seams or pile run in the direction of the greatest traffic.

Use quality padding. Good padding undeniably makes carpet last longer. But don't sacrifice the carpet to the lining. It doesn't pay.

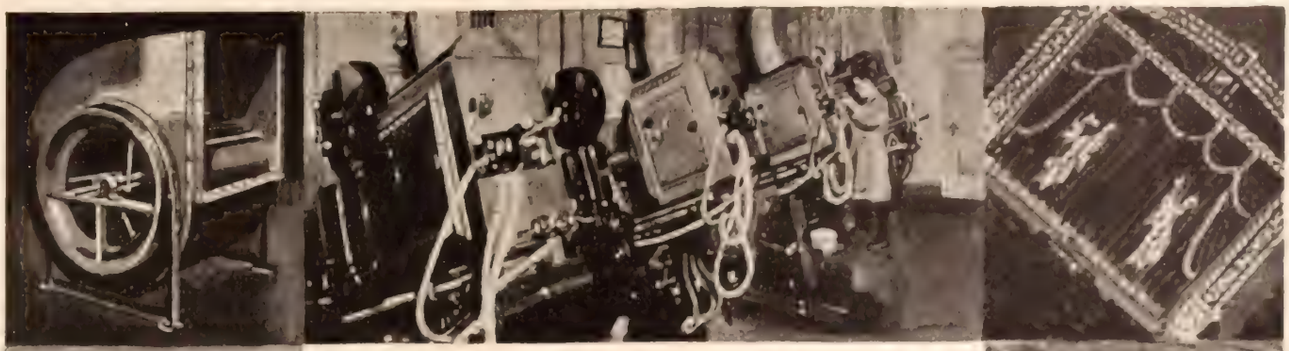
Helping the Box Office

A Lustrolite changeable letter Display which shows the attractiveness of the service.

WITH thirty branch offices, situated in strategic parts of the country, the National Theatre Supply Company keep in personal touch with theatres and theatrical architects needing a mechanical advisory service.

In an effort to round out our mechanical service to theatres, we have made a connection by which we are now prepared to offer a unique electrical display advertising service.

We now have available a staff of expert electrical advertising display men who understand thoroughly the basic principles of securing the utmost in display values. These men are at the service of all theatre architects needing technical advice and cooperate with theatre owners who desire to improve their display advertising.



Lustrolite changeable letter Display Advertising has attained a dominant place in the display advertising world through sheer merit. It has been developed from the sound idea of making a display sign actually merchandise the product. The experience that has come over a period of years is now at the service of theatres. These engineers are available through the National Theatre Supply Company.

To all responsible theatres interested in increasing the effectiveness of their advertising we offer a solution to their problem. Send us a good commercial photograph of the front of your theatre. We will make up a sketch showing how the display can be improved to the benefit of your box office.

No obligation involved. An opportunity to improve the attractiveness of your display awaits you. Consult our nearest office today.

IT PAYS TO MAKE IT A COMPLETE JOB

Equipping a theatre completely from one source is of greater value than its decided convenience. The Exhibitor who buys National Equipment from start to finish finds a wider range of theatre supplies, of drapery fabrics and carpet patterns, from which to make his selection. He is afforded the counsel and advice of specialists in every phase of theatre equipping. He profits by the all-inclusive guarantee of satisfaction that is an integral part of every National Purchase. He is protected by an unequalled maintenance service — always within his reach. Every dollar that he invests buys a full dollar's worth of merchandise . . . From every standpoint, it pays to make it a complete job—a National job.

This stamp of approval means quality . . . in materials, in workmanship, in practicability. Look for it in the advertisements of theatre equipment manufacturers. Any product with which it is linked has passed National's rigid tests of excellence and is available at any National Branch.

Illumination and Projection Quiz

THEATRE illumination and projection offer a multitude of problems for the manager, and continuous study of them is essential. The following questions and answers recently were broadcast to Publix managers for their guidance.

Q. In ordering lamps, what four essentials must be specified?

A. Type and shape of bulb, wattage, voltage, color-base type.

Q. What three factors determine the quality of lamps?

A. Cost, life, lumen outfit.

Q. What is the average burning life of a lamp?

A. 1,000 hours.

Q. To what lamps does this average not refer?

A. Spot lamps and projection lamps which burn 200 hours and 50 hours respectively.

Q. What is the average color permanency of the different colored lamps?

A. Natural colored most permanent. Dip and sprayed lamps—poor permanency.

Q. Why is it not cheaper to use lamps whose life is longer than standard lamps?

A. Although the life of the lamp is longer, more current is used giving less illumination and lower efficiency.

Q. What lamps should not be burned base up or at an angle?

A. All Mogul based lamps, spotlight lamps, and projector lamps.

Q. What is the difference between frosted, sprayed, dipped and natural colored lamps, and in what colors are each available from the manufacturer?

A. Frosted: Sand blast—etched inside or outside—clear—no color. Sprayed: Color sprayed on at factory. Dipped: Lamps dipped locally in analine dyes. Natural color: Color inherent in glass, visible filament. Frosted available in clear, special lamps in color; spray—red, yellow, blue, green, amber, orange; dipped lamps available in any color. Natural colors—red, blue, amber, green.

Q. Are all natural and sprayed lamps of the same standard type and color identical in color?

A. No.

Q. Why is money wasted in using projector lamps for spot lights?

A. Shorter life at higher cost.

Q. What types of splices are defective and why?

A. (a) Splices so wide that they cannot follow the curve of the roller. Splices with this defect will be carried through the top rollers and through the intermittent, but will run off the bottom roller leading to the magazine. Several frames will be damaged before the idler will set the film back on the sprocket. On the screen, the defect will show up as a bad jump.

(b) Splices which have been scraped too much, which have been fastened with too much cement, or those having both defects. The film will buckle resulting in the same action described above.

(c) Splices which have been mismated so that sprocket holes do not register. As the sprocket passes over the top roller, the teeth will enlarge the sprocket holes. The film will remain on the teeth as it passes over the intermittent roller but there will be a slight displacement resulting in a jump on the screen. At the take-up it will run off the roller causing damage to several frames. A defective splice will break occasionally at the intermittent interrupting the run of the reel, and showing on the screen a flash of burning film.

Q. What steps must be taken to insure fire-safety in the projection room?

A. Pail of water and pail of sand must be on the wall ready for instantaneous service. The Pyrene extinguishers should be handy to each projector. The fire drops and shutters should be closed every night and tested periodically. Film when not in use should be kept in metal containers with air holes to prevent the accumulation of explosive gases.

Q. What parts of the flasher need attention?

A. Make sure that the flasher motor is properly oiled at all times and that worn out brushes are replaced as soon as possible

Q. What points must be remembered in the maintenance of outdoor signs?

A. In general, signs should be cleaned once a month and painted once or twice a year depending on local conditions. Each sign should be checked for burned out lamps every day and these should be replaced as soon as possible. General repairs should be made at the time of painting unless damage is such that it requires immediate attention.

Projection Cure Near?

OTTAWA — Discovery of an accidental impurity which is largely responsible for the sensitiveness of film and the eventual possibility of improved projection via its elimination is seen here in the talk made by Dr. C. E. K. Mees, director of research for Eastman Kodak, before the Canadian Chemical Society.

The impurity, he explained, was found in the gelatin from the skin of animals and had been traced to the consumption of plant life. It is a compound containing sulphur.

While a film projected on the screen appears smooth to the naked eye, the surface of the projected picture contains millions of microscopic crystals, Mees said. More of these crystals are to be found in a square inch of film than there are human beings on earth, he pointed out.

Penn. Exhibitors Hit at 'Handouts'

Philadelphia—Practice of giving away merchandise at local theatres is being frowned on by the eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey exhibitor association. Although the practice is said to boost business on given nights, grosses suffer on others, it is stated. Some exhibitors have claimed that companies which tie-up for the "handouts" haven't been living up to their part of the bargain.

Program Balance Essential Factor

Variety and balance are the two factors essential in properly building programs, Borris Morros, Publix music director recently told the Circuit's Managers' Training School.

"If you have five acts in a program and four of them are comedy, the show will fall flat," Morros declared. "If all four were headliners, you would not help the program in the least. But take one headliner and precede him with three acts presenting contrasting types of entertainment, properly routined, and you will have a successful program.

"Having variety, you must balance that variety," he continued. A good program must not be too highbrow, and it must not be too lowbrow. It must strike an average which will appeal to everyone in your audience and not to distinct groups only.

Recognition Big Factor

"There are also two points which must be kept constantly in mind in planning the musical makeup of your program," continued Morros. "The first of these elements is 'recognition.' Audiences like tunes which they recognize. Each of your patrons subconsciously seizes every opportunity to pridefully identify a tune.

"Therefore your selection of songs and tunes must be guided by the ability of your patrons to recognize them. Devotees of the ultra-classical will go to concerts and the opera for such music. Persons preferring the 'hotter-than-hot' type of extreme jazz will go to dance-halls and cabarets. In our theatres we must present each type of music the semi-classical, popular, and above all familiar music which everyone enjoys.

"The second element in making your programs effective from a musical standpoint," concluded Morros, "is simplicity. Even if patrons do not recognize a number, they will like it if it has a simple melody, easily remembered. They will hum such tunes as they leave your theatre."

Theatre Carpet Is Vital Element

Clean carpets last longer. A daily cleaning for aisles and lobbies with a good vacuum cleaner should be the rule. Dirt and grit are easily ground into carpeting and the traffic later cuts the pile, giving the carpet a threadbare, shabby appearance.

Sweeping with brooms is unsatisfactory and may result in damage to the carpet. Broken bits of broomstraw are left in the pile with the same result noted from dirt and grit.

Dry cleaning, when practicable, is safe.

Low prices are quoted on thick pile carpets when they are made from synthetic wools of doubtful wearing qualities. A good rule is to buy the best. It is better to buy a low pile of good quality than to take the lowest price—and poor quality—in a higher pile.

The acoustical coefficiency of standard theatre carpetings (at the standard pitch of 512 vibrations per second) is .15 for plain carpet, .25 for carpet with ½" of ozite lining, and .20 for loose rugs.

It Won't be long Now!

HOT summer weather will soon be here again! And with it comes an opportunity to every exhibitor—to make his theatre the coolest, most attractive place in town! When the temperature goes up to 90 degrees or more, the cool theatre gets the crowds.

Trailers Termed Potential Business Builders, and Should Be Spotted Ahead of Feature, Says Expert

By FRANK WHITBECK
Director of Advertising and Publicity, Fox West Coast Theatres

SINCE the beginning of show business there has been outdoor advertising. The first was the crude printing of type posters that were hung in windows, on the inside walls of the post office, in the general store of the cross-roads town where the little wagon show was to play that night.

Later came the lithograph. The advance agent made his own dates with paper borrowed, or stolen, from the store keeper; and a can of lampblack.

The job of that advance agent was to "snipe" the barns of the countryside; to "hit a daub" near the railroad station. In addition to this, some paper was given to the local billposting company. The equipment of the posting company was crude; their boards, all running together, were mostly of wood.

Today the billposting company plant is regulated by the rules of a national organization. These rules govern the posting of the paper, the building of the panels. City laws regulate the material which is to be used; the zones in which billboards may be erected.

Great Progress Made

The billposting companies together with the motion picture producers and the theatre operators, have progressed with the trend of the times. They have kept abreast of the changing conditions in the business world. This condition, however, is not true with the type of paper we are posting. I'm not blaming this on the lithograph company; neither am I saying it is the fault of the film company publicity chief who designs the board, but I am saying it to warn you, to study the type of paper you are posting and where you are posting it.

We'll start with the posting—these are our rules:

No sniping. By this I mean the indiscriminate posting of small paper, one, three and six sheets, on the sides of barns, fences, dead walls and the score of other places that a snipe bill poster can find.

Buy the Biggest

No small paper highway hits or along the road of a main boulevard where cars travel at excessive speed. This is the age of speed. The law allows from 35 to 45 miles an hour; statistics show that the average car carries one and one-half passengers, even on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. The driver is watching the road. It's a cinch he can't read a card tacked to a tree or a three sheet on a barn 100 yards off the highway. If he has company, will the passenger read billboards or will he be talking to the driver or looking at the scenery?

If you do use billboards on the highway, buy the biggest that you can—a 28 sheet panel and then figure the location for approach, readability and the side of the road it is on. The approach for a "head-on shot" when you can read as you advance and at night your headlights will illuminate it. The readability is the time that you have in getting to the board and your chance to read as you pass it. The side of the road to choose is the side that you are traveling.

In the city pick your locations where and when you can. Don't take a board that is bunched with a half dozen others in a series of panels running parallel with the street they are on. Get junction points, locations at traffic signal stops, where people transfer from one street car to another, single locations with approach and vision. Try for locations near a high school, at the entrance or exit of a big factory that employs large numbers of people. Watch out for locations that are good in the day time and not worth a damn at night because of poor illumination or lack of traffic.

Analyzing Outdoor Copy

OUTDOOR and trailer advertising possibly are the outstanding standard avenues of advertising for the theatre, Frank Whitbeck observes in offering the accompanying article on the subject in "Now," house organ of Fox West Coast Theatres. His analysis of billiard and trailer advertising is one of the most informative ever published.

Remember that the billposting company has two grades of boards—the "regular" locations and the "illuminated" locations. Chances are, if the location of a regular was worth a darn it would be illuminated. Many times it is penny wise and pound foolish to buy 100 regular locations when 30 illuminated would give you a better showing. Quantity doesn't make for quality even in the billposting game.

We had an old expression, with the circus. It was this—"put a card where you can't get a one sheet; a one sheet where you can't get a three; a three where a six won't fit and a six where you haven't room to post a 28 sheet." In other words, take advantage of the full space.

If you use three sheets get them on the side of small neighborhood stores where woman go to trade—then they will be seen and read. Don't hope to attract those riding in street cars or automobiles by anything smaller than a six sheet—it just can't be done.

To get back to the style of billboard paper—

When I think back to those melodramas that I was ahead of in years gone by to "Across the Pacific," "Only a Shopgirl," "Young Buffalo, King of the Wild West" and a few more, we had better lithograph paper than the exchanges are putting out today. In this part of our business we have not progressed. That's why I say—study the billboard.

Poster Copy

Here's an instance. A recent poster on a certain picture had a girl stretched out on a couch, was naked up to the hips and down to her navel. If that poster sold tickets it wasn't apparent in Los Angeles. The picture did a flop. In another spot, maybe it would sell tickets. But either way that poster was damn dangerous for this business of ours. It was offensive to good taste. It must have been downright repulsive to the women who interest themselves in P. T. A., Women's Clubs and Better Films, not alone the fussy men in Better Business organizations and the Civic Beauty committee of any town.

Remember this: In all your advertising, there are a certain number of people that are willing to believe the worst of any motive a manager may have to attract business to his theatre. Don't give these people a chance to vent their spite on you.

Watch Credits

Again you have the question of studio credits and contractural obligations that must be taken care of by the studio press-agent in the billboard paper. This covers a great deal of space. We, the theatre operators, are not obligated by those contracts. We can cover what we want on the paper by new copy that we believe will sell tickets.

Any billboard, no matter what size, is merely the "reminder" type of advertising. We tell our story in the newspapers, on the billboards we remind them of that story and give the name and date of the theatre.

The less said, the more remembered. This should be your motto in all billboard advertising.

If you do your own printing, watch your colors. Standardize those colors. Stick to them—week after week. After a time your patrons will come to accept black and orange as the advertising of your theatre and they will look to it for the announcements of your programs.

Try to check through the printer the color your opposition may be using. If he has black on yellow, then it's a cinch you don't want it. Never give an order "blind," lay out your color scheme with your printer.

Picking Selling Points

Which sells the most tickets—the name of the star or the title of the picture? Don't leave this up to the printer. You draw up the layout of that piece of printing. You make the decision of how that paper is going to read. Certainly, take suggestions from the printer. He may know more about his business than you do but, you are the judge of what is going to get the big line on that printing.

Keep away from window cards and card tacking unless you have an intelligent plan for this distribution. The average card that goes into a merchant's window goes back of some merchandise. Most times that store keeper wants a pass. The space that you take up, the location that you get, isn't worth the pass. In card tacking, the man doing the work wouldn't be so engaged if he had any advertising sense. Consequently he isn't giving you the best showing possible. On black streets, on the sides of buildings—half the time your 'live' card is flush with a 'dead' announcement. Think, is card tacking worth the money that you are putting into it?

When I posted bills with the Barnum and Bailey circus, there were three advertising cars ahead of the show; besides all the "box brigades" and the "opposition gangs" that worked independent of the cars. In all, better than 5,000 sheets of paper would be posted for a small one night stand town. This posting covered everything, country routes into the territory within 20 miles of the town to be played. The town itself would be plastered through the regular bill-posting company and the snipers, bannermen and lithographers with the circus.

The type of circus paper posted has never been equalled, either by another circus legi-

Analyzing the Trailer

SUPPOSE you said, to a national advertiser, "Get me up a trailer of 400 feet or better that I can use on my screen. You can put some scenes of your factory in it, pictures of your completed product, prices, where your merchandise can be purchased. In other words, give me a pictorial sales argument that will run about 5 minutes."

Would the national advertiser grab that opportunity? Would he put the keenest minds in his organization to work on that trailer; would he plan and scheme and think about the sales argument that trailer would contain? You can bet he would and he'd pay you a handsome sum for the showing of such a trailer.

We pay thousands of dollars a year for advertising that isn't one-tenth as good as our own screen advertising, and yet how many of us ever give a second thought to the trailers on our screen advertising our coming attractions?

Consider this: the advance trailer for a coming attraction can be a power for good or, through your own carelessness, lack of thought or downright ignorance, it can do you even more—harm!

Deserves Best Place

The trailer for your next attraction deserves the best place you can give it in your program, next to the feature attraction. That place is just ahead of the current feature when your audience is seated—in a mood for entertainment, when they will read—and remember.

If you put it on after the feature, what happens?

The entertainment your audience paid their admission price for—the feature picture—is over. They are either on their way out of the theatre or their interest has dropped down because they know the other attractions on the bill are of secondary importance. Position for your trailer is, therefore, of great importance.

The trailers supplied by the trailer companies are, in their opinion, the best sales argument for the attracting of patronage. They do not always fulfill that purpose. The trailer maker, the workman actually engaged in the making of that trailer has no understanding, nor appreciation, of your particular operation. Podunk, Mud Flats and Strawberry Point are considered of the same intelligence and importance as New York, Chicago or Los Angeles. The one trailer, the same appeal for the blase theatre-goers of the metropolis is expected to be equally attractive to the more provincial movie lover of the small town.

In the first place, the ideas for most trailers come from the Los Angeles studio press agent. They write the copy, pick the scenes and ship to their New York director of advertising. Here the copy is either given an okay or it is remade to the New York idea or turned over to the trailer company.

Those trailers that do not follow this routine are handled about like this. The representative of the trailer company secures different scenes of the production from the studio; these are sent to his office in New York, and then they, the trailer people, make up the sales argument from the press material that is furnished by the studio press department.

There are two styles of trailers, the silent and the talking or sound.

Length Called Drawback

The first sort, one or two scenes—some high-pressure sales talk, credit to the company, the director and the cast. Many have scenes taken from the talking version; they are grotesque because the lips of the players move and yet the theatre is in dead silence. Others are actually superior to the talking trailers.

We have found that the chief cause for complaint with the talking trailers is their extreme length and the number of scenes that are used. The smart theatre-goer gets too much of an idea of what the picture is all about merely through watching the trailer.

Can you cut these trailers? Yes. Why not? If it is your idea that the trailer is not good and that it can be improved by cutting and your operator can re-assemble it without harm or damage, then by all means cut it.

Silent Trailers Popular

A check of the Los Angeles division shows that out of 14 neighborhood theatres, ten of them favor silent trailers, two are using talking trailers and the other two can not make up their minds which is the better.

Silent trailers are best for certain pictures. For instance, the first talking picture that Lon Chaney will make. You will not want to give away the voice of Chaney in a talking trailer—that is your one big selling argument—that is the one thing that your patrons will pay their money for. Keep Chaney silent until he flashes on your screen. Keep silent any actor of reputation that may come from the legitimate stage to make their first talking picture. Keep silent the voice of John McCormack, until your audience has paid their admission to hear McCormack sing.

The following paragraph concerns those theatre with more than one change of program each week:

Do not use more than one advance trailer during any one performance. By this I mean on your Monday or Tuesday change use the trailer advertising the program on Wednesday and Thursday. If you give your audience too much—if you tell them too much, they'll remember nothing.

One trailer at a time. Remember your patron paid good money to be entertained.

Explanation of Lighting Terms

The Footcandle . . . The Lumen . . . Mean Spherical Candlepower . . . Mean Horizontal Candlepower

THE purpose of this treatment is to provide a foundation for the discussions of theatre lighting that are to follow. These few explanations of important terms will provide a valuable reference background for other discussions.

In the beginning when new light sources of real value began to appear, they were quite naturally compared with the ordinary candle which was at that time probably the only really practical light source. At that time it was decided that a candle of a certain size, made of certain material, which burned at a certain rate, should be called a unit light source, or a "standard candle," which gave off a certain definite quantity of light. At first it was the practice to compare other light sources with this standard candle, taking into consideration only the light given off in one direction.

Mean Horizontal Candlepower

The strength of light in the horizontal direction, that is, directly opposite the center of the flame, was chosen, and by averaging the strength of light in this one plane around the light source, they arrived at a term known as "mean horizontal candlepower." It must be borne in mind that candlepower, or mean horizontal candlepower, does not in any way indicate the total amount of light which is given off by a light source, but rather the strength of light in one direction.

If a lamp gives 100 candlepower in a horizontal direction, we do not know the total amount of light given off by this source, but rather the strength of light in this one certain direction. To illustrate this, we might put a lamp—say a standard candle—inside a hemisphere. If the hemisphere is painted black on the inside, we know that the light going in one direction will be absorbed; still if we took a measure of the intensity in the direction away from the hemisphere, we should find one candlepower. We might even close the opening still more, and should still get a reading of one candlepower, but it is obvious that a considerable amount of the total light must have been absorbed: still our reading in the one direction would not be affected.

Mean Spherical Candlepower

As we come to the next term, we have an approach to a unit or figure which indicates the total amount of light given off by light source. That is, if we average the candlepower strength in every direction around the light source, we obtain a figure designated as the "mean spherical candlepower"—that is, the average of the candlepowers in every direction. The next two terms, which are really the most important of all, are the "lumen" and the "footcandle." The lumen may briefly be described or defined as the unit of measure of quantity of light. The footcandle could be defined as the unit of measure of illumination. At this point it might be well to explain that there really is a great deal of difference between light and illumination—light being known as the cause, and illumination as the effect produced by this cause.

The Lumen Measure of Light

It is logical that we must have light before illumination can be produced. Therefore, we should consider the "lumen" or measure of light before the "footcandle" or measure of illumination. However, by putting the cart before the horse, so to speak, it may be possible to give in a few words just what we mean by these two terms.

We are all by this time familiar with the ordinary standard candle. If we place a piece of paper one foot away from this standard candle, we shall have one footcandle of illumination on this paper. We know by mathematical calculation that it takes one lumen of light distributed over one square foot of area to produce one footcandle of illumination. One can easily get an idea of the value of one footcandle, or just how much illumination is represented by one footcandle, by actually holding the paper one foot away from the standard candle.

Use of the Footcandle Meter

These units of measure, no matter how abstract they may seem at first acquaintance, have a definite concrete meaning, and can be measured by actual instruments. For the theatre manager the most useful of these measuring instruments is the "footcandle meter." This is a handy, compact, portable instrument which measures in footcandles the intensity of illumination on surfaces.

Perhaps the most important use of the footcandle meter in the theatre is in connection with maintenance. Unless the lamps and reflectors or enclosing glassware are cleaned regularly, dust collects and cuts off much of the light, so that in some cases only one-half of the amount of light that is paid for may be actually effective. The footcandle meter affords the best possible means of determining how much the intensity of illumination has dropped off and consequently how often the lighting equipment must be cleaned.

Good Sound and Good Seats spell BOX OFFICE SUCCESS!

THE talkies have changed box office appeal. Today, with hardly any "presentations," "jazz bands," etc., the battle for patronage is based on good pictures, good sound equipment, and COMFORT—especially in theatre seats where your patrons spend over 90% of their time. That is why a practical investment in Heywood-Wakefield theatre seats will help to increase box office profits. These luxurious theatre chairs have been developed to give restful comfort and enjoyment to your patrons. Publix, Warner Brothers, West Coast, Roxy, and scores of other prominent showmen have specified Heywood-Wakefield seats because they have patron appeal—box office pull. For detailed information, just drop a line to any of the Theatre Seating Division sales offices listed.

Calculating Floodlighting Intensities

THERE are many ways of lighting the front of a theatre, varying with local conditions. One of the simplest, as well as one of the most effective methods, is by means of floodlighting projectors. This method can be used in a large majority of cases. The projectors may be concealed on the marquee, on buildings across the street or on street poles. If none of these is available, ornamental street lighting poles have been developed on which the projectors may be mounted without detracting from the architectural effects of the building.

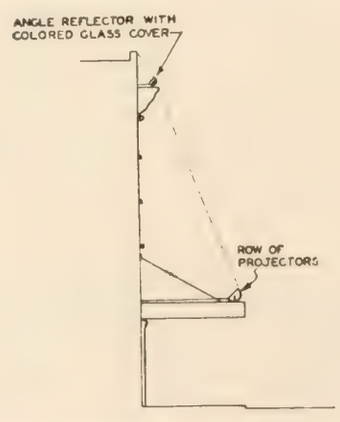
A floodlighting projector is a modified searchlight. Different types of projectors give different spreads of light. A projector with a parabolic reflector and a concentrated light source will throw a long, narrow beam having a spread of approximately 10°. This type is used when the unit is placed 150 feet or more away from the building. It is obvious that one type of projector would not give satisfactory results under all the different conditions to be met. If a projector giving a narrow beam is used at a very short range, a spotted or streaked effect is likely to result.

If it is desired to light a small area from a considerable distance (150 feet to 300 feet) a projector with a narrow beam should be chosen. If the front of the theatre is to be lighted from the marquee, it is probable that a wide angle projector must be selected. Under some conditions it may be desirable to spread the beam more than normal or change the shape of the beam so as to get a more efficient distribution. This may be done by using a form of lens in front of the projector, resulting in a more even distribution with a smaller number of projectors.

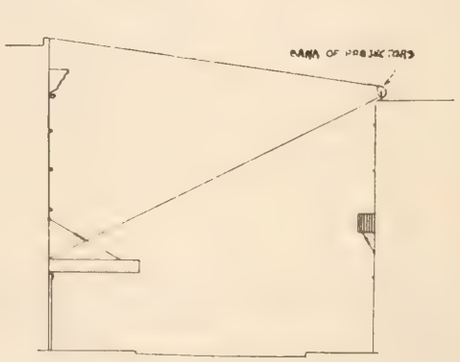
The method of calculating the number of projectors necessary to secure the proper intensity is very simple. Find the area of the surface to be lighted and multiply this area by the desired intensity in foot candles which gives the total lumens. Divide the total lumens by the lumens in the beam of the projector to be used and the result is the number of projectors necessary. Stated as a simple formula:

$$N = \frac{A \times I}{L}$$

N = Number of projectors.
A = Area of surface.
I = Lumens in beam of projector.



(This figure is secured from projector manufacturers' data.)



It is always necessary to make a reasonable allowance for overlapping of beams so that a uniform illumination is secured. It is also necessary to have enough projectors so that the beams cover the entire surface. As a check on the calculated results it is desirable to make a sketch of the area, to scale, and from the location of the projectors measure with a protractor the angle subtended by the area to be covered. Knowing the angle of spread of the projector (secured from manufacturers' data) it is at once evident whether sufficient projectors are provided to light the area uniformly.

There are many conditions where touches of color will add materially to the artistic effects. Niches or deep recesses thrown in shadow by the regular lighting may well be lighted by a suitable color. A parapet above a deep cornice would look well in color. These touches of color usually are very pleasing and are often more desirable than lighting the whole building in color. Colored light and white light cannot be mixed very satisfactorily because the white light is usually so much stronger that it washes out the color and the effect is lost.

The intensity required to make a theatre stand out conspicuously depends to a large extent on the color of the building and on the surrounding conditions. It is obvious that a theatre on a brightly lighted street with well lighted show windows and numerous electric signs would require more light than a building set in dark surroundings. The same is true of a dark colored or a light colored building. As a general indication of the intensities in foot candles necessary on a theatre the following table is given:

	Character of Surroundings
Building Surface	White Way ft. candles	Residence ft. candles
Dark colored — red brick, brown stone, etc.	20	15
Medium colored—concrete, granite, etc.	15	10
Light colored—glazed terra cotta, marble, etc.	10	5

Right—Method used to floodlight front by projectors located on building across street.

DON'T BE THE LAST to Cool Your Theatre

TODAY, the theatre that does not offer coolness is decidedly out of the running. Who wants to spend a sultry summer evening where it is close, stuffy and "hot as an oven"? On the other hand, folks are actually searching for heat relief—eager to go where it is cool.

Scores of notable theatres, including the leading circuits, are profiting by this dependable system—

HEALTHFUL Kooler-Aire

NATURE'S REFRIGERATION

It lowers the temperature as desired and sends great, engulfing billows of Pre-cooled, purified air throughout the theatre. The last word in refreshing comfort.

"SILENT partner of the talkies." A masterpiece of soundless operation, due to many exclusive features.

Get ready now for the hot weather—find out all about this proved equipment—the low initial outlay—the small operating cost — our convenient financing plan. Write today for the Kooler-Aire book and complete details.

used to carry off the impure air.

More than $125,000 in electrical equipment has been installed. Of this amount $60,000 has been expended on the projection room and its equipment and $20,000 on the sound equipment.

In the projection room, the building of which was supervised by Cass Hayes, consulting engineer for Pantages theatres, four projectors have been placed. They are equipped to handle both sound on film and on disc and are adaptable to Grandeur film. These projectors are run by two specially designed generators, claimed to be the largest in use in any theatre. These also are made to handle Grandeur film.

The projection booth which is 50 feet long and 16 feet wide has nine control stations. Beside the projectors there are three spot lights, two floods and a special effects machine. Next to the projection room is a fireproof film vault, a room for the resistance board and a monitor room for the public address system.

Horns of the public address system have been placed in various parts of the auditorium, backstage and lobby. They can be hooked up singly or all together.

For stage rehearsals the horns above the switchboard, scene shifters, orchestra and projection room as well as over the stage proper are connected to the microphone held by the stage director. Enabling him to speak with each station in a normal tone of voice, or to all of them simultaneously. If desired the public address system can be hooked up with the sound equipment to increase the volume.

Sound Box on Mono-Rail

On the stage, hung from a mono-rail track, is the sound box. This device carries eight horns and is moved off stage to one side when the presentations are on. Augmenting these are five extra horns, one at each side of the proscenium arch and three above the arch. This system will enable the operator to throw the sound to any part of the house with equal clarity.

In the electrical installation, one distributing board is used for the whole house and one for the signs on the front. The motors which supply the power here develop 1,000 horsepower. For the lights alone over 800 horsepower is needed.

The largest sign which is on the front of the building, is 70 feet high and five feet wide. It is illuminated with incandescent lights and the letters with Neon tubing. The sign reads, Pantages Hollywood.

The marquis will be lighed with the Neon system and the letters will be interchangeable. It is 50 feet long, ten feet wide and 11 feet high.

No Borders Used

Backstage is located the $45,000 switchboard which was designed by the Pantages engineers and which can be operated by remote control. One man is all that is needed to operate this board which is 27 feet in length and seven feet high. In the lighting of the stage no border lights are used. Instead five bridges each carrying 20 lamps will supply the light. Spot lights are also used. Lights on the stage will use 140,000 watts while those in the front of the balcony will take 16,000 watts as will those over the orchestra. With the remote control system the lighting arrangement can be pre-set and operated away from the switchboard.

RCA Non-Synch Records Go to Fulton, Stebbins

Lowell V. Calvert, manager of recording operations of RCA Photophone, has made arrangements with E. E. Fulton Co. of Chicago and the Stebbins Theatre Equipment Co. of Kansas City for the distribution of RCA Photophone Picture-Music library records for non-synchronous equipment, overture and exit records, records for talking picture turn tables and special shadowgraph needles. RCA Photophone has an extensive record library and claims the only 100 per cent shadowgraph steel needle for sound equipment.

Atmospheric Motif In New York Houses

By BEN SHERMAN

President Manhattan Playhouses of New York

Atmospheric neighborhood theatres are the coming thing. And to prove I am right I am spending thousands of dollars on one of our theatres recently closed for alterations.

Not so long ago we completely renovated and transformed the Harlem Grand in East 125th St. from a theatre of the old type into a veritable garden of dreams. This is one theatre, the like of which will not be found anywhere from the Battery to 125th street. It is atmospheric in design with a slight Spanish motif, as far as the side balcony boxes are concerned. It was an experiment but one for which I am very much satisfied with the results.

Neighborhood audiences have visited the larger theatres in downtown sections and know the beautiful when they see it. They demand the best not only on the talking screens but in comfort and convenience.

Courtesy fits in very well in any kind of a theatre and the resident manager must impress this on his staff but in a theatre properly attractive for the ever changing likes and dislikes of their patrons the Broadway style of courtesy plus service plus audible entertainment are at all times demanded.

Cites Modernistic Objection

I personally do not care for the so-called modern art type of theatre. It is too detracting even though the lighting has been planned and carried out by experts. When I visit a theatre I am all set to enjoy a show that is on the screen not to be detracted by fancy lighting and garnish or outlandish fittings that detract from the screen.

On Fifth Avenue we own a theatre that will be opened early in August completely renovated in real Spanish style and fully and properly equipped for talking pictures and stage shows. The policy will be straight Spanish pictures and stage presentations.

B.&K. Sprucs Up Old Houses in Chi

CHICAGO—"Old theatres for new" is becoming a rallying cry in Chicago and the Middle West.

Circuits—large and small—have learned this spring, as perhaps never before, that a crew of men who know their trade working under contractors familiar with the tricks of their business can turn frayed and dilapidated houses into theatres that shine like new.

Theatres don't stay fresh unless they are kept that way. They require constant care and perpetual attention to keep them up to snuff.

In Chicago, two recent instances of remodelling illustrate the point. The houses are the Diversey and the Belmont, both now part of the Publix-Balaban and Katz group. Each is situated in a comparatively "close-in" neighborhood, well built up and with established theatre trade. Neither offers much inducement to new theatre construction.

New Equipment Goes In

The Century, formerly the Diversey, is a 3,300-seat house, built in 1925. Levy & Klein of Chicago were the architects. Publix-B. & K. took it over from Ascher Bros. in March of this year and spent $120,000 on alterations and improvements before reopening. New interior equipment included sound and projection apparatus, acoustical treatment, curtains and drapes, including a stage curtain which takes colored lighting effects in variegated form. There are but three theatres in Chicago equipped with this type of curtain, the third having been installed at the Chicago some time ago. Minor stage alterations and replacement of certain general equipment comprised the balance of the interior improvements.

The exterior of the building was cleaned down with acid treatment. A new marquee was installed and improvements made in the vertical street sign. General cleaning of lobby and auditorium was also done.

The Belmont is a 3,300-seat house, originally built about five years ago for Lubliner and Trinz by Walter Ahschlaber, Chicago architect. It was being operated by RKO when taken over by Publix-B. & K., early in May of this year, and $100,000 spent on improvements before reopening.

The interior replacements, as in the case of the Century, were mostly with a view to the improvement of sound reproduction. New Western Electric equipment was installed. The interior received supplementary acoustical treatment. Minor stage alterations were made and the orchestra pit was converted into a decorative stage foreground, giving the appearance of a flower garden, which can be removed at will. New curtains and drapes were hung and a new auditorium lighting system installed. New carpeting was placed in the lobby, which had been redecorated and renovated.

The exterior was cleaned with acid, a new marquee erected, and the vertical street sign revamped. The Belmont, under RKO management, was a presentation house. It now has lobby acts, but no stage show.

Both theatres have been made units of the Publix-Great States Circuit. The remodelling operations were specified and supervised by the maintenance and construction department of Publix-B. & K., of which E. M. Glucksman is district manager. About one week was required for completion of the remodelling at both houses.

Wide Films Require New Type of Theatre

General adoption of the new "wide film" will cost the picture industry in the neighborhood of $350,000,000, Campbell MacCulloch declares in an article in the current issue of "Motion Picture Magazine."

Most of the expense will have to be borne by theatre owners, who have only just recovered from having their houses wired for talkies, he says. Now some fifty thousand perfectly good, modern, and costly projection-machines will either be scrapped entirely or rebuilt. New screens will also be required. All of which runs into some sixty million dollars. But worse yet most theatres will have to be entirely rebuilt for the new wide films. And that according to Mr. MacCulloch will cost at least two hundred million dollars. Finally, there is the added expense to producers of new cameras, double width film, new sound apparatus, etc.

Despite the prospect of such huge outlays the industry will be forced to adopt the wide film, in the opinion of this writer. It is the inevitable next step after talking pictures, he thinks. "In the silent picture days you could move back to long shots, and for accent you'd simply come up to a close-up; but with talkies that won't work," he declares. "You can't have a stentorian voice emanating from a tiny figure on an ordinary screen. It doesn't hitch with reason. And yet if the voice is to reach the back rows, it must have volume. The ordinary screen figure in a long shot is probably two or three feet tall. In a medium shot or close-up, it reaches six or ten feet. In a wide film, the figure may reach a height of 18 feet. You can see that! And he can have a voice you can hear, too!

New houses, MacCulloch contends, will be needed, first, because the screen will have to be much further away from the first row seats so that the eye can cover it without any motion of the head, and, second, because present-day stages are seldom forty feet wide.

Watch Horns to Improve Sound

charging in the faulty set, resulting in a "sulphated" condition, which is another type of premature deterioration. The preventative for this trouble is periodic disconnection of the terminals and thorough cleansing of lugs and lead straps.

The lead should be scraped until bright and then immediately coated with non-oxide grease. The connections may then be remade and the wing bolts tightened firmly, squeezing out excess grease. A good electric connection will result because of the crystaline structure of the lead, the crystal peaks piercing the grease and connecting with the adjacent crystal peaks.

Finally, we must remember that in order to obtain a faithful indication of the condition of the battery we must have a good quality hydrometer and use it properly. The hydrometer supplied with the equipment is excellent and in case of damage should be replaced by one of the same type.

Where inferior hydrometers have been used to replace broken ones considerable trouble has been experienced by inaccurate readings which led to improper conclusions as to the state of the batteries. The daily hydrometer readings must be carefully recorded on the storage battery logs, because it is only by analysis of these readings that the service engineer is able to maintain the correct charging rate and the proper charged condition of the batteries.

The most common cause of faulty reproduction of sound film is an accumulation of dirt in the optical system. Dirt, dust or oil can cause all manner of objectionable noises in the reproduced sound in addition to causing a distinct loss of volume.

The first point of attack in preventing such noises in the reproduction of sound on film is obviously close attention to cleanliness of the film. Any mark on the film which will vary the light intensity into the photo-electric cell will cause a sound and this mark may be either the original recording on the film or foreign particles of dust, dirt or oil. The amplifying system will magnify impartially all sound signals presented for that purpose, whether recorded sound or film noise.

Stresses Care in Rewinding

If care is not exercised in the handling of the film while rewinding or cleaning, scratches may result which will produce same effects as dust particles. Considering that practically all of the foreign particles that accumulate in the aperture of the sound optical system are collected from the film as it passes through, it is self evident that to prevent film noises extreme care should be taken in the handling and cleaning of the film.

When film is kept free from oil and dust less cleaning will be necessary in the optical slit and pressure pad of the aperture assembly. An accumulation of dust vibrating in the direct path of the light in the optical slit will cause a flutter in the reproduced sound. Dried oil or emulsion on the pressure pad will frequently cause the film to pass through at an uneven speed which results in "flutter." New and untreated film is particularly apt to cause trouble of this type because the emulsion is soft.

Oil from the film lodged in the optical slit has been known to boil or vibrate in such a way as to result in a sort of "frying" noise in the sound in the theatre.

Dirt which remains stationary in the slit proper results in a loss of volume because of the decrease of light passed.

"Over-Lubrication" a Hazard

Care must be taken to clean this thoroughly daily with pipe cleaner and stiff toothbrush and to inspect the pressure pads and sound aperture plate. It would be well to bend the pipe cleaner in a hairpin shape before using to avoid scratching the sound aperture plate.

One of the most prolific sources of trouble is "over-lubrication." Over-lubricating, combined with neglect of cleaning, is bad in the projection of silent pictures, but is positively disastrous when running sound film. If the lubrication instructions for the projector head are carefully followed in conjunction with the lubrication chart and instructions given in the Western Electric operating instruction book, much of the film noise will be eliminated. Dried or gummy oil from oily film will often cause the same trouble that is experienced in unprocessed film by making the tension pad or plate sticky.

"Cool Comfort" is New Loew's Slogan

"COMFORTABLY COOL" is the slogan decided upon by Loew's to emphasize its cooling systems this summer. While pointing out that the line, "$100,000 cooling plant," is a good one to serve that purpose, the circuit emphasizes that the slogan adopted will counteract complaints against sudden draughts and chills.

Loew managers have been instructed to map their campaigns for selling their cooling plants to the public. The refrigeration systems are termed all-summer headliners, "a star who'll play for you all summer and who'll draw crowds to your box office."

"In hot weather you sell cool comfort to your patrons. And it's a great selling argument," the company points out. "In winter, comparatively few people go to the theatre to keep warm. But in summer thousands go to shows to keep cool!

"Selling your cooling plant calls for a high degree of salesmanship. Thoughtless, haphazard selling won't do the trick. Careless advertising of your cooling plant can do more harm than good.

"When refrigeration plants were first installed in theatres, they were not properly operated. Theatres were too cool, or seemed that way. Draughts caused discomfort. The cooling plant got a black eye.

Now Operated Right

"Now, however, theatre engineers and managers know more about refrigeration and control of cooling plants. And their operation now provides really comfortable and healthful coolness. SELL THAT IDEA!

"Don't sell 'coolness' alone. Sell the idea that temperature is only one phase of your 'weather factory.' You do not merely cool the air. You dehumidify it (dry it!) and you purify it. Humidity causes more discomfort than heat. Tell your customers that you provide dry, clean air—not just cold, clammy air.

"The old idea of advertising 'always 70 degrees' is wrong. Seventy degrees on a 100-degree day would cause discomfort. And a lot of people know it. 'The Coolest Place in Town' is also worn out as a slogan.

"Unfortunately, in the old days, before refrigeration, theatres used advertising slogans and displays telling how cool they were. Almost every selling point which could be legitimately used now was used falsely then. So we must pick our publicity methods carefully. We must convince our public that we really have machinery to control our interior 'weather.'

Sell Comfort Idea

"Plant stories about the expert who manufactures your weather. Use a little space in your ads all through the summer to sell your 'cool comfort.' Keep reminding your patrons that they are comfortable—by trailer copy. People take things for granted if you don't impress them frequently with the advantages you offer.

Good Sound—How?

POOR sound, a bugaboo of the industry. Good pictures, produced and recorded with meticulous care, often sound like a mess of barking dogs when they reach the theatre.

Why? And what can be done about it?

The answers are many, for the problems involved are complex. Reading THE SHOWMAN will give you important means of improving reproduction in the theatre. It's worth reading—and remembering.

Sound-Absorbing Chairs Required

CHICAGO—Velour or mohair chairs manufactured by American Seating Co., have a sound absorption value of from 2.6 to 3.6 units each, contrasted with 1.3 units each for an imitation leather chair and 0.30 units each for a plain plywood chair. This was determined in tests conducted by Professor Watson of the University of Illinois.

"The average absorption value of the human being has been determined at 4.7 units each," the company states. "Because of this relatively high value, it is evident that a theatre or auditorium having the proper reverberation time when fully occupied, if not equipped with a balancing factor, may be poor acoustically when partially empty. For this reason, upholstered chairs are found to have the necessary absorption value to establish them as a satisfactory balancing factor, the absorption of the human body being replaced, when the seat is empty, by the absorption of the seat itself."

Its absorbent quality, the company believes, will result in a sharp trend toward upholstery such as mohair and other deep pile fabrics.

Tests emphasized that absorption of sound depends upon porosity and dependability, which makes the pile of mohair and velour superior to smooth imitation leather and plywood.

10 Per Cent Greater Down

Absorption of a chair is about ten per cent greater with the seat down than when it is up, Prof. Watson's test shows. The reason is that there is additional surface exposed when the seat is down. However, when not occupied and thus effective for absorption, theatre seats usually are up. Accordingly, Prof. Watson's tests were conducted with seats up. The absorption units were computed in four pitches and the average given. These four pitches cover the range of sound encountered under normal conditions.

In determining how much absorption is obtained per square foot of floor space occupied by American theatre chairs, the following has been worked out on the basis of three rows of chairs, six chairs to each row. Taking the rows 34 inches apart, back to back, and leaving 16 inches more to include the edge of the upturned seat on the front row, gives seven feet. Taking the chairs as 20 inches wide, gives 20 times 6, or which is 120 inches, or 10 feet. The area covered by the three rows of seats is then seven times ten, or 70 square feet. The absorption of 18 mohair No. 7080 chairs is 18 × 3.2 or 57.6 ÷ 70 equals .82 units per square foot.

"Sound Isolators" Meet Two Problems

NEW patented structural products acquired by Johns-Manville Corp., through acquisition of the Stevens Sound Proofing Co., Chicago, are designed to meet two problems. The method of treating the first, which is sound installation, is the literal breaking of solid contacts between finished surfaces and their subsurfaces, with "sound isolators" consisting of pressed steel or cast-iron chairs lined with hair felt which retard the communication of vibration and sound from one rigid member to another. Following the installation of these isolators, floors and ceilings are filled with fireproof rock wool and the walls also solidly lined with absorbent material.

The other development, and a no less interesting one, is for the damping of vibration set up by running machinery, preventing it from passing through the floor into the steel members of the building and being transmitted to other parts of the structure. Special anti-vibration platforms supporting such machinery are designed after careful study of the individual problem. The platforms contain double stringers resting on a series of the felt-lined sound isolators. The vibrations are broken up and damped by the alternate layers of felt, metal and wood, instead of being allowed to pass through the building and set up sound waves in other rooms. The enclosed platform is entirely filled with rock wool to further dampen the vibration.

Weight Distributed

In all cases the design is based on the weight of the machine and the characteristics of its operation. The weight is distributed to the "chairs" by the double series of stringers and each chair carries an equal part of the load. Thus, the felts remain soft and resilient and as no bolts or other fastenings are used to tie the platform directly to the floor, there is little chance of vibrations being carried by such means. Only spot contacts exist, and these are effectively buffed with resilient, absorbent felt linings.

The system is claimed to have demonstrated its effectiveness under many severe conditions, as for instance in successfully insulating bowling alleys over a theatre, printing presses and other machinery over offices, and broadcasting studios adjacent to one another.

Building in Onawa

Omaha—Onawa, Ia., will have a new $35,000 theatre of Spanish design, two stories high, and with a seating capacity of 600. Present owners of the Onawa Opera House are financing the new project.

Manager T. R. Tubman is boosting current attractions through this radio medium, concerts being given over Station CNRO.

THE

Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

ELECTRIC current will flow between two bodies of different potential or between two points of different potential if they are connected or joined with a medium which will allow the flow of such electric current or the flow of electrons. How the two bodies acquire their charge or how the potential is secured is of no consequence. Whether this value of potential is constant, instantaneous or variable is a matter of design. The fact remains that the potential present or rather the difference of potential cause the motion of the electrons and the flow of electric current. The unit of potential difference is known as the volt.

Now, we showed how it is possible to have a difference of potential within an electric field. It is just as simple to show how, in an electric circuit, it is possible to have a difference of potential between parts of the circuit or any two points in the circuit. Imagine some devices which can create electric force, that is, a difference of potential may be maintained constant. Such a device is shown in Figure 2, wherein a difference of potential of 10 volts is maintained between the — and the + sign. We connect to this source of potential a conductor, with one part greatly enlarged. We have a flow of electrons in the direction shown by the arrow, the electrons being indicated by the minus signs within the large rectangle.

Point A is 10 volts positive with respect to point B and point B is ten volts negative with respect to point A. Now we can select two points in the conductor which will be of certain polarity with respect to either A or B. If we consider A as the starting point, all parts of that conductor may be classed as negative with respect to A, since they are connected to B and function as if the point B had been extended to point A and separated therefrom by an infinitesimally small distance. The same is true if point B is taken as the reference point, in which case all parts of the conductor are then positive with respect to the point B because we can assume the conductor to be an extension of the point A.

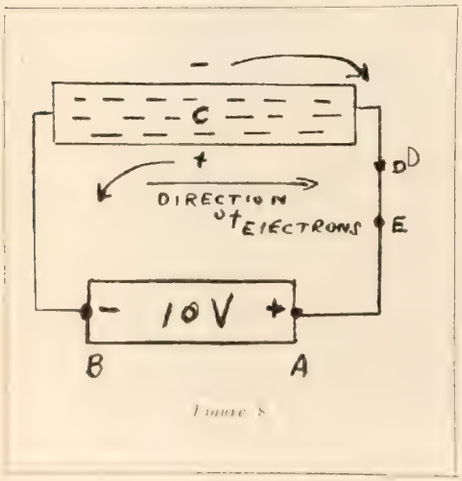

Figure 8

Consequently, the point C midway between A and B can be classed as positive with respect to B and negative with respect to A. If we select two other points, say D and E, either or both may be positive with respect to B and negative with respect to A. On the other hand, these two points D and E bear some relation to each other. If E is classed as an extension of A, then D is negative with respect to E, since it is negative with respect to A. Continuing, E may be classed as positive with respect to D, just as E is positive with respect to B. Now if the points D and E represent two sections of the conductor and we have a flow of electrons within the conductor, a difference of potential will be present across the points D and E. The same is true between any other two points in the circuit. This difference of potential may be of unit value or may be a fraction of the unit value.

Lesson Five

BATTERIES, dry cells and potentials and the part they play in the conduct of sound apparatus are discussed by John F. Rider in this article which is Lesson Five in his series appearing exclusively in Motion Picture News.

In view of the fact that decimals of the unit of potential are encountered in electrical circuits, it is necessary to apply convenient values to represent the decimals. The following is the list of decimal designations:

1 volt.
1 millivolt = a thousandth part of a volt = .001 volt.
1 microvolt = millionth part of a volt = .000001 volt.

As one would imagine, other fraction values are applied to represent some value of voltage in excess of the above decimals, yet less than the unit. For example, 49 millivolts would be .049 volt. Then again, we have values of voltage in excess of the unit value, in which case the regular numerical indication is used.

Voltage is, of course, present in all electrical circuits, but as will be evident later, it is not always constant in value. In some cases it rises and falls and, to arrive at some conclusion, it is necessary to consider the instantaneous value. Therefore, when specifying voltage it is customary to use the letter E (capital) to designate a steady or constant voltage and to the small letter "e" to designate an instantaneous value of voltage. In some cases voltage is designated with a letter V instead of the usual E.

A difference of potential between two bodies or two points cause a motion of charges. The difference of potential, however, is merely a level for comparison to determine the tendency of the charges to move. The force which actually causes the charges to move or drives the current through the conductor (circuit) is known as the electromotive force, abbreviated emf. and frequently referred to as voltage. One should distinguish between the volt and voltage. Voltage, as is evident, is a force, whereas the volt specifies the level or magnitude of this force.

Reference to voltage or emf., therefore, refers to a force which causes the flow of electric current. One should, however, understand that electricity is not a source of energy. It is a medium whereby energy may be transferred from one source to another, from one form to another. That force, voltage or emf., may be produced in various ways. In other words, devices may be developed which will provide a difference of potential which can be utilized to cause a motion of charges and a flow of electric current. Such a force may be produced by the following four means:

1. Friction.
2. Chemical action.
3. Thermal action.
4. Induction.

Of these four systems, the first is not practical.

Batteries

The chemical means of producing electromotive force is typified by the batteries we know today. These reactions constitute a conversion of chemical energy into electrical energy, wherein the atoms of the elements undergo a change; a flow of electrons is created between the elements, through the electrolyte, a difference of potential is set up and electric current flows when a wire is connected to the terminals of the battery.

Generally speaking, batteries in use today are classified in two ways: one, primary cells, and two, secondary cells. This distinction is present in order to distinguish between cells of such type that the process of energy conversion is one way and cells of such type that two-way conversion is possible. After all is said and done, assuming a certain chemical constituency of a cell, the chemical reaction necessary to produce the electromotive force or difference of potential between the terminals is definitely limited by the size and mass of the elements. Once this cycle of chemical reaction has been completed and further flow of charges is impossible because the chemicals have deteriorated or changed, the cell must be discarded if the process of chemical reaction is not such that it may be reversed so as to restore the chemicals to their original condition. The structure of the primary cell is such that after exhaustion of the chemicals by virtue of the interaction during the time that the correct electromotive force is being developed, the cell must be discarded, since it is of no further utility. Such batteries are the No. 6 dry cells, the regular B and C batteries and other units bearing the designations of "dry cells."

The secondary cell, on the other hand, is of different structure. The original action in this form of cell is a conversion of chemical energy into electrical energy. When the chemical structure has reached its final state and the battery is classified as exhausted because the electromotive force developed is not the correct value of the structure, it is possible to restore the chemicals to their original condition by subjecting them to an electrical reaction, so that electrical energy is converted into chemical energy. This cycle is known as the "charging" of a battery and is possible in the case of "wet" or "storage" types of cells. Recharging of dry cells has been attempted in the past, but the results were very unfruitful.

Now, the subject of storage batteries is of interest because they are to be found in very many talkie installations. As a matter of fact, the same is true of the dry batteries. We believe that it is possible to combine practical data with the theory being outlined and this is a good time to start such discussion.

Noise in Dry Cells

The electromotive force developed within a dry cell by means of the chemical action depends, if the potential is to be constant, upon a uniform flow of charges within the cell, or uniform decomposition of the elements.

This is much more easily said than done. Any radical moment of excessive reaction or decomposition will result in a momentary increase in the rate of electronic flow, thus momentarily increasing the difference of potential and altering the status of the entire circuit connected to the source of emf. Such a condition produces noise. The same, of course, is true if the decomposition within the cell is such that there is sudden decrease in the electronic flow and a consequent drop in potential. The actual interpretation of electric current represented as noise will follow later in the text. In view of the fact that actual rejuvenation of the dry cell is impractical, it is needless to dwell upon the chemical action within the unit.

Such is not the case in the storage battery. Here the chemical reaction is of interest because it is reversed and the successful maintenance of this type of cell depends entirely upon careful reversal of the chemical action within the cell. This is the work of the operator even today, although it is doubtful if even a few of the men who read these pages actually realize what is transpiring in the cell. The lead acid type of cell is most popular and shall be dealt with first. This type of battery employs lead plate immersed in a solution of sulphuric acid and water, the fluid consisting of the acid and the water being known as the electrolyte.

The actual construction of the active plates is a matter of individual manufacture, but the constituency of these plates is generally uniform. One such plate is in the form of a grid, just as in home ovens. The plates are made of an alloy of lead and antimony. Into the opening of these grids is placed a paste consisting of lead oxides. Active plates made in this manner are "formed," that is, a chemical action is created by the application of an electrical potential from a certain source. During this "forming" process, the active filler is formed into lead peroxide (PbO_2). This set of plates is known as the positive plate, and has a dark brown color.

Another set of plates in the cell, functioning as the negative terminal and so connected during the "forming" process, is changed from a combination of lead oxides to sponge lead. The negative plates are of dull gray color.

The actual assembly of the plates is somewhat more complex than herein described. Each complete battery consists of a number of cells, frequently indicated by being individual jars interconnected with a heavy lead conductor, or when the individual cells are not visible, by a pair of connections upon a cover, these connections being connected to others within the major container so that six terminals may be visible upon a complete battery consisting of three cells; two terminals being alloted to each cell.

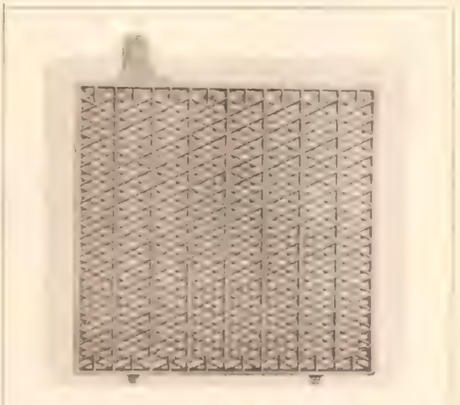
The major terminals of the complete battery are frequently designated by certain symbols or letters or color. The positive plate is frequently marked with red paint, bears the plus sign or is marked POS. The negative plate is marked with a minus sign or bears the letters NEG. Since the construction of the complete battery may be described by stating the construction of a single cell, any statements relative to a single cell apply to all the cells in that battery.

Each cell, as we stated, has its own positive and negative terminals. A set of plates comprise the active materials connected to these terminals, and the complete set of plates for each terminal is referred to as the plate, although it actually consists of a number of plates, separated by wood slats or partitions of such nature that they allow electrolytic conduction, yet function to separate one plate from the next. In some instances these separators are of hard rubber instead of wood.

The following will give an idea of the chemical action within the cell of the lead-acid type of battery during the time that it is producing the required electromotive force or developing the required potential.

[illegible] the state quoted as the period of discharge.

The electrolyte, as we stated, consists of water and pure sulphuric acid. During the period of discharge, the sulphuric acid combines with the sponge lead of the negative plate, forming lead sulphate ($PbSO_4$) and with the lead peroxide of the positive plate, once again forming lead sulphate. This action transforms chemical energy into electrical energy. Supplementary to the above reaction, the electrolyte gradually becomes weaker, since the sulphuric acid combines with the plates and by the amount of water formed. In addition, the lead sulphate produced retards the flow of acid through the plates until such time when normal action of the acid is impossible. The cell is then said to be discharged, the difference of potential between the terminals is decreased and recharging of the cell is necessary.



Now, in connection with the period of discharge, it is necessary to remember that the lead sulphate formed upon the plates hardens with age and the longer the state of discharge, or the longer the period between discharge and actual charging the harder will it be to secure the proper reversal of chemical action, thus interfering with the normal performance of the cell.

Action During Charge of Lead-Acid Cell

During the period of charge, the chemical action detailed is reversed. The sulphate formed by the combination of the sulphuric acid with the sponge lead and the lead oxide is returned to the electrolyte. The plates approach their normal state and the electrolyte solution gradually becomes the pure sulphuric acid diluted with water. After the sulphate is removed from the plates and the electrolyte is again normal, the acid action becomes normal and the cell is fully charged when no more sulphate remains upon the plates.

This process of charging consists of passing a direct current through the cell. (The significance of direct current will be discussed in the near future.) Now, the period of charge and the indication of charge depends entirely upon the cell in use and the design of the cell. The combination of the sulphuric acid and the water has a definite specific gravity, a factor determined by the manufacturer of the battery. Devices are available for the determination of the specific gravity of the cell, and this device is far superior to the measurement of voltage developed by the cell, since the electromotive force or potential developed by the cell is not the true indication of the state

Butterfield Building 20; Up to 100 by 1931

Detroit—One hundred theatres in Michigan, outside of Detroit, will comprise the Butterfield circuit by the end of 1930, under expansion plans under way or completed. Three houses are to be built in the upper peninsula, invasion of which was begun with building of a theatre at Saulte Ste. Marie. Butterfield recently completed an inspection tour of the peninsula. The year's building program calls for 20 theatres in 15 cities and towns of the state.

Joins Newark Firm

Newark—C. E. Stahl has been elected a director and named general manager of the Arcturus Radio Tube Co.

$25,000 for Canopy

Omaha—Twenty-five thousand dollars is to be spent on a modern canopy, new front lighting and electric signs for the World, Everett Cummings, divisional manager of Publix, says. Work is to start at once.

The World canopy was removed five years ago after litigation. The new one will be of an entirely different type so as to conform with city ordinances and also to conform architecturally to the building.

Find Parking Space for Autos Improves Business

Providing proper parking space for theatres is attracting the attention of many showmen, who find the move stimulates business. Leasing of vacant lots for free parking space is the ideal arrangement, but where this is impractical, hook-ups with garages are made.

Under some arrangements used, the patron pays for his parking, and then receives a stub good for admission to the theatre. This blocks "ringers" from using the theatre's parking space.

Outdoor parking spaces lighted with floods offer a means for good publicity for the theatre. In the case of a garage, mention in advertising, on the screen and possibly a lobby card often turns the trick of securing reduced rates for theatre patrons.

Hard Usage for Roxy Rug

Amsterdam, N. Y.—Twenty-five million pairs of feet crossing over it in three years, without any special outside attention or renovation other than the services of the theatre staff is the record of the foyer rug of the Roxy in New York, the Mohawk Carpet Mills has been advised by C. W. Griswold, Roxy manager. The firm claims the rug is the world's largest oval woven floor covering.

of the cell unless the cell is so arranged that an appreciable amount of electric current is flowing from the cell. That is to say, the electromotive force developed by the cell is utilized to force current through some external device.

One would naturally imagine that a storage battery or a bank of storage batteries is prime for use right after charging, since the voltage would be highest at that time. Such is not the case. The batteries bubble during the charging period and are very noisy. Recharged batteries should not be put into use until an appreciable period of time subsequent to the charging, at least not until all sign of bubbling vanishes. We shall furnish more complete maintenance data upon this type of cell in a later part of this course. We shall at this time show the formation of what is known as the diamond grid plate. This is shown in Figure 9. An idea of the structure of a cell made by the Philadelphia Storage Battery Company is shown in Figure 10 and a complete battery consisting of three cells with a charge indicator in the middle cell (this cell is known as the pilot cell) is shown in Figure 11. Figures 9, 10 and 11 are by courtesy of the Philadelphia Storage Battery Company.

This does not conclude all that will be said about storage batteries. Much more is to follow in subsequent lessons.

Palace, R-K-O Ace Vaude House Wired for Sound

The Palace, New York R-K-O's ace vaudeville house, has supplanted its silent picture apparatus with RCA Photophone sound equipment. At the present time, due to the fact that its vaudeville policy of the past twenty years remains unchanged, only sound news reels are presented at the Palace.

Says Equipment Trade Improves

Des Moines—Arthur Thiele, manager of the Des Moines Theatre Supply Co., states that business is showing an increase of between 30 and 35 per cent over last year. Ten per cent of this he attributes to the introduction of sound and 25 per cent to general better business conditions. He states, however, that collections are slow, and slower this month than last. This he attributes to the fact that sound equipment payments causing a heavy drain on some theatres. The payments must be met or out goes the equipment. "Too many theatre men must buy for their smaller houses the type of equipment used by their big town competitors. After thirty days time there is no greater value to them in the more expensive equipment and the payments are too big for the type of theatre."

Shelbyville, Ind.—Rembusch Screen Co. has added a new sound screen and silencer to its line of sound equipment, which includes turntables, amplifiers, mixers, lenses and pickups. The new screen is perforated only where the sound goes through, and the perforation is declared invisible during projection.

Syncrodisk Junior for Small Theatres Ready

Rochester—Designed for smaller theatres, Syncrodisk junior model has been placed on the market by the Weber Machine Corp.

The firm manufacturers Synchrodisk turntables, sound-on-film reproducer and other sound picture products.

The new junior model is a turntable unit which sells for $150 per pair including pickups and changeover fader. The purchaser has his choice of Audak or Erla pickups.

Nat'l Theatre Supply Handling Lustrolite

Chicago—Distribution of Lustrolite changeable letter signs has been taken over by National Theatre Supply Co. Under the arrangement, Lustrolite engineers are to be located at key cities to work in co-operation with National representatives. The Lustrolite company of Davenport, Ia., was formed eight years ago. These engineers will aid theatre owners and architects with advisory service on all electrical merchandising.

Van Horne Develops a New Radio Tube Checker

Franklin, O.—A new and simplified type of radio tube checker has been developed at the Van Horne Tube Co., laboratory by E. T. Flewelling. Dr. Van Horne and Flewelling have expanded research and development laboratories here. Van Horne tubes are used sound devices.

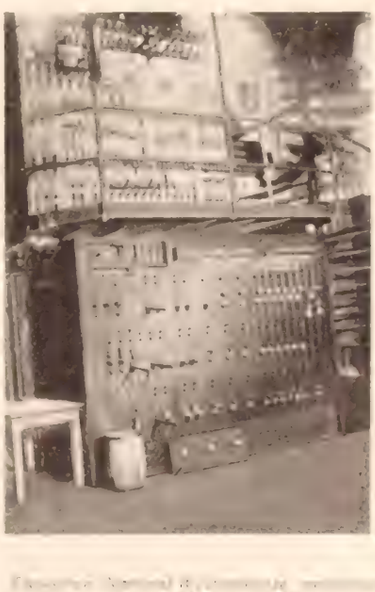
New Model Rheostat

Charles Bessler & Co., New York, has introduced a new model rheostat for motion picture work to be marketed under the trade name of Besco, and for which the sponsors claim several special features, among which are the same coefficient operating hot or cold and proof against rust. Milton Major is in charge of distribution and sales of the new Bessler product.

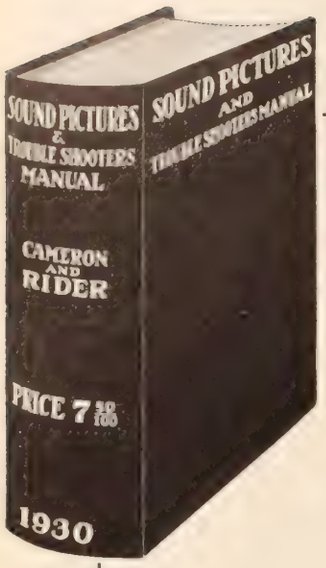
New Carbon Jaw For Reflectors

Chicago—Designed for use with the Peerless high amperage reflector arc lamp a new carbon contact jaw has been placed on the market by the Fogelberg Engineering Co. The jaw will be sold through independent supply dealers.

The new carbon jaw is composed of two castings and among the claims advanced for it are the fact that there is no breaking point from the wire terminal to the point of carbon contact. It is also claimed that due to the "V" type design contact the carbon jaw rides parallel with the carbon facilitating keeping the positive crater at the focal point.



Junior Elec-Tro-Fone Model on the Market



St. Paul—Junior model of Elec-Tro-Fone has been placed on the market by Fred H. Strom, veteran Twin City sound equipment inventor and manufacturer. The junior will sell at $250 per pair, the price including fader and pickup. The de luxe model is double the price.

Strom also is manufacturing a new synchronous motor gear drive with General Electric motor.

Frees Electricians to Discharge Other Jobs

Milwaukee—Electrician of the Palace here now can work on the stage floor, assisting with making of sets and other stage routine as a result of the new type "remote dead front." Westinghouse switchboard. Where most old type switchboards necessitated constant attention of the electrician, the new board releases him sufficiently to perform other duties on the stage. The board eliminates the danger to safety of old style switchboards with open knife switches.

Danger to Theatre In Prize Contests

timate attraction of the picture industry and yet, what is happening today? The small town that was given a posting of 5,000 sheets is now given less than 2,000. The circus learned its lesson. The circus wasn't too big to learn. Indiscriminate billposting wasn't worth the cost of the paper. A concentrated, well thought out posting campaign did sell tickets.

Study your situation! Are you posting enough paper? Are you posting too much paper? Is it the right kind? Is it going on the best location obtainable?

Contest Selection Important

When and where? What kind of contests are good? You will find opinion will differ as to the benefit derived by the theatre from a contest. True it is there are many that help. It is equally true many a contest that got page after page of publicity, hurt the theatre more than it helped.

One thing you must remember. For one person that benefits through a theatre contest where prizes are given there are many hundreds that get nothing for their effort. One person boosts for you, the others hold a grudge because they did not win.

Here is an instance of how two contests running at the same theatre with different newspapers may differ in their results. A few years ago, in San Francisco, we arranged with an afternoon paper for a "masked player" contest sponsored by a Hollywood studio. The prizes amounted to $200 each week. The trick was to guess the name of the player; name three pictures in which the player has appeared and coin an advertising slogan for that player.

In a morning paper, a tabloid, we had another contest. The prize was $1 a day and the trick was a 100-word story of your most amusing experience.

The contest in the morning paper with $1 daily in prize money, ran 40 to 1 in replies to the afternoon paper with a weekly prize of $200. Why? Nobody knew the answer.

If you are going into a contest with a newspaper, be sure that your contest rules do not violate the state lottery laws.

If you have the choice of two or more newspapers, which is best suited to the contest? Some papers are poison on contests. For instance the readers of the Los Angeles Times would not be interested in a contest to the same degree as the readers of the little tabloid, the Daily News.

A contest calling for a test of skill is always best.

Essays are good, when they can be landed on the woman's page of a paper.

Coloring contest for youngsters, the printing of an outline drawing of a scene from a production with the kids competing in the coloring of that scene and then the originality in which it is arranged for entering the contest always draw big returns.

If you do land a contest of this sort you can always tie it up with a local merchant to make a window display of the entries, with the winners featured, together with stills of your attraction.

When planning a contest consider its possibilities . . .

1. Will it sell tickets?
2. Will the newspaper co-operate with news page space?
3. Has it possibilities for co-operative newspaper display advertising?
4. Has it exploitation possibilities?
5. Is it fool proof?
6. Will it create good will?
7. Is it clear and understandable?
8. Does it offer merchant co-operation through window display?
9. Has it a general or class appeal?
10. Has it been done before? If so what was the result?

Play Up Coolness, Goldberg Slogan

Utica, N. Y.—Stress coolness in lobby display and newspaper advertising, Harry D. Goldburg, chief of the upstate division of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, has ordered.

"Have your lobby and theatre reflect coolness he has advised." Stay away from red. Get into the greens and blues, grays and straws for your display colors.

"Now, more than ever before, you should have floral displays in your lobby and foyer. Hanging baskets should work nicely into every lobby.

"Have you ever tried hanging ribbons over your open doors, spaced an inch or an inch and a half apart and hanging a foot or a foot and a half below the top of the opening? They always create a cooling effect, as they are certain to be moved around by the circulation of the air.

"Get thinking of a slogan that will carry the thought of coolness. Here are a few samples: 'Cool as a mountain top,' 'The Blank is the coolest summer resort in 'Blanksville,' 'It's always cool at the Blank, Doctors recommend the Blank for its clean, cool air.' "

Claim Largest Sign

Providence—The new Publix theatre, which will open sometime in June, will have the largest theatrical upright sign in New England, the management says. The display board is 38 feet in height. The theatre formerly was the Strand, downtown first run.

Slants Go Straight

DES MOINES—The kinks will be removed from theatre floor of the Des Moines, which previously slanted to the center of the house, as part of a program of improvements which will cost $100,000. The brushing up process will embrace a new upright sign, a new marquee similar to the Paramount, next door, and changes in the inner lobby which will be carpeted and equipped with lounges, like the upper mezzanine. The theatre will be carpeted and redecorated throughout without necessitating the closing down except for a few days.

Dismiss Celotex Receivership

Wilmington, Del.—Receivership proceedings against the Celotex Co., Chicago, have been dismissed. David Adler, who brought the action, through his New York attorney, Stanley M. Lazarus, notified his local attorney to drop the action. The Celotex firm had challenged Adler's right to bring the suit and denied all charges of insolvency and mismanagement. Lazarus was one of the attorneys who petitioned a receivership of Fox Film. Lazarus has been cited to the Bar Ass'n for his part in the Celetox action, having allegedly purchased stock in the company for his client before starting the action.

Showmen Operate Equipment Firm

Dallas—Allied Theatre Equipment Co., sponsored by the Texas exhibitor association, now is operating. Members of the board of directors subscribed in cash to stock of the new company, which is the first of a number of similar companies planned by units of Allied States Ass'n.

The Texas company is handling Kaplan projectors, Morelite lamps, Vocalite screens, Electra carbons, American fans and air washer systems, generator units, rectifiers, acoustical wool and other lines.

Paramount Theatre and Office Building, New York. Theatre equipped throughout with comfortable, acoustically correct American Seating Company Chairs. C. W. & Geo. L. Rapp, Architects.

So your patrons may enjoy the play or movie infinitely more ...Reseat!

Illustrating Theatre Chair No. 7860

A chair of this type was installed in the famous Chicago Civic Opera House. Full upholstered back, spring edge seat and Moderne Standards. A triumph in building into theatre chairs maximum absorption values. Only one of the many American Seating Company types and styles of theatre seating.

"CAME THE TALKIES"... sound reproduction to synchronize with photography. Theatres dressed up... another era dawned. Beauty, harmony, comfort and acoustical perfection. That is what the public asked of theatres.

Electricity had wrought another miracle. Architects made contribution. Sound to be understood, must carry without reverberation, without echo.

So, American Seating Company saw a modern problem. They undertook acoustical research. They found that chairs of certain types have greatest sound absorption. That seats could aid the ear—as well as make for comfort and beauty.

And soon the motion picture industry found that chairs meant more than physical comfort—more than beauty to harmonize with the design and decorative charm of interiors. That to attract patrons—to keep them coming to the theatre, new sound equipment was not enough. New chairs were needed . . . chairs whose acoustical properties brought to their audiences the speaking or singing voice—clearly and undistorted.

To many, reseating—the replacing of old chairs with new—corrected sound distortions, and brought the bigger box office receipts that new sound equipment failed to bring. New, acoustically correct chairs paid for themselves in attracting capacity crowds.

Theatre Bankruptcy Perils Pointed Out by New York Financial Expert

Pitfalls Leading to Failures in Business World Apply to Fields of Exhibition, Says Col. MacCormack

FAILURE, with its legal grave of bankruptcy, lurks in some theatre lobbies, waiting for exhibitor victims.

Infrequent as such conclusions are to theatre ventures, they do occur. They can be avoided in practically every instance if certain causes known to be general in almost every retail business failure are taken seriously by theatre owners having trouble with income and outgo.

The most commonplace reasons for bankruptcy are disclosed in a survey recently made by members of the faculty of Yale Law School, the field staff of the Yale Institute of Human Relations at Yale University, and officials of the U. S. Department of Commerce.

Fifty-six individual cases were analyzed. While not one of these was a theatre failure, they were in the retail field and thereby provide important data which may be a key to the solution of financial problems confronting individual theatre operations. For this reason MOTION PICTURE NEWS obtained a copy of the advance reports. Through the courtesy of Colonel W. D. MacCormack, head of the Receivership Department of the Irving Trust Co., and one of the greatest authorities on reasons for business failures, data was obtained from Professor William O. Douglas of the Yale Law School. Associated with Professor Douglas in the study of the fifty-six cases were: Dr. W. C. Plummer and George W. Robbins of the Department of Commerce; Dr. I. V. Riscock of the Yale Medical School; Paul O. Ritter, S. R. Gamer, and J. H. Weir of the field staff of the Institute of Human Relations at Yale University, and Judge William Clark.

Why Red Ink Flows

Following are those parts of the report which have significance for exhibitors who are wondering why they are unable to keep the red ink in the bottle:

"Fifty-six individual cases were analyzed. Twenty dealt in the primary necessities of food, drugs and clothing, ten being food, eight clothing, and two drugs. There were, besides, four who supplied luxuries, two being jewelers, one a radio dealer, and the fourth a garage service station.

"The investigation has been directed to determining, first, the personal factors, so far as measurable, which have contributed to the failures; second, the business methods employed by the debtor; and, third, the extent to which abuses in credit extension have influenced the collapse.

"Education—In only two instances had the debtor graduated from a high school, and only two, a teacher and a pharmacist, had received any higher education. In fact, in the majority of cases no graduation from grammar school appeared. Perhaps allowance should be made for the fact that 14 were of foreign birth, 5 being Russians and 3 Austrians.

"Living Expenses—The average number of children to be supported was found to be two. In only three cases were there five or more children. In two of these the oldest contributed. In only two cases did the debtor "own his own home" free from mortgage. In all the other instances he either paid rent or interest on mortgages which seemed out of proportion to the apparent earning capacity of himself or his business. Ten debtors carried life insurance, the average amount being $1,000. A more detailed study of living expenses was not possible because of the interesting fact that no debtor reported the keeping of a family budget.

Speculation, a Nemesis

"Previous Experience—All but four of the debtors had considerable experience in the business in which they afterwards failed. To reach any conclusion here the quality of that experience would, of course, have to be appraised.

"Speculation—Ten can lay their defeat at the door of speculation. All of these speculated in real estate. In addition, two gambled with cards and lotteries. One played the stock market and lost. In none was speculation fairly incident to the business. But in each the business creditors paid the price. Illness or incapacity seemed to be a major factor as a cause of about ten per cent of the business failures.

Business Methods

"Trade Associations—But three of this group were members of trade associations.

"Inventory and Books—Ten took regular inventories. But of these only six kept books which could under any test be considered adequate. Two who kept books never took inventories. Thus, for the forty-three who were in business only six were in a position to know at any point of time their exact business health.

"Previous Failures—Five of these individuals had previously failed in similar enterprises.

"Fire and Burglary Insurance—Of the retailers only ten carried any fire insurance, and only one burglary insurance. Of the builders only six carried fire insurance, and only one paymaster robbery insurance Thus, the percentage which had taken protection against well known business risks was obviously small. In two cases where there was no robbery insurance disastrous losses were suffered because of that fact.

"In our opinion these cases prove conclusively that the application of the most easily understood standards of personal and business conduct would have prevented 75 per cent of the failures. A conservative estimate is indicated by the fact that the debtors' own statements corroborate it. In fact, the cases where the financial collapse is properly attributable to misfortune rather than fault are so few that they can be separately enumerated. We find six instances of expensive illness, two of automobile accident judgments, two of robbery, one of fire, one of change in the character of the neighborhood, and one of labor trouble. Of course, it might even here be argued that health, automobile, burglary and fire insurance are readily available and clearly prudent.

Poor Bookkeeping Another

"The standards violated in the remaining cases are so widely accepted that a statement of the violation would seem to be sufficient.

"So gambling (10 cases) is generally considered incompatible with honest business. Less ethically reprehensible for the business man, but surely equally detrimental to his business efficiency, is a lack of an adequate inventory and set of books. It is surprising then to observe that in only six of the forty-five business cases were any proper inventories or books of account kept by the debtors.

"Conducting an enterprise for profit without an accurate system for determining even costs is foredoomed to failure. So serious has this defect seemed to the government that the Federal Trade Commission issued a pamphlet in 1920, setting forth and explaining a simple system of accounts for retail merchants. This interesting little pamphlet (other similar ones have been prepared by private agencies) does not seem to have come into the hands of the debtors studied."

Say Fader Changeover Cuts Strain of Lamp

An exciter fader changeover device, developed by the Clarostat Manufacturing Company of Brooklyn, is now being marketed. The manufacturer declares it serves to fade or gradually dim one exciter lamp while the other is brought up to desired brilliancy. It consists of a heavy-duty rheostat of special design, with micrometric regulation of resistance. No switch points or wire windings are employed. The exciter lamps are subjected to minimum strain as contrasted with sudden turning on and off of filaments. The device is housed in heavy metal box with knockouts for BX cable or conduit, ventilated and said to comply in every way with underwriters' regulations.

Screen and Contracts

Philadelphia—Screen Advertising Co. has closed a contract for screen advertising with the eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey exhibitor unit. Members are being asked to show at least one official ad in lieu of cash dues. No percentage is deducted on the theatre's share of copy used, except the official organization ad.

Weather Paint Tests by Bureau

Tests of weather effect on outside paint jobs and cleaning and painting metal on building fronts have been completed by the U. S. Bureau of Standards, which discovered that repeatedly, straight white-lead paint has shown good durability. Likewise lead-zinc paints, provided the zinc-oxide content of the pigment does not exceed 30 per cent. have shown adaptability to long and tough weather conditions.

On wood panels, increasing the zinc-oxide content up to 50 per cent has resulted in rather bad cracking and scaling of the paint. On metal, the lead-zinc paints containing not over 30 per cent zinc oxide, are more durable (prevent rust) than straight white lead.

Coming to the newer type of outside white paints on wood, the titanium-zinc paints show good durability, provided the zinc-oxide content does not exceed 30 per cent. These paints stay cleaner and whiter than the lead-zinc or white-lead paints. In May, 1927, a variety of experimental titanium-zinc paints were exposed. Some of these included in the pigment a mixture of titanox, zinc oxide, and white lead. After nearly three years of exposure, some of these paints are showing unusually good results. A mixture of about 45 per cent titanox, 35 per cent white lead, and 20 per cent zinc oxide is among the best. This paint is free from cracks, and has simply worn, by mild chalking, to a smooth, clean surface.

Keeping the ratio of titanox and white lead about the same as in the paint just described, but increasing the zinc oxide to 30 per cent, resulted in a few cracks. Increasing the zinc-oxide content to 50 per cent resulted in bad cracking. Straight titanium oxide paints, straight calcium titanox paints, and straight barium titanox paints were not successful, due to excessive chalking. The liquid in these paints was 60 raw linseed oil, 20 heavy-bodied linseed oil, and 20 turpentine and drier.

Sandblasting is recommended as the best method of cleaning metals. The painting of durable non-metallic materials such as brick or concrete should be discouraged. When painted, however, the paint used should preferably be more porous than paint for metal. In discussing the causes of paint failure on plaster the Bureau advised a return to the ancient process of painting with water color immediately after the plaster is laid, and before it has had time to dry.

Federal Trade Commission has affirmatively approved rules of business practice adopted by the metal lath and crushed stone industries.

Eight rules were approved by the Commission as condemning unfair methods of competition in the metal lath business. They relate to wilful interference with contracts, misrepresentation of products, misrepresentation of a competing dealer's prices, defamation of a competitor, threats of suit for patent or trade mark infringement, secret payment of rebates, selling goods below cost, and discrimination in price.

The rules approved for conduct in the stone industry relate to wilful interference with contracts, misbranding, misrepresentation of products, secret prepayment of transportation charges or secret payment of rebates, discrimination in prices, defamation of a competitor, selling goods below cost, commercial bribery, and enticement of employes.

Four additional rules were accepted by the commission as expressions of the trade. They pertain to the offering or giving of prizes or excessive entertainment to anyone in connection with a sale, sales on an f. o. b. factory basis, independent publication of prices, and appointment of a trade practice conference committee.

How to Display the Flag

HERE is a guide for the proper display of the American flag:

When the flag is displayed from a staff projecting horizontally or at an angle from the window sill, balcony or front of the building, the Union of the flag should go clear to the head of the staff.

When the flag is displayed in a manner other than being flown from a staff, it should be displayed either horizontally or vertically against a wall, the Union should be uppermost and to the flag's own right, i. e.—to the observer's left. When displayed in a window it should be displayed in the same way—that is, the Union or blue shown to the left of the observer i nthe street. When festoons, rosettes or drapings of blue, white and red are desired, bunting should be used but never the flag.

When displayed over the middle of the street as between buildings, the flag should be suspended vertically with the Union to the north in an east and west street or to the east in a north and south street.

Use of bunting for decoration with blue color in the bunting should invariably be at the top.

If the blue of the bunting should contain stars, it would emphatically indicate that the stars should be on top, for if placed below, it would be equivalent to placing the flag upside down. — From "The Firing Line," house organ of New York State Division, Fox Metropolitan Theatres.

Lighting in Color Opens New Paths

"Stealing like moonlight over a great hall" is the way one observer of the latest step in modern lighting describes Colorama.

"Painting with light" is the way a practical observer describe it. And it all is done by someone unseen in the remote control room pushing an electric button.

In the January issue of The Showman a technical description of this new lighting innovation was given as applied to the ballroom in the St. George Hotel, in Brooklyn, where the first installation was made.

The system consists of a series of coves or flutes, or color media from which emanate all manner of color lighting. So delicate does the color creep over the space lighted that one is hardly conscious of the change from soft greens to deeper reds. Pastel patterns emerge from their cove haunts and sidewalls, ceilings and about the spectator in a harmony of color.

So varied are the shades that have been worked out of this new system that even the engineers in charge have been unable to calculate just how many are possible.

The system consists of two controlling factors: placing lights of various colors in front and behind a series of vertically-pleated flutes, these lights being then reflected on a cove, and the manipulation of these colors so as to work out, at will, designs by cutting off light rays in the flutes.

The possibilities here are numerous. Above all, the new lighting system has unlimited possibilities in the motion picture theatre where color plays such an important part in building the program.

The system is made possible by the Major process in conjunction with the Ward Leonard resistor dimmer plates and multi-voltage system.

Granada Drops Stage Shows

Chicago—The Granada, Publix-B. & K. de luxe north side house, enters upon a summer policy of all-talking programs this week. The elaborate stage shows which have been coming here directly from Loop houses will be discontinued.

Brown Succeeds Pensel

Baltimore—E. E. Pensel has resigned as resident manager of Loew's Stanley and has been succeeded by Ray C. Brown, formerly with the Nixon-Nirdlinger interests in Philadelphia and then with the Silverman interests in Ohio.

Lurie Turns Optimis

Cleveland—Sam Lurie has re-opened the Crown, which he closed three weeks ago, predicting that business has reached its lowest ebb, and is now on the up and up.

Get Meyer Theatre

Janesville, Wis.—With the transfer of the Lloyd at Menominee, Mich., to the Lloyd estate, R. C. Wheeler, formerly manager of the house, and J. M. Thompson, also of Menominee, have taken over the Meyer theatre in this city from James Zanias.

Exhibitors Urged to Use Screens to Fight "Bugs" Costing Them Billions

Theatres Lose $2,250,000,000 Yearly Because of Disease Germs; Physicians Eager to Co-operate

BUGS are costing exhibitors millions of dollars a week in receipts. A generous part of this loss can be stopped, without costing a cent. To do it requires only common sense, a few hours of time, and a series of home-made slides. Further, exhibitor efforts to bring that added revenue of millions of dollars weekly to the box office will pay the theatre handsome dividends in good-will, a reputation for public-spiritedness, and unlimited cooperation from local newspapers, with excellent publicity values for the exhibitor and his house.

The bugs that are stealing huge sums out of theatre tills are not visible to the naked eye. But every one of them, with their aunts, uncles, nieces, nephews and in-laws, is known, named and on record in every city, town and hamlet in the country where exhibitor-victims are trying to make entertainment pay.

These bugs are not called such technically. They are known to keep the theatre-goers of the country away from screen entertainment for a total of 250,000,000 days annually. They make it impossible for school children to attend theatres for a total of 170,000,000 days a year. It costs the staggering total of $2,250,000,000 a year to overcome the damage they do.

Streptococci Is the Name

The scientific term for these bugs broadly is streptococci. They are the bugs of illness and disease, and it is estimated by no less an authority than the United States Public Health Service that they prevent at least two per cent of the population of every community from attending the theatre every day.

Every exhibitor has a screen that compares favorably with any newspaper as a force for propaganda and the moulding of public opinion. Newspapers are doing far more to fight the bugs, and with less chance for direct personal benefit, than are exhibitors.

It is a matter of record that there are about 130,000,000 cases of disabling illness in the United States each year, and if non-disabling illnesses be added, this figure would be more than doubled.

If this total of persons, unable to attend theatres because of illness, could be reduced by half, or even less, it is urged by students of the subject of theatre attendance that the amount added to the receipts of any theatre, any day in the year, would be more than enough to encourage every exhibitor to plan and conduct a campaign to accomplish it in every locality.

Medical Men Eager to Help

It is said on excellent authority that the great majority of doctors in any city or town would be more than willing to co-operate in the preparation of text for slides, trailers, footnotes on theatre programs and other mediums to help every exhibitor encourage the improvement of public health and thereby increase the number of prospective patrons for his box office every day in the week.

Estimating that every theatre has a minimum of five thousand prospective patrons within reach of his advertising for every picture, or within walking or transportation distance of the box-office, the established fact that an average of at least two percent of these are ill every day amounts to a sizable total by the week, month or year. That much of this illness is avoidable with proper care and precautions is admitted by medical authorities. Exhibitors who do their part in broadcasting health data are certain to receive personal benefit from the increased number of people able to attend the theatre.

Seasonal figures run the daily average of those kept in bed or indoors by illness up to twenty percent, and in some sections of the country to twenty-five percent for weeks at a stretch. This is particularly true in the late fall and early spring, when sudden changes in temperature causes colds, influenza, pneumonia and other ailments. Many exhibitors recall vividly the effect on the box-office of the national influenza epidemic which swept the country not so long ago. That one wave of illness cost the exhibitors many millions of dollars in receipts.

Co-operation Easy to Get

Discussion with officers of local medical societies, the leading physicians in every community, officials of the Board of Health, is certain to result in abundant cooperation. To coordinate exhibitor effort to reduce illness and increase the total number of people regularly well and able to attend theatres and the activities of local newspapers is a simple matter. There is scarcely a newspaper without some form of articles on health, obtained from syndicates or locally. Mention of such newspaper material in slides or other forms of propaganda used by the exhibitor induces greater reader interest and contributes that much more to the profitable task of making every community increasingly health-conscious.

Health "don'ts" are the simplest and most impressive anti-illness copy for theatre slides, trailers or program paragraphs. These can be obtained from any one, or all, of the professional sources named above. They can be changed to correspond to the seasons, including warnings against improper attire for quick temperature changes, over-exercise, over-eating, improper ventilation in sleeping rooms, and countless other practical warnings which every physician has at his finger tips.

An intelligent, sustained war of health propaganda by exhibitors against the bugs of illness means millions of dollars more in receipts each year to theatres.

Wide Screen Is Used by Bard

Glendale, Cal.—Wide screen is being used by Bernie Roper, Jr., manager of Bard's Glendale for Movietone News, acts and scenics. He uses a flat, white, not perforated screen, about 16 by 28 feet and there is little or no grain to it, he says, adding that surprisingly good sound is reproduced.

"We use the same amperage as always, 80 amps., on Aschraft high intensity mirror lamp and there is plenty of light, as the flat white screen has a better reflecting surface than our Trans Vox screen which we are using for regular pictures," he says.

"A 3½-inch lens is being used against a five-inch lens. The aperture is a standard movietone masked top and bottom. This keeps the picture from going up to the proscenium and down into the orchestra pit, and likewise gives a better looking picture."

Stage Shows Out as New Summer Policy Adopted

Dropping of stage shows and reduction of prices is the summer policy at five of the Greater New York Loew houses. They are: King's, Flatbush; Oriental, Bensonhurst; Plaza, Corona, and Bedford, which have split week policies, and Loew's Yonkers, now changing thrice weekly.

Service

San Francisco—Charles Herbert Jr., Pacific Coast supervisor for RCA Photophone, did some fast thinking when he received an emergency call from the Fox Virginia at Vallepo. By boat, the trip is 1½ hours and by automobile two hours, so he made the trip by air in 15 minutes, completing the job at the theatre in five minutes.

Paradoxical

Detroit—That theatre business is at first stimulated by business depression was emphasized here during the shutdown of the Ford plant. When the plant first closed, and for some months thereafter, receipts mounted steadily, dropping back to normal when the plant reopened.

The Showman's Question Forum

NOTE:—This department is conducted as a general service to exhibitors and as an aid to them in solving their various construction problems (excepting those which relate to projection rooms). Arranging Office Suites as Town's Medical Center

Dear Mr. Rigaumont:

A recent article in THE SHOWMAN mentioned a medical center suite of offices above the stores in a Schine theatre designed by you. I like this idea and would appreciate a fairly detailed idea of how this layout is arranged. Also, is the amount of extra work involved in excess of that usually involved in the ordinary office construction?

I think the idea is perfect for making the theatre an institution in the community.—J. R. K.

Answering J. R. K.:

In a small town, such as the one you are located in, the assembling of doctors under one roof makes your renting proposition more simple than if you were to sublet it haphazardly. Doctors are good tenants.

The fundamental idea is to permit the doctors to economize on the overhead expense, and also centralize their various equipment so that they may be able to assist one another when the occasion arises. The layout includes a general waiting room, in charge of an attendant who takes all telephone calls and supervises the distribution of patients. There is a nurses' room, a sterilizing room and a drug room or pharmacy. Along the front of the building are located the various offices of the doctors—subdivided into the amount of space that they desire.

It is difficult to tell whether a dentist or a physician will occupy an office and, therefore, the plumbing should be laid out so that every office can accommodate a dentist.

This medical center idea tends to focus considerable interest upon the theatre property.

Investment possibilities of Art Theatre Along Fireproof Lines

Dear Mr. Rigaumont:

What is your opinion on building an art theatre in a residential neighborhood? We should like to have about six hundred seats, larger than the ordinary capacity for these houses, and lots of lounging space. Can a fireproof building be built simply and inexpensively and yet serve as a good theatre for a profitable investment, which we intend to operate ourselves?—T. S.

Answering T. S.:

Community theatres are nice little things for those who can afford to own them without profit. There are very few, if any, community theatres that are profitable ventures and merely placing the name "Art Theatre" is not sufficient. It is difficult to imagine what the name "Art Theatre" really means. The real art of the theatre is on the screen, or stage, and the various gyrations of decorations that from time to time have evolved upon the walls of the auditorium have been merely an attempt to balance the real attraction.

Yes, a fireproof building can be built simply and with good ideals and comfort, and the question of creating a good theatre depends upon the architect who is a specialist in this type of construction. He is one who knows the essential requirements minus obnoxious gee-gaws. Theatre designing has just passed through a razzle-dazzle stage and exhibitors are becoming aware of the fact that the essential fundamentals of theatre design are in harmony and comfort, not gawdiness.

Solving Acoustical Problems Without Changing Decorative Scheme

Dear Mr. Rigaumont:

Having decided to have our house wired for sound, we realize that we shall have to make some alterations to improve the acoustics. My partners thought the orchestra and balcony seats, which are serviceable but are veneer seats, could be reupholstered. We recently have had the the house redecorated and dislike to hide this decoration. Therefore, we are asking you for suggestions which will help us to solve the acoustical problems without changing our decorative scheme.—A. R. N.

Answering A. R. N.:

Upholstery and draperies oftentimes improve the acoustical conditions and it is my suggestion that you consult with the drapery firms and seating firms, who are responsible and advertise in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Providing for Organ in New Sound Picture House

Dear Mr. Rigaumont:

We are in a quandary as to whether or not to install an organ in a new theatre that we intend to build as a sound picture theatre. We would appreciate your advice on this subject.—J. L.

Answering J. L.:

There is no reason why you should not provide for organ chambers now, together with space for the blower and the necessary pipes and conduits. When you decide to install the organ, the only work necessary is to put it in. You will not have all the commotion that an alteration would create. As to the cost, you would save money by putting it in now.

Projection Room Changes Required by Wide Screen Pictures?

Dear Mr. Rigaumont:

Can you give us any information as to the changes in the projection booth which have been made necessary by the coming of the wide screen pictures?—J. A. C.

Answering J. A. C.:

Yours is really a question for a projection department to answer. However, when you build a new building, it is very desirable to make the projection booth big, commodious, and have the various dependency rooms in direct communication with it. There are all sorts of things that are necessary in conjunction with a projection booth. Keep in mind that the stage now-a-days is in the projection booth, and that it is there to stay for a long time to come. The reason for making projection rooms big is that you or I do not know what next mechanical contraption will be invented. It is wise to have space as many exhibitors have discovered when it came time to put sound equipment in their old theatres.

Fireproofing Drapes Without Spoiling Them —Complying with Law

Dear Mr. Rigaumont:

Will you kindly tell us if acoustical drapes can be made fireproof? We are also very anxious to learn whether or not our present drapes which are both attractive and serviceable can be treated with some form of fireproofing.—W. C.

Answering W. C.:

Certain cities require the auditorium draperies to be fireproof. This can be easily done by a responsible firm without spoiling your materials and, since you must comply with the law, why not do it?

Installing Escalator to Encourage Balcony Business

Dear Mr. Rigaumont:

We experience considerable difficulty in convincing our patrons that the balcony is a fine place from which to see the show. We find it difficult to get patrons to sit in the balcony even when the main floor is filled.

Someone suggested installing an escalator from the lobby to the mezzanine and from there they could walk to the balcony. Do you think this idea is practical?—W. J. P.

Answering W. J. P.:

The idea is very practical and it would, unquestionably, make your balcony desirable for the crowds. There is only one hitch. It is questionable if the state authorities would permit an escalator, because when it is operating it is always going up. In case of panic, it could not be used as a means of exit. Your crowd could never get to the street quickly enough. Perhaps, if you would submit a scheme which would pass the state's approval, your idea would be "bully."

Sound-On-Film Held in Demand

Minneapolis—Ted Karatz, of Ultraphone, disc reproducer, who recently placed on the market a sound-on-film attachment, the entire equipment selling for $875, reports a demand for the film attachment. There are more than 80 installations of the disc reproducer in this territory. The machine can be had with either belt or synchronous motor silent chain drive.

Talkers "Producers' Rattles," Says Pioneer; "Sound Is No Improvement"

Charges Talkers Are Top Heavy and Weighted Down With Realism; Dialogue Does Not Benefit

By J. S. O'CONNELL

Managing Director, Vita-Temple Theater

TOLEDO—Has the addition of dialogue proved to be an unqualified benefit to the motion picture?

After close and careful study of audience reactions to the talkers over a period of more than three years my answer is an emphatic "No!"

For one thing, fans are not getting the thrill out of the average audible feature that they did out of silents. Ask departing customers if they have enjoyed the show and, while they probably will reply in the affirmative, their response will be made without enthusiasm. Even before they are well out of the theatre their minds have turned to something else. They will concede that the picture they have just seen and heard is a praiseworthy production, but nevertheless they are vaguely unsatisfied. They are still seeking the kick that nearly every silent photoplay provided and that majority of today's talkers can not offer.

What is missing? Not only can they see their favorites in action on the screen, but now they can hear them as well. When lovers' lips meet in the film drama, that act of endearment is not merely visible; the amplifying horns reproduce a distinctly audible, synchronized smack. Pistol shots and machine-gun volleys no longer are so many taps by the trap-drummer; they are, so far as the ear can tell, the real thing. Visually, too, realism is becoming a standard quality. The film photographed entirely in natural colors is as common today as pie-hurling comedies were a few years ago. In fact, until some genius starts synchronizing smells with his pictures we can't get much closer than we are to a perfect simulation of reality.

Finds Talkers Top-Heavy

And right there, it seems to me, is the answer. The talkers are top-heavy and weighted down with realism. They leave practically nothing to the spectator's imagination. Silent pictures did, and therein lay their strength. Those movies, crude as they may have been in some respects, allowed each onlooker to day-dream his own way through their action, fitting his own words to the unheard dialogue when subtitles were lacking, putting his own sentiments into the emotions of the characters before him.

The universal success of the silent picture was due in large measure to this one thing, and here I credit a passage in a letter which C. H. Rich wrote to me nearly two years ago. The person in a movie audience thinks in his or her own language....puts into the mouth of that character the language he or she believes would be most appropriate. What a jolt it hands the poetically enraptured feminine fan, hanging on the heroine's words and prepared to hear a silken, gracefully modulated "Yes!" only to have the amplifiers belch a robustious "Oh, yeah!" Romance is shattered by a single phrase.

And romance, vicarious adventure, fantasy are the things that have made motion picture production the third largest industry in the world. Are they, not eminently worth preserving, no matter what miraculous mechanical developments come along?

While Others Tarried

BACK in the days when most showmen scoffed, The Vita-Temple at Toledo was wired for sound. That theatre, with J. S. O'Connell at the helm then as now, was one of the first in the country to swing from silents to talkers. O'Connell is, therefore, in a position to discuss the problem as a pioneer champion of the sound era.

Babies and Rattles

Dialogue is being employed by many producers today much as a baby plays with a rattle. Delighted over the discovery that the screen can make a noise, they can't allow it to be silent or simply musical for so much as a second. They pump talk into a picture as energetically and indiscriminately as though it were solely up to them to demonstrate for the first time that vocal films actually are mechanically possible. They forget that audible movies are an old story by this time and they fail to realize that the really astute producers have discarded the clumsy, amateurish technique of pioneer talkers. It doesn't seem to occur to these childish enthusiasts that here is a new medium of expression to be perfected.

Talk can harm a picture in many instances where a short scene played silently, or with significant musical accompaniment only, would tell all that is to be told far more vividly than any speech could convey it. And what talk it is we get in the average picture! It must give some of screendom's more intelligent players a deep and abiding pain in the neck to deliver lines so idiotic, so out of keeping with the mentalities credited to them by their followers of other days, and so completely unsuited to the characters they are enacting.

Nor must it be forgotten that every line of dialogue put into a picture takes its toll in slackened tempo. The other night I saw and heard a picture the first five reels of which were silent and very well done. The action kept to an invigorating pace—an easy, graceful flow that was perfectly suited to the story's unfolding. Then came the dialogue. The resultant sensation was comparable to a motorist's feelings when he has been gliding over an open road at 60 miles an hour and suddenly is compelled to slow down and follow a truck.

Sees New Technique

That picture, of course, was one of those ghastly hybrids which were dumped on the market with greedy haste as soon as the master minds of this business decided that a homeopathic dose of dialogue would make the sickest silent feature a wow at the box-office. But it illustrated strikingly the tremendous differences between the two types of film. Furthermore, it proved conclusively that a completely new technique must be evolved for the talking photoplay, which is an entirely new medium of dramatic expression no matter what may be said or written to the contrary.

Again, it demonstrated convincingly that you can not take the average silent, add talk to it and have an artistic success. Such procedure might sell one or two pictures but that would be due more to the lingering novelty of a new era than to any merit of the production. Audible sequences of the film I have mentioned also showed that a story originally written for presentation as a silent loses rather than gains by dialogue treatment, that the two methods are poles apart and can not be used interchangeably.

The industry, or the portion of it that realizes this truth, also is capable of making the mistake of leaning too far in the other direction, that of transplanting stage plays bodily to the silversheet. The average footlight piece, its action bounded by the legitimate theatre's conventional and inescapable three walls, never will satisfy the cravings of that vast motion picture audience accustomed to the almost limitless latitudes of the silent screen play.

Perhaps you think, from all this, that the writer is one of those die-hards who are irreconcilably prejudiced against the talkers and crying for a return to the silent picture. Well, if you do you're mistaken. I am a sincere, earnest and hopeful believer in the future of the talking screen. But I certainly do not favor removing from the art of making motion pictures most of the fundamentals which built up the world-wide prestige and popularity it enjoys today.

In a New Form

I believe that the talking picture of the future must be a completely new form,

Wilkes Sells Half Interest In Theatres at Corsicana

Dallas—Leslie Wilkes, former Dallas exchange manager, who for the past year has operated theatres at Corsicana, in partnership with Dent Theatres and lately with Publix, has sold out to W. E. Paschall, former executive with Dent and Publix.

When the Dent theatres were absorbed by Publix, Paschall went with the Katz organization to supervise the newly acquired houses.

Routing of Fanchon & Marco Shows to Antipodes

Hollywood—With Fanchon & Marco acts now playing between 65 and 75 theatres in 60 cities from Coast to Coast, negotiations now are under way for the extension of F. & M. time to Australia.

The Fox vaudeville office in New York closed this week, being absorbed by the New York branch of Fanchon & Marco with Bert Adler in charge.

Mary Doran Cast With William Haines

Hollywood—Mary Doran has been given the chief feminine role opposite William Haines in the M-G-M star's new vehicle, "Remote Control," which Mal St. Clair will direct. Miss Doran began her career at the M-G-M studio as the hard-boiled chorine in "The Broadway Melody" and has since appeared in "The Richest Man in the World," "The Divorcee" and other films.

Proctor's Drops Vaude Policy; Only Pictures

Albany—For the first time since Proctor's Grand was opened back in 1913, the theatre will now drop vaudeville acts and show a straight picture program. Talking pictures will be presented with two changes a week. Announcement of the new policy was made by Joseph F. Wallace, manager.

Change in Rogers Talkie; "Lightnin" to Be His Next

Hollywood — Unconfirmed reports state that Fox is again delaying "Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" as a Will Rogers starring talker and that the comedian's next will be a dialogue remake of "Lightnin'", stage play of the late Frank Bacon.

Fox produced a silent version of "Lightnin'" about six years ago.

Dorland Heads Branch

Charlotte—Jack Dorland, formerly with Paramount, has been appointed manager of the local Sono Art-World Wide exchange. He succeeds E. F. Dardine.

Sign Lewis and Campeau

George Lewis and Frank Campeau have been signed by Warners for roles in a forthcoming picture.

"Whoopee" Programs

Indianapolis—A "whoopee" program which lasts a half hour has been inaugurated with evident success at the Indiana to encourage Saturday morning attendance. Dess Byrd, organist, plays a concert consisting of popular numbers, old favorites and semi-classical numbers. Singing and fun making also feature the show.

Charges Talkers Are Top Heavy

its technique evolved through the judicious, intelligent combination of elements from both the spoken stage and the mute photoplays of yesterday. The concise, economical speech of the one must be fitted to the fluid movement of the other. Talkers that will save the cinema from bumping along to ruin over the same rocky road that is fast wrecking the legitimate theatre in all but the largest cities, talking pictures worthy of the name, will be the creation of trained writers.

Each production will tell an absorbing story spun out with thrilling action and made vivid with living speech. But—its dialogue will be an integral part of the story and used only where it will aid in unfolding the plot more effectively than would be the case with pantomime alone. There will be no perceptible let-down when the spoken lines cease and the film carries on with only a musical background. The action will lead logically and inevitably up to those sequences wherein the author has designated speech. With the amount of dialogue reduced to a minimum, what there is will be so written that it does not act as a brake, slowing the tempo of the piece down to a snail's pace and lessening its grip on the audience. You will feel that the characters should speak at that particular point and when they lapse into silence again you will feel that they have said everything that was necessary, that there is no need for further dialogue in that episode.

The screen no longer will be cluttered with all-talking, shouting, singing, choking and gasping monstrosities that bewilder an astonished public; it will return once more to its original purpose, that of brightening drab, workaday lives by providing a readily accessible escape into the bright realm of romance.

Let's speed the arrival of that millennium by refusing to be smugly satisfied with the toddling steps the talker infant has made to date. That youngster still has a lot of growing up to do.

Universal Gets Rights To New Cartoon Series

"Strange as It Seems," the cartoon series by John Hix which appears in 150 newspapers, will be picturized in talker form by Universal. There will be thirteen one reelers in the Hix series, and a radical departure will be made by the use of color throughout.

Ousted by Warner Deal After 35-Year Stand

Rochester—Reis & Smith, for 35 years operators of the Shattuck at Hornell, last week announced the house would be closed June 10 due to inability to obtain a lease. Mrs. Charles Smith, widow of one of the founders, who has been acting manager, and Moses Reis of New York head the firm. The house will pass into the hands of Warners, along with the properties of the Genesee Theatrical Enterprises in the Fall. The house is expected to be remodeled.

First of Italian Talkers Is Started on Coast

Hollywood—Italotone Film Co. is producing the first Italian talker, "Georgette & Company," an original musical comedy. Louise Caselotti, recently in grand opera, co-stars with Alberto Rabagliati, formerly under contract to Fox. Other players are Henry Armetta, Ynez Pelange, Mario Dominici, August Galli and Lugi Colombo. The scenario was written by Guido Trento and Alfred Sabato with the latter directing.

George Hill Signs New M-G-M Contract

Hollywood—George Hill, who directed "The Big House," has signed a new contract with M-G-M. Hill's productions include "Tell It to the Marines" and "The Flying Fleet." He has spent several months in work on "The Big House," a prison story with a cast headed by Wallace Beery, Chester Morris and Robert Montgomery.

Carey Slated for Lead In M-G-M's "Great Meadow"

Hollywood—M-G-M has acquired rights to "Great Meadow," by Elizabeth M. Roberts, and will produce for next season's release. Harry Carey will probably play the leading character, the pioneer, Daniel Boone.

Want to Pick Good Shorts from Bad? 700 "Boiled Down" Reviews Tell How

This is the first of a series of charts prepared for exhibitor guidance in the selection and booking of short subjects. Others will appear in MOTION PICTURE NEWS from time to time.

The current tabulation covers all short subjects reviewed by this publication from June 1, 1929, to date, inclusive of this edition and embraces a substantial number of pictures yet to be released. The data on each release includes title, distributor, date of review and a "boiled down" opinion of what THE NEWS reviewers thought of each. The chart covers approximately 700 pictures.

• Stop Us If We're Wrong •

ROBERT McGOWAN has completed his one hundredth comedy for Hal Roach. It is just 8½ years since he began direction of the Our Gang comedies.

* * *

George Fitzmaurice has been engaged by Samuel Goldwyn to direct Evelyn Laye, English prima donna of "Bitter Sweet," in her first.

* * *

James Whittaker has been assigned by Columbia to prepare the adaptation, dialogue and continuity of "The Last of the Lone Wolf," in which Bert Lytell is to be starred.

* * *

Mona Rico and John St. Polis have been signed by Fox for featured roles in "Sez You, Sez Me," which will be directed by Irving Cummings.

* * *

Lynn Smith of Luling, Tex., has succeeded R. M. Mints as the manager of the Crystal at Gonsalez.

* * *

Stan Laurel was presented with a son and someone stole his thirst all on the same night.

* * *

Ivan Linow, Russian strong man, will play the double role of Boko and Loko in "Just Imagine" which DeSylva, Brown and Henderson are preparing for Fox. David Butler will direct.

* * *

Barbara Stanwyck will be starred in "The Miracle Woman," one of Columbia's features for next season.

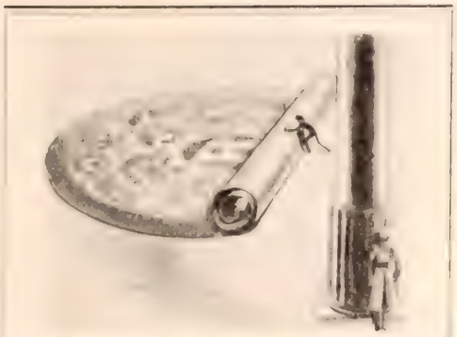
* * *

Emil Jannings is to receive a unique honor. The town of Burgstein, North Bohemia, where he started his theatrical career, is to erect a memorial tablet on a tavern where he first acted with a barnstorming troupe.

* * *

L. L. Levy has named his new theatre at Kerens, Tex., the Iris. A local contest was held, prizes being given.

* * *



Arthur Edmund Carew will have a featured role in Warners' "Captain Applejack," which Hobart Henley will direct.

In Other Words, Hi Hat

Hollywood—"It is the fashion in some circles to sneer at pictures, no matter how much money you have made in them, or how hard you worked, or how long you struggled for a chance to make good," reveals Louise Walker in Picture Play.

"You are contemptuous because pictures are not art, whatever that may mean," and, she continues, "You sneer at the implied lack of intelligence of your employers—not in their hearing, of course. You sneer at your own job, indicating, I suppose, that you are really much too intellectual a person to be occupied with such puerile pursuits; and you also sneer at the people with whom you work—by way, I take it, of proving your own superiority.

"You hanker vociferously for New York and sophisticated company. You are miserable, exiled and bitter. And you have a lovely time being all these things."

The kleptomaniac climaxes his career.
—"Film Fun."

EDWARD GOLDSTEIN has been appointed supervisor of Warners' New York branch. He succeeds Lester Adler.

* * *

John Urbansky and David L. Schumann of Cleveland have pooled their theatre interests and are now operating under a partnership. Urbansky owns and operates the Jennings and owns the building of the Lorain-Fulton theatre, which is leased to Schumann. Schumann also operates the Marvel theatre.

* * *

Mary Astor has been signed by First National to play opposite Richard Barthelmess in "Adios."

* * *

Bob White, for many years a well known exhibitor in Portland, Ore., is now carrying a brief case for Columbia.

Arthur Byron has been signed by Universal to play opposite Mary Nolan in "Outside the Law."

* * *

Leonore Coffee has been engaged by First National to adapt and dialogue "Mother's Cry," from novel by Helen Grace Carlyle.

* * *

Having completed his second talker for Fox, "So This Is London," Will Rogers is preparing to enact the star role in "See America First," adapted from an original by Owen Davis, Sr., and Homer Croy.

* * *

George Hill, director, and Frances Marion, scenarist, are in Canada on a belated wedding trip. Immediately after their wedding some weeks ago Hill started direction of "The Big House," which Mrs. Hill wrote, and the honeymoon had to wait on production.

* * *

William H. Post, author of a score of stage plays, a veteran in the acting and producing departments of the theatre, has affixed his signature to a contract in the writing department of Paramount.

* * *

Lon Chaney has gone into the building business in a large way. He is erecting a new home in Beverly Hills, and at the same time is building a fishing lodge in the high Sierras for his vacations.

* * *

Ray Hughes, vaudeville comedian, has been cast in the Pathe comedy, "Big Hearted," featuring Harry Gribbon.

Louella Parsons, Universal Service writer, says that 200 actors, directors and writers, recruited from the stage, who figured on an easy killing in films, are out of work and are returning to New York.

C. C. KNIPE, of Kansas City, who recently won the Universal national competition as the outstanding exchange accessory manager, has been promoted to accessory sales manager, succeeding Lee D. Balsly, who resigned to join Fox in a similar capacity.

J. A. Harris, formerly branch manager for Pathe at Cincinnati, has been made manager for Sono Art-World Wide at Cleveland, having been transferred there from Minneapolis, where he served his present company in a similar capacity.

* * *

Dorothy Knapp, star of several Earl Carroll extravaganzas, has been signed by Samuel Goldwyn as the Indian Princess in "Whoopee" in which Eddie Cantor is to star.

* * *

James Beale, formerly salesman out of the Portland office of Columbia Pictures, has been promoted manager of the Denver office.

* * *

Lucien Littlefield, having completed the featured characterization in "She's My Weakness" for RKO, has been signed by Bill Beaudine for his next First National production, as yet untitled.

* * *

Sidney Olcott has been signed by Columbia to direct "Ladies Must Play."

* * *

John Boles' next production for Universal will be "Gypsy Love Song," an original by Konrad Bercovici. Lupe Valez and Jeanette Loff will be featured under Boles.

* * *

James Kirkwood and Merna Kennedy are featured in "Worldly Goods," a Continental Talking production being directed by Phil Rosen at Darmour Studios. Johnny Grey and Scott Littleton wrote the dialogue and script from story by Andrew Soutar. F. Schumann-Heink, Shannon Day and Eddie Fetherston are in the cast.

* * *

Yola D'Avril has been signed by Larry Darmour to appear with the Dane-Arthur team in their first Darmour-RKO comedy, "Men Without Skirts," which Lewis Foster will direct.

Ohmigosh!!!

Credit Coleman Goetz, who writes songs, with this amusing yarn, told by Sid Skolsky:

A song plugger died and was laid out in Campbell's. There he was reposing in grand style, with a lily in his hand. All of Tin Pan Alley journeyed uptown to get a last look at him.

One of the many who went there was a song plugger for a rival firm. For many years he had admired the departed man and he lingered long after the others had gone, gazing at him.

Then, after making certain that no one was about, he took the lily from the dead man's hands and threw it on the floor. In its place he inserted a copy of the latest song that his firm had published. And to this song he attached a note. It read: "Gabriel—if you like this number we have a hot trumpet part."

Juries Raise Ante Against Showman, But Appeals Win

Albany—George Roberts, now a resident of Brooklyn but a former owner of the Eagle in Albany, N. Y., is putting up a strong fight these days in a court action that was started back in 1927 when a person passing the Eagle fell on the sidewalk and broke a leg. An action for $10,000 was started against Roberts. At the first trial an award of $2,500 was made in favor of the plaintiff. The case was then carried up to the Appellate Court, which declared the verdict excessive and directed a retrial. When the case went to trial a second time, the jury returned a verdict of $3,000. Back went the case to the Appellate division, which took the same stand as at first in that the award was excessive. Then a third trial with the jury raising the verdict to $4,000. Now Mr. Roberts is appealing the case for another time and the matter is scheduled to be threshed out once more at the fall term of court.

Jury Socks Blues

Logan, O.—Opponents of Sunday pictures received a solar plexus blow when C. J. Juergenmeier, manager of the Pythian, was acquitted by a jury in Common Pleas Court on a charge of violating the Sunday blue laws. Juergenmeier is an officer of the K. of P. lodge, and was arrested in connection with four other lodge officers, whose cases have not yet come up for trial.

Ask Theatre Receiver

Milwaukee—Alleged to be $13,000 in default on a $25,000 bond issue floated May 5, 1927, a mortgage foreclosure action has been started by the Arthur J. Straus Co. against the Egyptian Realty Co., operators of the Egyptian, local neighborhood house. The Circuit Court is asked to appoint a receiver for the property.

House Under Hammer

Rochester — The Arnett, 711-seat neighborhood house, constructed two years ago at a cost of $125,000, last week passed from the Arnett Theatre Corp. to David Rosenberg for $50,000 at a public sale on the Monroe County Court House steps. The house formerly was managed by Alexander Danbar.

Collyer Opposite Boyd

Hollywood—June Collyer will play opposite William Boyd in "Beyond Victory," now being directed by John Robertson for Pathe. Others in the cast are Robert Armstrong, Helen Twelvetrees, Fred Scott, James Gleason, Russell Gleason, Zasu Pitts, Purnell Pratt, Bert Roach and William Holden.

Iowa Theatres Sold

Des Moines—Henry Killinger has sold the Grand, at Dayton, to C. L. McAninch, and the Cohen interests have purchased the Jewel at Burlington from Joseph Miller, who is retiring from the theatre business.

Film Attacks Out

Ottawa—Newspapers here are turning thumbs down on advertising copy of the Embassy. Some time ago Oscar O'Shea, manager of the house, launched an attack against films and picture houses, copy of which was censored by the newspapers.

Stage Shows Resume in Three Weeks at Seattle

Seattle—As the first move in the reestablishment of Publix stage shows in this city, Manager William A. Hartung of the Paramount has introduced Paul Spor as master of ceremonies and conductor of the "Seattle Paramounters" orchestra. He assumes the direction of the band in the pit for the next three weeks, when the first of the new Publix units is slated to appear and the band moves back to the stage. Spor has been a master of ceremonies for Publix for the last five years and comes here from the new Indiana at Indianapolis.

Tri-State Opens Studio

Cleveland—Jack Flanagan, president of Tri-State Motion Picture Co., leaves this week with C. H. Quackenbush to open a studio in Hollywood where they will make industrial, commercial and miniature pictures. Flanagan will continue to keep his Cleveland office open with Jerry Strauber in charge of the plant, and Bob Sable in charge of photography.

Brauer Wins Honor

Cleveland—E. H. Brauer of the local M-G-M sales force won the M-G-M Legion of Honor button in recognition for contracts secured. Brauer is the fourth member of the local M-G-M organization to wear the Legion button. The others are Frank Drew, branch manager; Louis Freiberg, office manager, and Jack Soglovitz, city sales.

New Seattle Theatre

Seattle—Projected erection of a 1650-seat first run theatre in the University district was announced this week. It will be built on the corner of University Way and East Forty-second st. Identity of the builder and the cost of the project will not be announced until final plans are completed, according to H. A. M. Bonnar, member of the local realty firm handling the transaction.

Brown in Crawford Opus

Hollywood—As soon as he finishes the lead in "Billy, the Kid," John Mack Brown goes into a featured spot in "Great Day" for M-G-M. Joan Crawford will star in the filmusical version of the stage play. Erle Kenton will direct.

Tracy Builds Another

Platteville, Wis.—Building operations are expected to start here June 15 on the new $75,000 theatre to be erected by W. C. Tracy, present lessee of the Strand theatre.

Trenton Clergy Inspire Police Baseball Action

Trenton, N. J.—The ministers of this city chuckled with glee last Sunday, for their demand that the "Sour Sabbath" law be enforced caused the police to invade the baseball games being played in this city and to take the names of the players for submission to the Grand Jury.

The previous Sunday the cops had done likewise with owners and operators of picture theatres and stores. What the Grand Jury will do with the names cannot be forecast, but it is a foregone conclusion that the present "silly" procedure, as it is termed here, will result in a return of sanity and the routing of the ministerial blue noses. The latter admittedly are aiming at the closing of film houses. Lack of church attendance inspired their demand that the blue laws be enforced to the letter, in spite of the fact that they were passed more than a century ago.

Fay in "Gay Caballero"

Hollywood—Frank Fay will have to take time off from his many benefit and master-of-ceremony appearances to star in "Gay Caballero" for Warner's. Lotti Loder will play opposite, with Alan Crosland directing. Gordon Rigby and George Rosener wrote the adaptation and dialogue.

Cast with Chevalier

Hollywood—Lillian Roth, erstwhile Ziegfeld "Follies" artist and Broadway blues singer, has been chosen as leading woman for Maurice Chevalier in "The Little Cafe," which is about to go into production at the Paramount studios under the direction of Ludwig Berger.

Remake "His Last Race"

Hollywood — Tiffany will make a talker of "His Last Race" with Richard Thorpe directing. Pauline Garon will have a featured role opposite Wesley Barry. Silent version was made eight years ago by Phil Goldstone and released independently.

Cincy Scribes Elect

Cincinnati—William Smith Goldenburg was reelected president, Don Dearness, vice-president, and E. J. Winters, secretary, at the annual meeting of the Stage and Screen Scribes. Others elected at this meeting were: Rudy Benson, treasurer, and directors Noah Schecter, Carl B. Adams, F. W. Witte, Elmer Dressman and Eddie Mayer.

Lick Daylight Saving

Albany—The residents of Rouses Point, N. Y., registered themselves against daylight saving last week by a vote of 285 against 50.

Boleslavsky Re-Signed

Hollywood—Pathe has renewed contract of Richard Boleslavsky, director and stager of special effects.

Trade Journal Hits at British Studio Blunders

London—The development of British stars is a subject that is worrying the film industry here, especially the Kinematograph Weekly, which, however, offers no suggestions to solve the difficulty, although it intimates that the importation of one or two players from Hollywood proved too disastrous to look in that direction for new blood. Criticism of blundering in studios is also voiced.

The article, entitled "New Blood, or Importations. Must Hollywood Solve Our Casting Difficulties?" follows:

"The bulk of British production enterprise is in the hands of those who were self-confessed amateurs a year or two ago. They are learning the business as they go on, profiting by mistakes that need not have been made—mistakes that were recognized ten years ago; and, on the whole, considering their fairly recent complete ignorance of studios, their results are certainly creditable.

"One thing they have yet to learn is casting and stardom. They have little enterprise in discovering new blood; leaving fruitful avenues unexplored; lending their prestige to nonsensical and futile film-fan competitions; and devoting far too little of their time and money to the discovery, grooming and exploitation of Britain's future screen stars.

"At present strong efforts are being made to entice Hollywood players into British films. This is a perilous experiment. Elstree, for example, should by now have had plenty of experience of imported stars, one or two of whom, I imagine, are hardly likely to set foot in the B. I. P. studios again.

"The need for selling values in the American market is partly that of known American stars; though less than ever before. But if a Hollywood name counts for anything, it is hardly likely to be available for a British film—unless paid a good deal more than it is worth."

Form Theatre Firm

Roanoke, Va.—A theatre holding corporation has been organized with William P. Engel, Birmingham, Ala., president; Robert H. Angel, vice-president, and D. S. Meyer, Birmingham, secretary-treasurer. The maximum capital stock is 2,550 shares common without par value and $127,500 preferred, to operate theatres and other amusement places.

Sound vs. Silent Vote

Rochester—Still retaining its silent policy, although ready to jump to sound at the will of its patrons, the Little Theatre, closed for several weeks, reopened here last week under the managership of Arthur Morris. It was announced at the opening that a vote of patrons will be taken before the sound policy is adopted.

Novelized Talkers Planned

Talking Picture Publishing Co., organized recently to market books on plays written directly for talkers, has announced its first, "Broken Melody," by M. J. Spivack.

"No Smoking"

Chicago—It takes seven men—six of them hired sluggers—to permit Joe Montana, Jr., to get away with a smoke in the pick-up room at the Paramount exchange here. Joe, who is the owner of the Avenue Theatre on the West Side, is even better known as the son of Montana, Sr., a has-been bootlegger-gangster. Young Joe, calling at the Paramount pick-up room for film, glanced disdainfully at the "No Smoking" cards prominently displayed there while he lighted a cigarette. He was asked by Jack Burman, a shipping clerk at the exchange, to put out the cigarette. When he refused, Burman knocked it out of Joe's mouth. Montana left the office, returning later with six hired sluggers who beat Burman severely. An hour later Police Lieutenant George Barker arrested Montana at his theatre. He was charged with assault.

Several years ago, when Montana was only 18, he shot and killed Policeman Lawrence Hartnett during a police raid on the family "alky" plant. The raid was later declared to have been illegal, and Montana was acquitted of the murder charge as a result.

Court Legalizes Dog Races Indiana Exhibs Worry

Indianapolis—Theatre managers in Jeffersonville and New Albany, Ind., and Louisville, Ky., will have something to worry about in the way of dog-race competition this summer. A judge at Jeffersonville recently ruled that dog races in that county, under the plan as outlined by promoters of the track, would not be in violation of any laws, and the track has just started.

In this city, the same racket was tried last summer, but arrests, court injunctions and other legal moves effectually rid the theatres of this sort of competition. Just why such races should be legal in one county of the state and declared illegal in another is what is puzzling the managers in the southern territory.

Seattle "Pan" Reopens

Seattle—The Follies, formerly the Pantages has reopened. Dunn of Portland is heading the operating company, and Joe E. Bradt of this city is house manager. The shows include a talker and musical tab show by Al Franks and his company, playing four times daily. Admission prices range from ten to thirty cents. Bradt was formerly manager of the Madrona Garden here, where he has been succeeded by John McGill, former exhibitor of Port Orchard, Wash.

Holmes Loaned to Pathe

Hollywood—Phillips Holmes, Paramount contract player, has been loaned to Pathe to play opposite Helen Twelvetrees in "Her Man," which is Miss Twelvetrees' next talker.

Enlarging Exchange Bldg.

Toronto—Principal Canadian offices of United Artists and Columbia will be moved to the Film Exchange when enlargement of the structure is completed.

Musicians Set For Comeback in San Francisco

San Francisco—Mechanical music in theatres has produced a reaction here and there is a tendency to return musicians to theatres. This is all the more surprising in view of the bitter fight which has been waged with musicians since they were ousted from theatres by sound films.

The difficulties even antedated the sound film era, so that musicians were dispensed with as soon as houses wired. This precipitated a bitter court fight involving the right of theatres to remove musicians.

Broadway!

By LEO T. HEATLEY

Broadway is a wicked street,
I like it;
To many it brings shame, defeat,
I like it.

It's full of racketeers and such,
It's always out to make a "touch,"
It's best does not amount to much—
I like it.

It is a lane to hell akin,
I like it;
The good ones lose, the bad ones win,
I like it.

If you're on top, with lots of jack,
It slaps you gladly on the back,
But fail, and you go on the rack—
I like it.

It's scarlet flag is kept unfurled,
I like it.
"The Heart," they call it, "of the World,"
I like it.

It's full of phoneys, sin and sham,
For virtue it gives not a damn,
But am I for it? Sure I am!—
I LIKE IT!

Omaha Chain Growing

Omaha—The Popular Amusement Co., operators of Omaha's downtown "jitney" talker house, have acquired the Hamilton, suburban theatre, which will be wired with RCA equipment. The house will be renamed the Winn, after its former owner, E. B. Winn, who has a large neighborhood following.

Popular now operates the Moon, Princess and Muse here, the latter opening with RCA sound next week.

Thorpe Is Assigned

Hollywood—Phil Goldstone, chief studio executive of Tiffany, has assigned Richard Thorpe to direct "His Last Race," a Jack Natteford story.

Sound Bringing Heavy Dough to Foreign Houses

Paris—Despite the difficulties of obtaining anything like a regular supply of native language "talkies," practically every European theatre equipped for sound is showing an increase in profits. A typical example is the case of Norway, where receipts have increased at least 15 per cent since the coming of sound.

Vandals Cut Wires and Ohio House Goes Dark

Mt. Gilead, O.—Some one who apparently entered the house from the rear during a performance cut the electric light wires at the Kaypee and otherwise damaged the electric plant to the extent that the house was compelled to remain dark until damage could be repaired. Theatre employees are inclined to suspect sabotage.

Abbott Films "Sea God"

"The Sea God," George Abbott's second directorial undertaking for Paramount, has just gone into production on an island in the Pacific ocean. Richard Arlen has the stellar role of a pearl diver who is venerated on a South Sea island. Prominent in his support are Fay Wray and Eugene Pallette.

Stewart Writes Dialogue

Donald Ogden Stewart, humorist and playwright, has been signed by the Paramount New York studios to write the dialogue for "Laughter," the original screen story by H. D'Abbadie D'Arrast in which Nancy Carroll will star under the direction of D'Arrast. The picture will be filmed at the Eastern studio next month.

Swiss Easing Up

Paris—Switzerland probably holds the record for extra taxes imposed on theatre and cinema tickets. It is now proposed to submit to the Grand Council a proposition whereby the poverty tax, which has hitherto been calculated on the gross receipts, shall in future be calculated on the net. This will result in a tax of 15 percent being charged instead of the present 20 to 25 percent.

Filmcraft Withdraws Merger Opposition

London—Paving the way to a merger of International Talkies, British Screen, Argosy and British Filmcraft, directors of the latter have withdrawn opposition to the deal, which had halted negotiations for many weeks.

It is understood that shareholders of Filmcraft who fought the amalgamation will likewise withdraw objections.

Miniature Golf Course Gets Setback in Canada

Ottawa—"Tom Thumb" golf courses are set to invade this town, in direct competition with picture theatres, but exhibitors have allied themselves in opposition. The would-be operators of an illuminated miniature golf course for night play applied to the Board of Control for a lease on the property, but it has been held up as a result of the opposition.

National Prejudice Study Urged by Richard Wallace

Hollywood—Whether or not American talking pictures continue to enjoy the favor and popularity they have won abroad depends upon how sensitive the producers are to the peculiar prejudices that exist in each country and how well they revise their pictures to conform to them. This is the conclusion which Richard Wallace, director, has arrived at as he nears the end of his world tour.

Portugal Taxes Foreigns

Lisbon—Portuguese producers have persuaded the government to tax foreign films, exempting domestic product, in an effort to stem the tide of American talkers.

"All Quiet" Hits Record Gate in N. Y. with $27,058

"All Quiet on the Western Front," now in its seventh week at the Central, continues to mount higher receipts for this main stem house, where the Universal film attracted $27,058, in the last seven days, a record for the theatre.

"Rogue Song" is still on the fence at the Astor, clipping only a few hundred extra bills over last week's low figure of $9,000. At the Capitol, Columbia's "Ladies of Leisure" sent the b. o. barometer downward to the tune of five grand under the previous week.

Criterion, just getting under way with "Silent Enemy," is clipping a fair pace, while "Song o' My Heart" was turned out of the 44th Street with a poor take of $9,205 in its twelfth week.

Embassy's figure mounts higher, this week hitting a near high at $9,125. Other houses hit fair grosses, with the exception of the Rialto and Rivoli, each of which took a terrific sock with "Big Pond" and "Ladies Love Brutes," respectively. "Big Pond" dropped 14 grand under its first week, and "Ladies" halfed its $49,800 figure of a week ago.

Paramount and Western Electric Units Chartered

Formation of Paramount and Western Electric subsidiaries highlighted an active week of corporate activities in Eastern states, which also included a capital increase of from 1,000 to 2,000 shares, no par, by Brunswick Radio Corp., a New York company, with a Delaware charter, and owned by Warners.

Charters were granted at Dover to Paramount Famous Lasky Corp., listing 10,000 shares of no par common; and to Western Electric Co. of Asia, capitalized at 50,000 shares to distribute Western Electric equipment in the same country.

Fanchon & Marco Corp. was chartered at Albany, Saul Rogers, Fox legal chief, represented the company in formation of the subsidiary. Recorded Radio Corp., a record and broadcasting company, was another New York corporation listed. In the same state, Johnson Amusement Corp., Brighton Theatre Corp., and Zaidel Amusement Corp., all of Brooklyn, were also chartered.

Liberty Production Co. was formed at Delaware.

Secretary of state at Albany also granted papers to Germania Records International, which will engage in the recording field; Rame Films, a production unit, and Jonica Corp., to operate theatres.

Standard Cinema Corp., New York, increased its capital stock from 5,000 to 5,500 shares, of which 2,500 are preferre dshares of $100 par value, and 3,000 common, no par.

"Chi" B. O. Draws Blow the Tops Off Money Tills

Chicago—Combination of some good box-office draws and cool weather improved Loop business generally, bringing several houses back into the prosperity group.

"All Quiet on the Western Front" was a honey for McVicker's, taking $41,200 (215%) in the last seven of its first ten days, but proved a hazard to the boys who do the ushering there. Several of them were reported lost in the balcony, an area into which they had not penetrated for a long time.

The Chicago, with "Divorcee" (M-G-M), the first "pink" the house has harbored in ages, maintained its big stride for the third consecutive week. The take was $56,500 (210%). The Oriental, with an anniversary program headed by its old guarantor of profits, Paul Ash, and with "Young Man of Manhattan" (Paramount), came out of the red on a skyrocket. The week's business hit about $48,000 (205%). "White Cargo" continued its sensational pace in the sixth week at the little Castle, going up $100 over the fifth week's gross for $9,700 (323%). "Cuckoos" continued strong at the Woods, taking $14,400, or 125%, for the third week. "Ingagi" came back to the Garrick, where it played six weeks before the house took "Journey's End" for three weeks of road show policy, and did $7,400 (125%). Other spots were less prosperous, but showed improvement over the trend of recent weeks.

Weather: Cool and cloudy, rain, cool and fair.
Opposition: "White Cargo," 6th week, Castle; "Divorcee," stage show, Chicago; "Ingagi," 7th week of interrupted run, Garrick; "All Quiet on the Western Front," 2nd week, McVickers; "Such Men Are Dangerous," 2nd time in Loop, Monroe; "Young Man of Manhattan," stage show, Oriental; "Son of the Gods," 2nd time in Loop, Orpheum; "Caught Short," 2nd week in Loop, first week at Chicago, Roosevelt; "Around the Corner, RKO vaude., State-Lake; "Bad One," United Artists; "Cuckoos," 3d week, Woods.

"South Sea Rose," Only Run to Hit 100% in Mpls.

Minneapolis—Business conditions not being the best in this city, one would be led to expect that the theatres would suffer in proportion to other business houses. This, however, is not exactly the case. Houses here are not making fortunes, yet they are holding their own in most cases. Best gross of the week was registered by the Minnesota, which rang the bell at 80% to bring in $28,450 on "In Gay Madrid." The Orpheum took second by giving Edmund Lowe plenty of ballyhoo in "Born Reckless." The house clicked a rating of 90%, or a gross of $18,896.

Third honors went to the State. Gene Fox, press agent, went out to put this film across. Comparison with opposition offerings show that he did nobly. The house registered a rating of 75%, taking the gross to $15,600. The Pantages showed "Undertow" to a 90% rating and a $9,000 gross. "Journey's End" occupied the hot spot of the week. Fay Tyler, press agent for the Century, had his hands full. The Shubert, a local stock company, had been presenting the play six days before the theatre opened with the film. The Shubert's closing day was Saturday. This was also the Century's opening day. The play had been shown locally at the Metropolitan by a good company. The local legit company at the Shubert had been murdering the play for nearly a week. Tyler, by clever advertising, shoved the offering over to an 80% rating and a gross of $8,000.

The Seventh Street, offering "Clancy in Wall Street" and "Up the Congo," galloped home with a 75% rating and a gross of $7,400. The Lyric, presenting "Loose Ankles," registered a gross of $4,000 for a rating of 90%. The Aster led the list in rating. It rang up a 100% score on "South Sea Rose," which brought $3,250 as its gross.

Sheriff's Sale

London—Two years ago R. C. Sheriff offered to sell "Journey's End" for $500, after a member of the Garrick Club refused to pay that amount for an option on the vehicle. The play, which has been adapted into picture form by Tiffany, has just closed its run after more than 600 performances, having grossed an estimated $6,000,000.

2nd Week Finds "All Quiet" on Top in 'Frisco

San Francisco—While the week was not as good as is usually recorded in 'Frisco houses, fairly good business was rolled up in four theatres, very good in two and exceptionally good business with the second run of "All Quiet on the Western Front" at the Warfield Theatre, where a $31,000 gross clicked for a 125% rating. This is considered remarkable business for a picture shown a second week at Loew's Warfield.

The Fox theatre hit very good business with "Florodora Girl" at $41,000 and 110%. Advertising helped. "Paramount on Parade," shown a fourth week at the St. Francis, which reported 100% rating and $7,000 gross.

Weather: Fair and windy.

"Caught Short" Takes Long End Of Balto Grosses

Baltimore—An ideal week for movie patrons, with weather clear and cool during the entire seven days.

The high spot was hit by Loew's Stanley, where "Caught Short" was shown, accompanied by a large slice of advertising in the national campaign, and other stunts arranged by Junior McGeehan, Loew publicist here. The gross was figured at $29,250, giving this house a rating of 167%.

The gross piled up on the second week of "Applause" at the Little, with 267 seats, was a surprise. The take was estimated at $1,350, giving it a rating of 135%.

"Mammy," starring Al Jolson, slumped badly during its second week, showing simultaneously at the Metropolitan and Rivoli theatres.

Norma Shearer, a great favorite in Baltimore, piled up heavy sugar in "The Divorcee," shown simultaneously at the Valencia downtown and the Parkway uptown after one week at the Stanley. Gross at the Valencia was about $3,300, or 94%, while gross at Parkway was around $5,200, a 118% rating.

Keith's took a wallop with a double bill, including "Sunny Skies" and "Border Romance." Lasted four days, then pulled. Gross estimated around $2,200 with a rating of 30%.

Weather: Clear, cool and beautiful throughout the week.

Opposition: "All Quiet on the Western Front," 3rd week, Auditorium; "In Gay Madrid" (with "Broadway Stars," Loew-Capitol unit), Loew's Century; "Behind the Make-up," vaude., Hippodrome; "Sunny Skies" and "Border Romance," Keith's; "Applause," second week, Little; "Mammy," 2nd week jointly at the Metropolitan and Rivoli; "Follies of 1930," 2nd week, New; "Caught Short," Loew's Stanley; "The Divorcee," jointly at Loew's Valencia and Parkway after one week at Stanley. "Angels" Breaks L. A. Record with $40,500 Gross

Los Angeles—The tremendous intake of 16 grand for the $11-top opening performance of "Hell's Angels" sent the b. o. receipts of Grauman's Chinese soaring to new heights, passing the house record by at least 10 grand on the sensational gross of $40,500, rating 250%. Saturday's midnight performance likewise influenced the healthy gross.

Ted Healy's personal appearance helped "Arizona Kid" to run up a 145% rating on a $39,200 gross at Loew's State, which followed "Divorcee" $18,500 (185%), "Big Pond" $26,000 (193%), and "Caught Short" $14,600 (146%), in the line-up of current big money makers. From present indications, "Divorcee" and "All Quiet," which clicked at $15,400 (128%), are strong enough for four more weeks.

Warner's house, the Downtown, continues in the slump, this week reaching the low figure of ten grand (only 67%) with "Sweet Mama," a First National picture. Several other stands were noted to fall far below par.

Salesmen Should Be at Annual Meets—Marcus

Salesmen as well as managers of RKO will attend future general sales meetings of the company, it was indicated by Lee Marcus, distribution chief, at the regional meeting in New York this week, which concluded the series of regional sessions, which followed the general convention held at Hollywood. Regional meets were held at New Orleans and Chicago. Charles Rosenzweig, general sales manager, conducted the New York meeting.

Yesterday's meeting was adjourned for the day at 12 noon, due to the news of the death of Sydney Katz, brother-in-law of Jos. Schnitzer.

"Ingagi's" 31 Grand Shatters Record in K. C.

Kansas City—"Ingagi" drew crowds to the Pantages this week to the tune of $31,-300, or 300%, a record for this house. The big take was made possible by extra owl shows at 11:30 P. M. At the Midland, the biggest business in months was done by "Divorcee," which shot b. o. receipts to $28,-500, or 190%.

What looked like a good week at the Newman, with Tiffany's "Journey's End," fell off in the latter half making the week's rating only 80%, on a gross of $8,000. "The Texan" (Paramount) at the Royal did a good week's business, with a rating of 110%, grossing $5,000. The Mainstreet, playing First National's "Song of the Flame," grossed $13,500, or 90%. The Uptown, with Fox's "She Steps Out," reported 90% of average business, or a gross of $5,400.

Weather: Fine.

Critic's Knock Causes Manager to Pull Film

Baltimore—Although "Ingagi" probably would have been held for a second week at Keith's, the very unfavorable review given the production by Donald Kirkley, picture critic for "The Morning Sun," influenced J. Lawrence Schanberger, manager, to wind up its engagement at the end of the first week.

Kirkley said in part: "Ingagi," the jungle jumble now being exploited at Keith's theatre, is billed as an unbelievable picture, and, believe this department, it is. Where truth ends and fiction begins is a puzzle which has aroused the curiosity of many who have already seen it. . . . If a motion picture can do any harm (a fact by no means proved) to the weak people in whose behalf censorship theoretically operates, here is a perfect example of where censorship should operate. One may pause to ask by what logic the Maryland censors, so ready to mutilate certain artistic pictures, permitted all this monkey business to be shown."

The last 1,500 feet of film of "Ingagi" were taken in the Selig Zoo in California, according to information Kirkley received and that much of "The Heart of Africa," was used for it.

Top Boston Spot To "King" on a Take of $27,000

Boston—Had it not been for the double holiday week end, theatres would doubtless have suffered a terrific slump, but grosses for the holidays made up for vacant seats early in the week.

"King of Jazz" at the Keith Memorial was the shining light for the week, with a gross of $27,000, or 125%, surpassing previous week's business and rolling up the best gross in weeks.

Metropolitan held its own with "New Adventures of Dr. Fu Manchu," although the early week business was nothing to brag about. Rin-Tin-Tin "in person" brought up the figures at the Keith-Albee, while both Loew houses showed a good week's business.

Out of town business was reported as much above the average with suburban theatres doing one of the best week's business in months.

Weather fair and cool.

Opposition: "New Adventures of Dr. Fu Manchu," Metropolitan; "Less Than Called Love," Keith-Albee where Rin-Tin-Tin in person drew well; "King of Jazz," Keith Memorial; "In Gay Madrid," Loew's State; "Puttin' on the Ritz," Loew's Orpheum; "Those Who Dance," Scollay Square; "Czar of Broadway," Park

Cleveland Fears For End of Small Town Exhibitor

Cleveland—With about 150 houses in the territory dark, due to poor economic conditions, unemployment and the drift of population to the larger towns, passing of the small town theatre is feared. Business is decidedly below previous summers and indications are that these theatres will be closed indefinitely.

In Cleveland, the situation is aggravated by high overhead due to labor conditions.

A CIRCLE IS A SIMPLE THING

". . . a continuously curved line, all points of which are equidistant from a certain point within called the center . . ." Thus we used to chant at our geometry teachers. In industry, however, the circle becomes complex.

The infinitesimal accuracy demanded of cinemachinery for the production of good motion pictures depends greatly upon precise placement and centering of all circular parts. In this Bell & Howell cinemachinery excels.

Standard Cameras, Perforators, Printers, and Splicers require microscopic measurements in manufacture, and microscopic tests in final inspections. Here is illustrated a Bell & Howell engineer checking the lens carrier plate of a Bell & Howell Standard Camera by means of an Optical Dividing Head. Typical of Bell & Howell precision instruments, the dividing head measures circles and their parts to within 20 seconds of an arc.

From "location" to projection booth, the results of Bell & Howell accuracy are concrete values. Precise, clean-cut, dependable operation of all Bell & Howell cinemachinery contributes a great share of the technical well-being of the industry today.

The Bell & Howell Engineering Research Laboratories stand ready to aid you in any phase of motion picture technique. Consultation on sound movies is especially invited.

Opinions On Pictures

Hell's Angels

(Caddo—All Talker)

Air Stuff Superb; Story Fair

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

"Hell's Angels" opened at Grauman's Chinese theatre, Hollywood, on May 27. Motion Picture News' review was telegraphed to New York and, because of the widespread discussion which has revolved around the picture, was published in the issue of May 31 as a straight news story.

It is now reprinted in the reviewing section for records kept by exhibitors and others.

"HELL'S ANGELS," world-premiering after thirty-eight months of production and an expenditure of about $4,000,000 in real money, looks dubious for Howard Hughes, the producer.

What the production has is a fair story, laboriously long, as the overture to the one phase of the production wherein Hughes got his money's worth and set a peak for thrills that will be extremely costly and difficult to equal.

The real entertainment in the production, which for years has been a by-word in the industry, is in the air sequences. They are de luxe.

Within film memories no production has equalled the Hughes creation in the amount of publicity, printed and spoken, preceding its opening. It has been the stock resort of columnists, humorists, photoplay editors and gossipers when copy or talk ran short.

Hughes has a realistic story of the World War from the air angle and has gone to extremes in order to obtain authentic atmosphere throughout. But what was shown on the screen justified neither expense nor time spent in production.

Hughes crossed up the folks by giving them a straightforward story of the war with the air stuff interwoven. There is no doubt of the effectiveness of the air sequences, but these only consume about 20 per cent of the picture's two hours and fifteen minutes' running time. Undoubtedly wholesale cutting will snap up the story whereby it will run faster and smoother than at the opening.

Introduction of the story consumed exactly 45 minutes before anything was shown in the clouds with every one waiting anxiously for the air stuff to start. But when Hughes takes to the air, he presents what are admittedly the greatest thrills ever photographed above the earth. His sky introduction is a sensational air raid on London by a Zeppelin, with the climax showing the burning Zep dashing to earth.

After some time is given to story development again, Hughes presents his awe-inspiring and magnificently staged air battle with 100 planes fighting it out in a sea of clouds. That air battle is the last word in thrills, suspense and realism. It's going to be a long time before any other producer tops that one sequence in the sky.

The atmosphere and correct war background for production have never been equalled, even down to the smallest details. When Germans talk during several sequences, they converse in native tongue with translation titles flashing on to inform the audience of the dialogue going on. Hughes was well repaid for engaging his large staff of technical advisors and thereby obtained real and authentic color of the war background throughout.

Ben Lyon and James Hall are brothers. Lyon is a typical ladies' man and plays the field without reserve. Hall is devoted to his sweetheart and spurns his brother's attempts to get him out of the straight and narrow. Then Lyon meets the girl, Jean Marlow, and the pair fall heavy for each other. She takes Lyon to her apartment for a rather hot sequence, just before the boys go over to France. At the front Lyon shows his cowardly streak with the entire squadron realizing it. Then the commander calls for two volunteers to take a captured German bomber out to destroy an ammunition warehouse behind the German lines. Lyon steps out, followed by Hall. They push off at dawn, successfully complete their job, and start back. Richthofen's circus gets on their tail for thrilling running fight. The squadron escort picks them up and engages the Germans in a spectacular battle.

When the pair feel themselves safe they are shot down in flames, with Hall making landing, so the two escape from burning plane. But they land in the German lines and are marched to headquarters. The German general demands they talk, giving fifteen minutes to decide between that and a firing squad. Lyon weakens, with Hall finally stating he will talk to the general and tell the British plan of attack. Hall gets a gun with one shell and returns to Lyon. When the latter still wants to squeal, Hall shoots him and then tells the German that he will not disclose British plans. He is marched out for the firing squad, and finale.

Lyon gives a splendid performance as the life-loving weakling, closely followed by Hall, with Jean Marlow particularly fine as the girl.

"Hell's Angels" is not the epic of talkers, notwithstanding the fact it is thrilling, realistic and effective. It carries plenty of audiencee appeal and wealth of entertainment. At the two-dollar scale it will enjoy plenty of business. Likewise, later, when it hits the regular price runs, it is certain to hit heavy grosses at all box offices, but whether or not Hughes gets back his tremendous investment is something for him to worry about, rather than exhibitors. In justice to Howard Hughes, it must be stated that the picture will be cut further and such cutting should enhance the tempo and general value 100 per cent.

Comedies by way of relief are suggested.

Produced by Howard Hughes. Story by Marshall Neilan and Joseph Moncure March. Directed by Howard Hughes. Dialogue by Joseph Moncure March. Adaptation and continuity by Howard Estabrook and Harry Behn. Staged by James Whale. Edited by Frank Lawrence and Douglas Biggs. Musical arrangement by Hugo Riesenfeld. Technical engineer, E. High Treason

(Tiffany—All Talker)

A "Hopped-Up" Fantasie

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

THE box office is due for a jolt when "High Treason" is shown at the theatres of the United States. It's either due to knock 'em cold or drop off flat. If the audience is in the mood for a mental jag this is it. If it craves some saccharine romance, this isn't.

"High Treason" is a British made picture, based entirely upon present scientific and political tendencies and forecasts. The film attempts to show how we will love, live and fight in the not far distant year of 1940. This seems the weakest part of the picture. Audiences are going to refuse to believe that so many changes can be wrought in ten years. If the producer had dated the film 1950 it would have stood a better chance of winning believers.

An exceedingly sketchy plot furnishes the excuse for the introduction of numerous novel and spectacular effects.

The ultimate culmination of efforts toward world-wide peace are conceived by the director of this picture. The marvelous machinery which has enrolled half the people of the world in a movement to insure universal peace is shown at the zenith of its development.

On the other side, one sees the machinery of war; the organized armament manufacturers who find peace unprofitable.

Then what is evidently an attempt to show how futile peace efforts are against the flaring temperament of human beings, hostilities between the two great divisions of the world, the Federated European and the Atlantic states are kindled through a poker game between guards on the international boundary.

Rum runners in a queer looking high-powered car aid in causing more of a breach. At this point excitement becomes heated.

Radio stations send forth rings of aerial waves from powerful stations. Air liners glide to landings in city rivers. Dirigibles flit past a few feet above house tops. Heliocopters settle down upon roofs. Frantic television conversations are held by those affected. Buildings crumble to dust. Gas and fire destroy by radio waves. And in general, there are hot times on earth again.

Mobilization for the great war actually starts, but is halted when the president of the World's Peace Federation prevents the broadcast of the official declaration by killing the prime instigator, the president of the Federated States of Europe.

He announces that the difficulties will be settled by arbitration, declaring that "if this is treason make the most of it," and, despite the fact that he saves the world, he is convicted and sentenced to die.

Although the war isn't fought, there are plenty of horrible scenes, perhaps the most stupendous being the terrific explosion which wrecks an express train in the Channel tunnel between Calais and Dover. A very effective piece of processed photography shows the water of the channel pouring into the wrecked coaches of the stricken train.

While changes have been many since 1920 the makers of this picture depict to us a considerably different world when the 1940 census is taken. Women will wear trousers on the streets and practically nothing at all in the evening. Berets will be the mode for all heads.

Dancing will be to mechanical music with all of the instruments being played by one man pressing electrical buttons. Doors will work automatically. Television communication will have replaced telephones but radio announcers will remain much the same.

Maurice Elvey directed this fantastic affair, displaying the hand of the artist in some of the technical workmanship. The photography is likewise splendid.

The romance in the story is between Benita Hume, daughter of the peace federation head, and Jameson Thomas, soldier and lover.

The picture will need strong comedy support to relieve the tension.

Dumbbells in Ermine

(Warners—All Talker)

Snappy Program Entertainment

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

ALTHOUGH based on the rather risque play, "Weak Sisters," this Warner picture contains little more than a slight suggestion of the stage opus. Nevertheless, it is a snappy and interesting romance thoroughly clean-bubbling with comedy lines and situations—and can be classed as substantial program entertainment.

The boxer-manager team of Robert Armstrong and James Gleason carries much of the comedy, but the humor is rather balanced between practically all members of the cast. Fast tempo of the screen version and capable direction by John Adolfi, provide a highly enjoyable picture of program calibre for week runs and succeeding bookings.

Armstrong and Gleason are teamed again—Armstrong the fighter and Jimmy the hard-boiled and wise-cracking manager. While training for a fight, Armstrong meets and falls in love with Barbara Kent, a sweet and innocent miss whose family stands among the socially elite of the town. The girl's mother wants her to marry Arthur Hoyt, a spellbinding missionary and reformer, but Barbara throws him over for Armstrong. Grandmother Beryl Mercer spots the Kent-Armstrong romance and helps it along at every opportunity. After the usual lovers' spat and "I never want to see you again" attitude, the girl becomes reconciled to her marriage to Hoyt. But the latter invites a group of "weak sisters" to a revival meeting, and is washed out when one of the girls accuses him of her downfall.

This eliminates Hoyt, with the girl then easily getting family permission to marry Armstrong after the reconciliation. Gleason wanders in and out of the story with his wise-cracking attempts to dissuade Armstrong from falling in love. Finally he tries to help the fighter with advice on cave man tactics.

Slapstick comedies and musicals will fit here.

Produced and distributed by Warners. Directed by John Adolfi. Adapted from play, "Weak Sisters," by Lynn Starling. Adaptation by Harvey Thew. Dialogue by James Gleason. Photography by Dev Jennings. Length, 6,300 feet. Running time, 70 minutes. Release date May 10, 1930.

Safety in Numbers

(Paramount — All Talker)

Excellent

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

HERE'S that rare combination of intelligent direction, brilliant dialogue—and rich humor. The result is a picture that is entertainment plus. Showmanship brains made this production and it is destined to be a box-office clean-up.

The lion's share of the honors should go to the director, Victor Schertzinger, and the authors, George Marion, Jr., and Percy Heath. Their labors would have put the picture over with any kind of a cast, but an excellent roster of players has been enlisted and adds to the box-office appeal. "Buddy" Rogers is decorative and an adequate hero, if somewhat juvenile in his emoting; Kathryn Crawford is convincing as the heroine, but it is Roscoe Karns, playing the role of a taxicab chauffeur, who nets most of the laughs. His comedy is sure fire.

"Buddy" loses his job as an employe in the San Francisco office of his uncle, because he turns the establishment into a dancing school, and is sent to New York, in care of three relatives who are to teach him the social graces during the three months before he receives his patrimony of $25,000,000. The three turn out to be Follies beauties and "Buddy" learns plenty about women from them. Another chorus dame tries to make "Buddy" and his millions, and the manner in which his three "guardians" rescue him from her designs is a riot. He falls in love with one (Kathryn Crawford) but the customary plot requirements make the going tough until the happy ending.

The story is light fare, but that is its chief asset. It travels at a fast tempo, clicking laughs without end, most of them due to the exceptionally clever dialogue.

Rogers' singing voice will never win any medals for him, but neither will it disturb the neighbors. He renders three songs, but the lyrics are unintelligible and the music hackneyed and trite. That portion of the picture is a dead loss.

Will stand plenty of boosting as a laugh-getter, but plug the romance to get in the women folks.

A newsreel and novelty shorts of a serious type will fit in.

Recaptured Love

(Warner's—All Talker)

About Average

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

"RECAPTURED LOVE" is a burlesque on sophisticated comedy drama of married life. Utilizing broad comedy and slapstick situations, Director John Adolfi provides mildly interesting program entertainment from a rather antiquated story background.

The picture rates as average program material for the week runs and subsequent bookings.

Story introduces the happily-married tired business man, John Halliday, who is vamped by Dorothy Burgess, night club entertainer. After his 18 years of married life, Halliday steps out and installs the girl in an apartment, with the wife finally wising up and departing for a Paris divorce.

Halliday marries the "whoopee" girl. Meanwhile the ex-wife returns from abroad and steps out herself. Tired of the wild life of his youthful mate, Halliday seeks rest and seclusion at the country home of his former wife.

After much pleading by Halliday and his son, the ex-wife consents to start all over again without the husband's knowledge; ex-wife buys off Burgess for $100,000 and then makes Halliday pay the freight. Climax finds the family happily reunited.

Halliday and Belle Bennett make the most of rather weak roles. Bernard Durkin, as the young son, has lines much in advance of his age but handles them well. Dorothy Burgess as the charmer plays the role in great style, while George Bickel and Richard Tucker ably handle smaller parts.

The Sisters G, of foreign fame, and the Earle Wallace dancers do some lively stepping in the night club sequences.

While lacking in subtleness and more repressed comedy, the "take it big" attitude of the cast will probably appeal to most audiences and go over. Name draws, except possibly Belle Bennett, are weak and need strong support.

Good shorts are needed to fill here.

Shadow of the Law

(Paramount—All Talker)

A Powell Program Drama

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

A VERY good program picture that, despite two or three impossible situations and a sudden and somewhat dissatisfying ending, will please most audiences. In communities where William Powell has a good following the picture will go over satisfactorily.

Built along the "Jimmy Valentine" order, this talker has action and tight situations galore. Paul Hurst, as the prison pal of Powell, gives a fine performance and his comedy is sure fire.

Powell, as an innocent victim of circumstances, is sent to prison for murder. He escapes and after many dramatic situations proves his innocence to Frederic Burt, the hard-boiled detective. The high spots of the picture are Powell's escape from prison, and his method of avoiding having his finger-prints taken. Natalie Moorhead is excellent as the gold-digging femme who is the cause of Powell's misfortunes.

A love story is carefully woven into the drama with Marion Shilling serving as the appeal. Regis Toomey, George Irving and James Durkin have small roles which are handled well.

Some patrons may squawk about the too sudden ending but for the most part the picture will be accepted as good program entertainment.

Musical shorts and [illegible] will be used with this.

Beyond the Rio Grande

(Big 4 Prod.—S. R.—All Talker)

Unimpressive

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

A BORDER romance—bordering on the edge of feebleness in direction and performance, slightness of plot, dialogue and even the silent titles interspersed throughout the six reels to explain time lapses. Out for keys and better-grade houses, but passable for smaller houses in neighborhoods where theatres play westerns and adventures stuff for kids.

Numerous sequences are very obviously forced, whereas more intelligent handling would have greased the ways to allow for a more natural treatment, thereby speeding the action to a faster clip than the monotonous pace at which the director allowed the story to travel.

The feeble handling is more pronounced in the fistic encounters between Jack Perrin and two bad men, and again where attempts were made to inject comedy. Both very poorly done.

Sound is good, and the photography commendable, but these two factors are not of sufficient strength to serve as saving graces.

Performances of the entire cast are nothing to write home about, despite the strong line-up of players well known in westerns. Jack Perrin is supported, weakly, by Franklyn Farnum, Buffalo Bill, Jr., Edmund Cobb, Pete Morrison and others.

The story is a concoction of western, drama, and light Spanish "operetta." Hash!

A good sound cartoon, newsreel and a hilariously funny two-reel slapsticker are needed with this. But make sure that the support is plenty strong.

Back Pay

(First National—All Talker)

Lukewarm and Less

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

WITH this production Corinne Griffith bows out of First National, due, it is reported, to the failure of her voice to register satisfactorily. While "Back Pay" justifies this criticism, the star's picture is not a triumphant one, thanks to an implausible and mechanical story, poor direction and weak support. No one connected with the picture seemed to have taken much interest in it.

At times Miss Griffith's voice carries well, but it dies out at intervals and a number of her lines were unintelligible. She went through her performance without a show of enthusiasm, although the role did not offer many opportunities. Grant Withers, playing opposite, was a wooden hero and lacking in facial expressions. Montagu Love made a rather unsuccessful attempt to portray an asinine characterization. Hallam Cooley made the most of a small bit as a wisecracking salesman.

The star is cast as Hester Bevins, a saleswoman in a small town department store, who, tiring of her humdrum life and hick friends, and deaf to the proposal of Gerald Smith, a small salaried bookkeeper, flees to New York. The next sequence shows her ensconced in a luxurious apartment provided by Wheeler (Montagu Love) a war profiteer, and apparently having the time of her life. On a motor trip she again visits her home town and again falls for the blonde hair and blue eyes of the bookkeeper, but seems to get over it. Gerald goes to war and returns gassed and blinded. Hester pleads with her paramour to be allowed to marry Gerald, who has not long to live, and the profiteer with unusual magnanimity, consents. After Gerald's death, however, Hester refuses to resume her former relations with Wheeler. There is no indication as to what Hester is to do thereafter. Very sugary and noble, if entirely lacking in logic.

The continuity is choppy and lacking in cohesion. Sequences are broken off abruptly and lapses of time are bridged without explanation. Newsreel shots of the Armistice Day celebration in New York have been injected and the battle scenes prove laughable, with the artillery fire stopping conveniently to allaw the audience to hear the dialogue between the boys in the trenches.

This picture rates only as a fair programmer and does not justify much exploitation.

Needs good comedy support. Give them peppy shorts.

In Gay Madrid

(M-G-M—All Talker)

Charming: Womea's Stuff

(Reviewed by "Red" Kann)

CAUGHT in an out-of-town theatre at an afternoon showing with an audience plentifully besprinkled with women, Novarro's latest singing-talking opus clicked strong.

The locale and all that the feminine imagination can read into it, unquestionably had considerable to do with the reaction. Spain, Madried, mantillas, sleek-haired sheiks and guitars—or maybe they were mandolins—soft skies. That's the type of background that runs through "In Gay Madrid."

The production itself is charming, handled with nice touches and directed deftly. Credit Bob Leonard for that. Novarro, carrying further his proclivities for comedy as evidenced in "Devil-May-Care" here displays much adeptness at light roles. His manner is tongue-in-the-cheek all the way, consequently never serious and usually delightful.

The story is lightweight. Novarro, a lion with the women and the hero of many escapades, goes to the small town of Santiago to continue his studies. There he meets, flirts with, and then falls for Dorothy Jardon who looks more Hollywood than Spain and talks the same way. Novarro serenades her and gradually makes the grade despite the feigned indifference on the part of the girl. Then that old reliable—the rejected suitor—gets in his dirty work by reporting to the girl's father that La Goyita, former bosom companion of Novarro, is in his quarters. Ramon denies. Of course, he's wrong and the engagement is broken. To add drama, the girl's brother challenges Novarro to a duel and wounds him as the latter fires his pistol into the air. This clears the path to the reconciliation.

The cast is generally good, although it does seem a bit peculiar that the only accent in the Spanish yarn should fall from Novarro's lips.

Try a Laurel and Hardy comedy with this. Should make a swell combination.

Sweethearts and Wives

(First National—All Talker)

Billie Dove's Best

(Reviewed by "Red" Kann)

FUNNY Hollywood custom. On her way out of First National, Billie Dove is slipped just about the best yarn she has had since stepping foot on the Burbank lot. The result is a nice piece of entertainment.

Not heavy, by a long shot, but diverting. The reason is directly traceable to the vehicle itself, a mystery comedy drama with several surprise twists that won't prove much of a surprise to any fan who is on his toes in doping out final close-ups. As a matter of fact, the story is well-knit enough to carry itself and is so geared that run-of-the-mill performances would have been sufficient to carry it.

While Miss Dove goes through with average work, it is, nevertheless, her starring vehicle and, therefore, the credit goes to her.

The good, old diamonds are the piece d'resistance around which the tale unfolds itself. They constitute the one piece of evidence required by Crauford Kent to divorce his wife. Miss Dove, as the sister of the wife in the case, is hotfooting after the rocks in order to keep the household from breaking up. Into the picture enter Sidney Blackmer and Leila Hyams. The pair on the verge of an affair, reach a French country hotel and walk straight into the jewelry menace. Clive Brook, posing as a divorce detective but really a crook after the gems, gives the threesome plenty of run. Miss Dove, to protect the reputation of the married Miss Hyams, poses as Blackmer's wife and Miss Hyams becomes the maid. So it goes, sometimes fast, more often slow, until the final piece of strategy clears away the entanglements and leads to the clinch between Blackmer and Dove.

Miss Hyams' role outdistances the star's by plenty. It's a fat comedy part that gets many of the laughs and, while Leila won't knock anybody stiff with the merit of her work, the obvious nature of the character proves a cinch for her to handle.

Brook is suave, neat and debonair as the psuedo detective—too much so, as a matter of fact. But for that the director, Clarence Badger, should be taken to task. Albert Gran, who gets no billing, is in the reckoning for a short part as the French police inspector. He does nicely.

Musical shorts would provide the balance.

The Flirting Widow

(First National—All Talker)

Amusing: Sometimes Draggy

(Reviewed by "Red" Kann)

IT'S all been done before in various forms, yet this Dorothy Mackaill vehicle comes through the production mill as a pleasant, inocuous enough attraction.

Nothing heavyweight about "The Flirting Widow" from any angle. The mob probably won't remember much about the film except that it afforded an hour or more of light entertainment, occasionally weighed down by skimpy situations, stretched thin over footage that has trouble carrying the load. For warm weather patronage, however, this production is nicely tempoed and bids fair to give general satisfaction.

The yarn is English and is based on "Green Stockings" by A. E. W. Mason. Miss Mackaill plays the part of the oldest of three daughters, the others being the attractive Leila Hyams and Flora Bramley. Leila, the middle daughter, is married. Flora isn't, but wants to and would if Claude Gillingwater didn't adhere to the old-fashioned idea about marrying off the oldest before the youngest takes the step. Dorothy is eager for the leap, but it seems she hasn't met anyone who measures up to her standard. But when Flora and her beau, Anthony Bushell, attempt to palm her off on William Austin, Dorothy hurdles the situation by declaring she is in love with a Colonel John Smith, British army officer then Arabia-bound to quell a native rebellion. The family, tickled into several shades of pastels over the news, makes her write a letter and mails it when Dorothy is trying to trump somebody's ace. The obvious happens, of course. There is a Colonel Smith, smartly as well as suavely played by Basil Rathbone who gives a lot of women this scribe knows chilly shivers of excitement whenever his celluloid physique fills the screen.

Smith, or Rathbone, reads through the gag and makes up his mind to milk it for all it's worth. He does, is successful in giving the audience a number of laughs and in making Mackaill go for him. Storywise, that's all.

Miss Mackaill's performance is workmanlike, but unmarked by either high or low spots. Just an experienced trouper going through an easy role. Rathbone, as note, does very nice work. Flora Bramley's ancestry must have made its mark in oil; she's that gushy. Emily Fitzroy has little to do and does that way. Austin is often amusing as the damfool Englishman, but is permitted to overact heavily.

Sound cartoons O. K. here.

Numbered Men

(First National—All Talker)

Program Prison Drama

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

"NUMBERED MEN" presents plenty of exploitation possibilities because of its timeliness after a series of jailbreaks in various sections of the country. But the picture has been so loosely put together, with dramatic episodes failing to impress to any great extent that it will appeal mainly to those audiences that are not too particular about story interest.

The picture will get by in the week stands and subsequent split week bookings, and can be developed into a substantial attraction through circus exploitation of the jail angle. Although attempt was made to create a melodramatic romance, haphazard direction apparently failed to lift the punches to their proper levels.

Story opens inside the prison walls, with Raymond Hackett in for a term after being framed for counterfeiting. The warden has an honor system, allowing good conduct prisoners certain freedom and the men guard this privilege. Then Hackett, Nagel and others are transferred to a road gang, with Ralph Ince and Ivan Linow staying behind. Ince uses Linow as a tool to start a jailbreak which proves unsuccessful. But Ince makes his escape in the turmoil.

Bernice Claire, sweetheart of Hackett, is pursued by Maurice Black, gang leader responsible for framing Hackett. She eludes Black and gets work at a farmhouse near the road camp. Final sequences bring all principals together at the farm house: Black persuades the girl to have Hackett escape; the warden and searching party arrive to recapture Ince; the latter sneaks into the house and attacks the girl. Warden and party return, and are held back by Ince's strategy. When the warden is locked in a closet, Ince starts away, but sees Black outside and kills him. Ince is then shot down. Only Black and Ince are aware of Hackett's innocence, but Nagel steps up to clear the boy with confession that he really made the plates a long time ago, even though he will get ten more years for talking. This clears Hackett, who is able to look forward to an early release and happiness with the girl.

Outstanding dramatic punches are lacking in the picture, with story developing in a matter-of-fact manner. The cast did as well as could be expected under the circumstances.

Good comedies are needed to help this one over.

Produced and distributed by First National. From stage play, "Jailbreak," by Dwight Taylor. Directed by Mervyn Le Roy. Screen version and dialogue by Al Cohn and Hugh McCarty. Photographed by Sol Polito. Length, 6,480 feet. Running time, 72 minutes. Release date, Sept. 7, 1930.

The Floradora Girl

(M-G-M—All Talker)

Great Audience Stuff

(Reviewed by Charles F. Haynes)

ANY audience will get a whale of a kick out of this picture, which is a mixture of comedy and meller of the naughty nineties. What laughs there are in the costumes, the gallivanting of the young bloods of "the good old days" presented against the background of the quaint romance of the show girl and the young millionaire! This is great entertainment and a picture that has a lot of the so-called big ones backed off the map.

There are times when it approaches burlesque, with its now ludicrous costumes and wisecracks; others when it reaches out for tears. But it's pleasing all the way, never for a moment losing interest and has an abundance of heart laughs. There is even a horse race for thrills.

Add to this a fine cast, headed by the always-able Marion Davies, and you have a picture which will please any kind of audience.

Director Harry Beaumont has adopted a tongue-in-his cheek attitude in filming this and his treatment of what was considered fast-stepping in the nineties provides plenty of amusement. The old-fashioned bathing customs of the day, beer drinking picnics where the gallants did their stuff with great gusto and where the chief diversion was singing and swinging with one's lady love; the early horseless carriage, songs of the day and the girl's "Father, Dear Father, Come Home with Me Now" act, certainly carry a kick. Ilka Chase, as the wisecracking Floradora Girl, Lawrence Gray as the male lead, and Sam Hardy are outstanding in the cast. Walter Catlett and Claude Allister get some laughs, and Nance O'Neil is effective as the mother.

Marion Davies is a Floradora Girl, too much shy to cop off a millionaire husband. Her sister troupers take her in hand and she has an affair with a young millionaire, falling for him hard. In the words of one of the troupe, "His intentions weren't honorable," and he disdains marriage. After realizing he loves her, he proposes, but their marriage is opposed by the boy's mother when the youth loses the family fortune. The girl makes the sacrifice, but the youth finally makes good in the budding automobile business, and comes to carry her away in the middle of the Floradora act.

The final scene shows the boy trouping on to the stage in the preoccupation of trying to win back the girl and is effectively done in color, even though far-fetched. Good hokum.

Dramatic shorts with this or a comedy for all-comedy bill.

Baltimore Exhibitor Produces Short Film

Baltimore—A short film subject entitled "A City Symphony," which is an abstract study of impressions of the movement in a city without the human element having any part to play, has been finished by Herman G. Weinberg, manager of the Little Theatre.

Parallel motion is illustrated, for instance, by the movement of trains, rivers, etc., while vertical movement is symbolized by raindrops falling, skyscrapers rising and the movement of elevators outside buildings under construction.

The picture cost about $80 to make. Mr. Weinberg did all the photographic, developing, printing and assembling work. From the 2,500 feet of film shot he selected 900 to be used. It runs 9 minutes and will have a synchronized musical score. It resembles "Berlin, the Symphony of a City."

"All Quiet" in Day and Date Runs in London

London—"All Quiet on the Western Front" Thursday began day and date runs at the Regal and Alhambra. This is the first day and date showing in England, it is stated.

Opinions on Pictures

Love's Memories

(Pathe-Songs—1½ Reels)

Fair Song Novelty

A SAPPY blonde throws cold water on what might have been ace-high entertainment. Her over-acting reaches the pinnacle of distaste. Aside from that, the reel is not half bad. Elaborate sets help build entertainment value of the piece, a song novelty featuring several pretty good voices. Running time, 14 minutes.

Book a short-reel comedy sketch and a feature comedy drama with this.

The Still Alarm

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1625—1 Reel)

Clever

ONE of the most entertaining skits in "The Little Show" (musical comedy) has been transplanted bodily to talkers with Clifton Webb and Fred Allen, two of the stage principals, in the leads.

It's a polite take-off on a fire in a hotel, eleven floors above the street, and is so foolish it's funny. Webb entertains the firemen while the blaze rages, gives one a cigar while the other, with a penchant for the violin, plays "Keep the Home Fires Burning." Nonsensical, but there. Directed by Roy Mack. Running time, 9 mins.

Bill it in ad copy. Rates it.

Contrary Mary

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3753—1 Reel)

Funereal

ALL Technicolor, all flat. Bobby Watson gets feature billing in this example of what not to do in musical shorts. It seems that he is the producer of a show and is in love with Sally. The latter's country sister lands backstage and, although you have to guess it, you finally gather she is angling for Watson. The finale, and presumably the kick, comes when Watson announces he has married Sally after all. After which, the sweet country girl drops the sugar, spots a couple of hard-boiled "damns" and the picture fades out. So will you. Running time, 9 mins.

Bolster it as strong as you know how.

Two of a Kind

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 945—1 Reel)

Poor

BILLY LYTELL and Tom Fant in a vaudeville turn that explains why vaudeville is dead. Falls flat in every particular, their attempts at humor being particularly atrocious. Running time, 8 minutes.

Needs strong support.

A Fairy Godfather

Hollywood—Publication of a yarn in a recent issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS telling of Paramount's big publicity break in capturing the front cover of Satevepost with a Norman Rockwell painting of Gary Cooper at work on "The Texan" set, brought to light the interesting visit of Rockwell to the Paramount studio, made many months ago.

Rockwell was being escorted through the plant by Arch Reeve and, noticing what he declared novel material for a Post cover, begged Reeve's permission to use Cooper and a part of the set in a cover drawing. Reeve almost passed out with sheer joy, but gave his "consent" to Rockwell before fainting.

And what Paramount would have gladly paid for a break like that!

Short Subjects

Noah Knew His Ark

(Pathe—Sound—1 Reel)

Fine Cartoon

NO bill should be without a cartoon, and this reel belongs to that group which can be depended upon for a few minutes of refreshing mirth. Running time, about 8 minutes.

Fine for a feature drama.

Slick as Ever

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1015-16—2 Reels)

Too Long

H. J. CONLEY'S vaude sketch recorded in talking celluloid. The 16 minutes devoted to it are too long and tough on even indulgent audiences. The sequences are strung together in horse play fashion, lacking both rhyme and reason. Conley makes it a one-man show, and while some of his stuff is funny, too much of him is asking a lot to sit through. Looks as if the principal fault here is length coupled with poor material. Running time, 16 mins.

Needs strong support if you run it. Try a cartoon reel.

Oom Pah Pah

(Pathe-Sound—1 Reel)

Cartoon—and a Good One

VAN BEUREN'S "Aesop Fables" continue to click as laugh getters. This new reel is as funny as many of its predecessors, nicely timed to musical and song synchronization. A German brass band—the old street type—furnishes the action. Running time, 6 minutes.

Splendid light entertainment to offset heavy feature stuff.

She Who Gets Slapped

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3900—1 Reel)

Dugan Saves It

THE boys are at the club playing cards. Their respective wives start raising the devil over the telephone and so the poker orgy draws to an end. Tommy Dugan finds himself afraid to go home and is persuaded to cough up fifty bucks for a course in instruction on how to beat browbeating wives into line. He sees the teacher sock the other half to a fare-ye-well and then ambles home. There he attempts the same procedure. Only it doesn't work. Dugan is the one bright spot in the picture, which is pretty flat stuff. Running time, 9 minutes.

Cartoon comedies and musical shorts will provide good balance.

The Wedding of Jack and Jill

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3826—1 Reel)

Dandy

A CAST of clever youngsters in an all-Technicolor fairy tale fantasy that will make a big hit with the kids and appeal to adults at the same time. The settings and costumes are splendid and the small actors and actresses have been well drilled. Their hoofting and singing would do credit to many grown-up entertainers. Running time, 8 minutes.

Good in any kind of a spot.

Reno or Bust

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3942-3—2 Reels)

Fair

THIS is billed as "a satire on Reno, the Mecca of dissatisfied wives and bewildered husbands," but the satire is lost sight of in an attempt to blend slapstick with straight situation comedy. A couple, seeking a collusive divorce, go to Reno where he is to give her grounds for a separation by hitting her, in the presence of a physician. The doctor gets the blow on the chin and both flee to save hubby from being sent to a nuthouse. Then they clinch and make up. There are a few good gags and lines in it, but it's padded out too much. Running time, 13 minutes.

Will provide balance for a melodrama.

Horace Heidt and His Californians

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 908—1 Reel)

Dull

A BAND act that falls flat with the exception of a sequence in which Lobo, a police dog, performs a few tricks. The selections played are routine jazz tunes that annoy, and the solo specialties of the members of the band are childish. Then the entire band makes things worse by singing. Heidt himself does not get his personality across. Running time, 7 minutes.

Spot it into a heavy program.

Trying Them Out

(Pathe-Talker—2 Reels)

Book It!

AT last, we have something different in the comedy line, thanks to dear 'ol John Bull. Yep, he has sent over a delightfully refreshing two-reel laugh getter—and how it gets 'em—from his Ellstree studios, near London.

The entire action takes place in an old Liverpool theatre on "Amateur Night"—an institution in the now antiquated variety houses. Antics of the performer and the tough riverfront audience develop hilariously funny comedy. Running time, 17 minutes.

Just the thing for that heavy dramatic feature.

Audio Review No. 23

(Pathe-Sound—1 Reel)

Hits Two Out of Three

THREE units are included in the new "Audio" compilation; two are splendid and the third is terrible. In the latter class is "Mandy Lee," sung by the Review quartette. The harmonizing is fair, but Pathe's Coloratura

Quick, Tar-and-Feathers!

The movies, as you can see by the pictures, look to all sorts of sources for their material. The latest yarn has it that one talented author thought mythology would be good. He went to a prominent producer with the story of Diana.

The producer read the script with great interest and asked: "Diana—who is she?"

The author, amazed, replied: "Diana, goddess of the chase."

"Well, she's a pretty fair looker," came back the producer, "but with these new talking pictures, it's pretty hard to make chase pictures."

process is as bad as the most amateurish of color photography and laboratory technique.

Pathe's new stereoscopic process was used to film a tropical island. The results are perfect. "Columbus", synchronized with music, follows. This unit depicts the last resting place of America's discoverer; rather impressive. Running time, 10 minutes.

Okay for a feature with a snappy cartoon, too.

Song Painting

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1011)

A Pip

JUST Ann Seymour in a couple of songs—but how she puts them over! Not much of a singing voice, but she's chuck full of personality, and the second of the songs is a scream from start to finish. All about the mistake God made when he created man and the fine job he did when he made the female of the species. The lyrics are a riot and will keep any audience roaring from start to finish. Running time, 7 minutes.

Run it with any kind of bill, you can't go wrong!

Hay-Wire

(Laurel & Hardy—M-G-M—2 Reels)

A Wow

WE don't believe they can make comedies any funnier than this one. Once the audience starts laughing it can't stop. Laurel and Hardy start to put up a radio aerial on Hardy's home—and then the fun begins. Twice Hardy rolls off the roof and drops into a pool in the yard. Then he ties himself to the chimney and shortly afterward both land in the water, pulling down the chimney on top of them. Next comes a thrilling ride in a runaway Ford, with Hardy perched on top of a ladder in the flivver. Full of good gags. Running time, 21 minutes.

Insurance for a weak feature.

Sporting Brothers

(Pathe—Talker—1 Reel)

Fine Sport Stuff

A THRILLY study of the three pigskin games: soccer, English rugby and football, showing the close relationship to each other, as least in so far as hair-raising plays are involved. Of course, the football sequence will receive the most plaudits because the other two games are so little known in this country. The subject rates a booking anywhere. Running time, about 8 minutes.

If you have a snappy feature comedy, use this for the novelty angle.

Musical Beauty Shop

(Pathe—Talker—2 Reels)

Splendid British Subject

A SNAPPY little musical effort which hails straight from dear ol' Lunnon, where Gordon Bostwick is producing a series of shorts for Pathe's "Melody Series."

The mechanical factors are as successfully treated as in American shorts of the better type, with pleasing sound, and steppy jazz tunes accompanying a bevy of high steppers. Photography is dark in some spots, but this in no way interferes with the entertainment value, which rates pretty highly.

Several specialty acts are incorporated in the revue. They're all splendid, with a performance by two fancy-skaters highlighting the group—a cracker-jack pair for some enterprising booking agent to tie up for the States. Running time, 18 minutes.

Fine musical entertainment for a bill with heavy feature stuff.

Grab It!

Anyone who doubts that theatre patrons want slapstick, in preference to the raft of so-called sophisticated comedies which have been coming all too frequently, should get a load of "Hay-wire," Laurel & Hardy comedy riot, while it's being shown in a theatre. It's hoke all the way, some of it as old as the hills, some of it new, but how the laughs do come. Here's hoping that it proves a strong selling argument for the return of good, clever slapstick and the boost for comedies generally that they need.

Hynes

Mawas

(Capitol Prod.—Part Talker)

(3½ Reels)

A Wow!

A WE-INSPIRING gorillas, vicious cobras, mammoth elephants, ferocious tigers and bleary-eyed crocodiles are but a few of the "characters" in this thrilling subject, taken in the naked wilds of the Malayan jungles, where a misstep means certain death, as evidenced by the gruesome end which befell a native when he strayed from the hunting party.

They hit the right length with 3½ reels, each one packed with wallops aplenty, and well timed with effects and atmospheric musical accompaniment.

The introduction is made by way of a camper's circle on a trip in the California Sierras, where a group of "Hollywood hunters" are assembled to hear the tale of a friend's East Indian expedition. The next sequence finds the explorers on their way to the jungles, and before the initial reel is ended we are met face to face with wild man-eating creatures who are ever on the alert for intruders. From there on it's all action, every foot holding at least one sure-fire thrill.

Although the cameraman apparently felt no fear, his work suffers because of faulty stock or laboratory work. Running time, 37 minutes.

Splendid material to balance comedy feature.

Lair of Chang-How

(Pathe—Talker—2 Reels)

Thrills—Suspense—Beauty

ONE of the most interesting series on the market, Tom Terris' "Vagabond" group, beats all of the old fast-action adventure and serial subjects to a frazzle. His newest release is as entertaining as its two predecessors.

Mysterious and picturesque Hongkong is vividly pictured, to the strains of Oriental tunes and Terris' pleasing British accent. It grips you tensely for 18 minutes. Book it!

Comedy-drama feature will go best with this.

Beauty Parade

(Universal-Silent—2 Reels)

Not So Funny

PERHAPS there are persons who can laugh at "comedies" in which the entire cast imitates jumping jacks, but this latest Arthur Lake opus leaves us sad. Arthur takes part in a bathing beauty contest with a pair of toy balloons stuck in front of his bathing suit and another serving as a bustle. His "shape" is ruined by a boy with a slingshot. Now go on with the story. Directed by S. Newfield. Running time, 20 minutes.

May get by on small time.

Going Places

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1,027—2 Reels)

A Laugh Riot

SHAW AND LEE in a number that will send patrons into spasms of laughter. It has a load of funny lines and gags of the broad, though clean, variety. Kids and grownups will get plenty of belly laughs out of this uproarious comedy. Feature it in your billing. Running time, 8 minutes.

For any kind of bill anytime.

The Song Plugger

(Vitaphone Varieties Nos. 1,019—20—2 Reels)

Just Fair

JOE FRISCO hasn't a great deal to offer in this number which will get by, but that's about all. There are a few laughs and Frisco does a dancing number, induced by the publisher to come up to his office to hear a new song which he is to plug. The picture has some plugs for Witmark. Running time, 16 minutes.

It needs a strong supporting bill.

Plane Crazy

(Universal-Silent—2 Reels)

Tiresome

ANY one who will call this a comedy is plain crazy, too. There isn't a shred of real humor evident in it, the situations are shot from the cuff stuff and the contortions of Sid Sayler and his fellow conspirators are painful to watch. Sid is shown as a plumber's assistant and later as the accidental pilot of an airplane. The situations are not built up and the result is an incoherent jumble. Directed by Van Renkel. Running time, 18 minutes.

Give it exceptional support.

Hell's Heels

(Universal-Silent—1 Reel)

Weak

THIS is one of the poorest of the Oswald cartoons we've ever seen, and for the 'steenth time within a month we've watched the ribs of an animal carcass being used as a xylophone, together with human skeletons taking part in the action. That gag should be buried. There are only one or two good laughs in the offering. The rest is routine stuff. Running time, 6 minutes.

Use it with a strong feature.

Jack McLallen

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 946—1 Reel)

Pretty Dumb

NOT much to this vaudeville skit in celluloid form. Jack McLallen is successful in getting a few laughs, but the running line of dialogue is generally dull, uninspired and unfunny. No story, just gags and most of them very, very sad. Running time, 10 mins.

Needs loads of support.

Nile Green

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 987—1 Reel)

Few Laughs

HELEN BRODERICK wisecracks her way through this short, playing the role of a tourist in Egypt. She's fed up on the regulation tours, so induces a young man to show her around. She gets a few laughs by her sallies, but on the whole this is just fair. Running time, 8 minutes.

Build up around. It needs it.

Central Leased For High Brow, Foreign Films

Plans for the conversion of the Central playhouse, independent legitimate theatre here, into a motion picture house were announced this week with the leasing of the property to unidentified interests for a term of years. The term rental is reported to be in excess of $300,000, and $150,000 will be spent in remodelling and installation of sound equipment, it is said. The house will be reopened about September 1 as the Punch & Judy Theatre.

The theatre is located in the Chicago Musical College building on east Van Buren street, just off Michigan avenue. It seats 700 persons and was originally designed as a concert hall for the school. It was operated for a time by the Shuberts and more recently by Harry Minturn. The new lessors will rebuild and refurnish the auditorium throughout, in addition to installing sound equipment, it was said. The house will cater to the "more sophisticated tastes in motion pictures," according to Avery J. Bernstein of Robert White & Co., realtors, who negotiated the lease.

It is generally conceded that the operators will be the Chicago Cinema Art Guild, Inc., owners of the Cinema Art Theatre on the near north side. The officers of this organization are: Louis Smilansky, president; Robert F. Bogatin, secretary and treasurer, and Louis Smachal, vice president. The same policy in effect at the Cinema, in all probability, will govern the operation of the Punch & Judy, except that the latter will use sound pictures, it is believed. This would mean that foreign productions will play a prominent part in the house's bookings.

Sex Picture Booked In Majestic Theatre

The Majestic, 2,000-seat Loop legit house, after dropping its stage curtain for the summer, took in the hoakum picture, "Unguarded Girls." The picture opened with a "For Ladies Only" teaser at popular prices. An inning for the saps of the opposite sex is scheduled to follow as soon as the femme trade drops off, with two weeks in all for the picture's run hoped for by the management.

The picture is accompanied by a "medical" lecture with live models and auditorium sales of pamphlets of a sensational nature.

Chi Palace, Last Of Vaude Houses, Turns to Films

The RKO Palace, last of the two-a-days in the city, began its career as a picture and vaude house this week. The innovation was heralded by plenty of display space in the dailies and a four-page insert with red ink banners in The Tribune on opening day. Columbia, Tiffany, General Electric and RCA were the big contributors to the financial end of this latter expensive exploitation, each taking liberal inside and back page space in the insert.

The vaude-film policy at the Palace is on the same basis as at the State-Lake, the other RKO Loop vaude-film spot. Performances are continuous at prices ranging from 35c on week days to 85c on Saturday nights and Sundays. Smoking will be permitted on the mezzanine floor. The only other Chicago house okaying this is the United Artists (Publix-B. & K.). The opening feature was "On the Level" (Fox).

Ushers Carry Gats in This Chi House; Marksmanship, Not Showmanship, Rule

Such Is Fame

John Wray, "Himmelstoss" in Universal's "All Quiet on the Western Front," wanted to see the elaborate cut-outs that dress the front of McVicker's, where the picture is playing here, while in town on his way back to the Coast recently.

"Let's go inside," he suggested to Charlie Loewenberg, Universal exploitation man, who accompanied him, after they had inspected the theatre front.

"Ticket, please," the doorman halted him as he started in "But I'm John Wray. I'm in the picture."

"Sure," smiled the lad. "And I'm Lewis Milestone. But I'll have to get a ticket from you anyhow."

Loewenberg, who had been lagging behind, appeared at this moment and vouched for the actor's identity.

Chicago Women Hail "Divorcee" As Slap at Men

The reception accorded "The Divorcee" (M.-G.-M.) by Chicago women has caused considerable comment and speculation in widely varying circles here. At all performances of the picture during its week at the Chicago theatre observers noted that women patrons greeted the feminine lead's outburst against the single standard with enthusiastic approval. Commentators deduced that either local women were in a rebellious mood, similar to "Ex-Wife's," or that Chicago has more than its share of cheating males. The picture played to tremendous business as a "pink" at the Chicago, and was then given a second Loop week at the Oriental an unusual procedure in the Publix-B. & K. Loop houses here.

Windy City Bandits Nick Theatre Profits

Crime week in the Chicago show business established some sort of record with three hold-ups and a theatre bombing in the last seven-day period.

Floyd Jackson, cashier of the Cinema Art Theatre, was kidnaped by bandits as he alighted from a street car on his way home late at night and forced to return to the theatre and open the safe, from which the thugs took $1,200 in cash and checks. Sitner's gave up $179 to stick-up men, and the Langley, $36. The Biltmore, owned by Nathan Wolf, was bombed while 500 patrons were seated inside. No motive could be advanced by the manager, Michael Kramer.

Weinshenker Head of Sono Art Chi. Office

William Weinshenker, Chicago film and theatre man of many years experience, has been named manager of the Sono Art-World Wide branch here, Bud Rodgers, sales manager, announces.

Big Exploitation Campaign Puts Over 'All Quiet'

One of the best exploited pictures to hit the town in some time has been Universal's "All Quiet on the Western Front," now doing sensational business at McVickers (Publix-B. & K.). The theatre front and lobbies are furnished with plenty of attractive cut-out material and a gigantic reproduction of the well known book wrapper showing the youthful German soldier hangs over the street above the box office. In the early days of the picture's run a ballyhoo truck, on which a large reproduction of the same cover was mounted, paraded the Loop and outlying streets. A book tie-up with the Boston Store, large downtown department store, netted a promiscuous State St. window display. Among numerous other tie-ups were those with Oscar Mayer's sausages, Del Monte coffee and the Hershey chocolate people.

More Action in Theatre than On Screen; Hell Popping Every Minute

The toughest theatre patronage in the world is the dubious distinction that might well be claimed by a local house situated on the fringe of Chicago's Little Italy, on the near northwest side.

Riots start at the drop of a hat; disturbances are frequent, violent and bold. To cope with the situation, ushers and other attendants are armed both with revolvers and with flashlights supplied with special ends loaded with lead. And they are frequently used, according to veteran theatre men here who have studied the situation in this particular house for years.

The code of the district demands that the police must never be called by the management to put down the frequent disturbances. Any means the manager himself may resort to, so long as they have to do only with inside self protection, are considered legitimate. Hence the guns and loaded flashlights are not, strictly speaking, outlaw resources. But to summon the police would be a measure in direct violation of the code of the district, and would be to invite the worst wrath of the hoodlums. It was done once, and the manager was later waylaid and would have suffered a brutal beating had not an intermediary put in an appearance at a vital moment.

Employees of the theatre must be gorillas themselves. A husky negro, an ex-prize fighter, was once hired for balcony ushering duty after disturbances had grown more frequent in that section of the house. The hoodlum patronage resented the discharge of the old usher, "ganged" the negro, took his gun and flashlight away from him and threw him out of the theatre.

Another employee, a doorman, asked for his salary check in mid-week at one time. Pressed for an explanation, he admitted the police were looking for him and he was anxious to leave town.

"But what do they want you for?" he was asked.

"Election frauds," he said. "I was a judge at the last election and the opposition caught me using the short pencil and squealed."

Managers change more frequently at this house than any other in the city. They can't stand up under the strain of conducting business under such handicaps or else they incur the ill will of the hoodlums and are warned to get out under threat of bodily harm.

Insurance companies refuse the house theft insurance. It is frequently held up, but extreme precautions are taken and losses seldom amount to much. Most of the receipts are carefully guarded and removed before the total becomes very large. The house is frequently broken into and subjected to acts of vandalism.

And college town exhibitors think they have troubles!

"'Going to Hollywood' has come to mean a very dignified and necessary process—not the freakish procedure once attributed to those words.

"'Unless a New Yorker can go Hollywood, he had better remain in the east,' Erno Rapee declares. 'This is no place for the up-stage actor who refuses to become one of the picture profession with its hard work, informality, long hours and intense desire to get good results, regardless of what the actor or director is called on to do.'

"The famous conductor from New York arrived in Hollywood some weeks hence, to take charge of the musical department of Warner's and First National. Did he stand on his dignity? Did he allow the remembrance of his prestige as a conductor to set him apart from the remainder of the picture profession. Not Erno Rapee. He jumped in and became a part of the great industry, and likes it."

Austria's Film Library

Washington—The National Library of Austria has created a "Cinematheque," in which will be conserved copies of the most important films judged from an artistic and documentary point of view, according to information received by the Department of Commerce. Already 15,000 photographs and 500 film placards have been catalogued and stored. The principal object in view is to prevent the loss of such films after a short period of projection in the cinemas.

Politicians and Managers!

FROM somewhere out of the distant past I quote a paragraph which so impressed me, that I kept it in my scrap book:

"It is the experience of politicians that they win their elections on their platforms and lose them on their achievements."

You can probably recognize this same condition right in the showgame.

You have probably had, at some time or other, the opportunity of listening to someone running for public office and noted, particularly, how they promised to do everything under the sun. They would do so and so and this or that and so many other things that you marveled at their promises.

Well, I've heard the same thing from managers looking for a job. They would absolutely do this, that and the other thing. They would increase patronage without any question of doubt. They would operate that theatre better than it was ever operated before. They would cut the overhead and so on for words and words.

We can distinctly recollect that the showmen who promised nothing more than their best were the ones who succeeded most. The farthest they would bind themselves in conversation was to do their utmost to analyze the situation they found when they went on the job and then do everything possible to put the house over.

Which is a darned sight better than a lot of applesauce.

It is far better to promise little and accomplish a lot, than to promise a lot and accomplish very little. And if the man you are talking to happens to know men, you are just talking yourself out of a job when you try to impress him with a lot of useless and foolish conversation.

"Selling" yourself to get a job or a promotion does not mean making ridiculous and impossible claims. It should mean telling why you feel confident that you can handle the job to everybody's satisfaction.

The more impossible things you promise, the more you will have to live down, especially if the breaks are not so good.

Before a man can really start to show his ability in a new position he must have sufficient time to get the "lay of the land." This should take anywhere from Then if you know your business, you can start out to do all those things that so many men make the mistake of talking about first.

Let your accomplishments speak for themselves. They don't sound so hot when you talk about them in advance.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

John R. Peters Of Indiana Has Been In Game Long Time

Here's a showman from Indianapolis, Ind., who has been in the game for a goodly number of years and still he is quite young. We would like you to meet John R. Peters, manager of the Ritz Theatre in the famous speedway city, and a brand new member.

Peters started in the game at the age of six years. (One for Ripley's book.) In order to make this statement clear we'll tell you how his induction into the show business came about. A picture house near his home went into the hands of a receiver and as his family happened to be friends of the lawyer in the case, he became ticket taker of the house, the Cozy, by name. This was back in the days when electric bells furnished the music for the pictures.

His only recollection of the shows he saw during those days was the "Birth of a Nation," and he still remembers that they stood them up on it. When competition started to build in the town, the house was sold and Peters, then about nine years old, went to work for the new firm. He stayed there until his family moved to California, where he went to school and worked outside of show business. It wasn't until the family moved back to Indianapolis and then went back again to California that he re-entered the show game, by working as an usher in the Ebell and States Theatres in Long Beach. Just in the blood, we guess.

When he was seventeen he found himself back in Indianapolis and went to work at the Egyptian Theatre, shifting from there to the Palace and the Indiana. Since advancement was necessarily slow, he seized upon an opportunity to become chief usher in a suburban house. This he did and a little while later found himself assistant manager of the house. Just two months ago he was made manager of the house he started in as chief usher. And he holds that position at the Ritz to-day.

We want to welcome Peters into the Club and since he has been in the game for so long we feel that he is going to turn out some good work down there. So we wish him the best of luck and hope he'll keep us posted on his work.

F. F. Kislingsbury Made Dough With Sandwich Tie-Up

When it comes to getting in an advance plug on a picture you can bank on it that F. F. Kislingsbury, manager of the Melba Theatre in Dallas, Texas, is going to be right up in front with the leaders so chalk up another for the Oil State.

When "Light of the Western Stars" was booked into his house he decided that he wanted to step out and get in an advance plug that would pretty near sell the picture completely. He tied up with a local merchandiser of sandwiches, a Mrs. Drake, whose tasty creations are known all around Dallas. A plan was arranged whereby coupons were to be inserted in each sandwich sold. The coupons were self-explanatory and read: "All during the week of (week advance of playdate) a coupon is being inserted in Mrs. Drake's sandwiches. Each coupon will carry one letter of the word DRAKE. Save these coupons and try to complete the set of five different letters. Mail before midnight (playdate) to the Contest Editor, Melba Theatre and receive a free pass to see 'The Light of Western Stars' starting (playdate)."

Sixty thousand coupons were inserted in the sandwiches, and with so many of these heralds around loose it's no wonder that the house did a good business on the picture, and it, as well as the sandwich shop, came in for plenty of word-of-mouth publicity. We want to thank Mr. Kislingsbury for passing this one along to us and since we know that the showmen in Dallas are very active, we hope that he will keep us posted on what he is doing to keep in step with his brother show merchandisers.

It Costs You Nothing to Belong to the

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

And see what marvellous benefits you derive from this organization!

A great many showmen (we know) have been just on the verge of joining the Managers' Round Table Club, but have neglected to do so largely through oversight.

We suggest that YOU get full information about this great army of showmen and then decide once and for all whether you want to join.

The mere fact that so many live-wire showmen already belong to the organization — that they represent the cream of the show-world — every branch of theatre management—that not a single one was induced by a salesman or any other sort of solicitation other than through the actual activities of the Club and the word-of-mouth praise that has spread from one end of the world to the other —but joined after simply reading the facts about what the Club does for its members—all these are indications that it is worth your while at least to get these facts as quickly as possible, and then (if you want to) join and get the benefits that such association with fellow showmen is bound to bring.

IT HAS ALMOST REACHED THE POINT WHERE IT IS NOT A QUESTION OF WHO BELONGS TO THE CLUB—BUT, WHO DOESN'T BELONG TO IT!

H. Borland Gave Thermometers As Special Stunt

A great institutional gag that netted his house some good-will was used recently by Hugh S. Borland, general supervising manager of the Calo Theatre in Chicago, Ill.

He tied up with a manufacturer of novelties and secured a midget thermometer which was placed on a card measuring four by seven inches and carrying a picture of some well known screen player. Space was left on the card for the insertion of the name of a local merchant and also, on the bottom, a plug for the theatre.

The merchants, we believe, paid for the cost of making up the cards and since thirty merchants, all in different businesses came in on the idea you can see that the house came in for some institutional plugging of value. Incidentally, while we're talking about show merchandising we'd like to say that Borland gets out some very nice heralds, on his coming attractions. By the judicious use of scene and ad mats, coupled with effective copy he is enabled to turn out work that packs a punch and should certainly sell his shows.

We want to thank him for passing these few ideas of how he works along to us and we hope that he will continue the active interest he is showing. What do you say Hugh, can we count on you to keep us posted?

Wellman's Campaign Featured A Wagon Parade

The residents of Seminole, Oklahoma, were treated recently to an example of showmanship in the form of a ballyhoo for "Light of Western Stars" that had them sitting up and taking notice.

The ballyhoo, which was engineered as a parade, was the work of Roy L. Wellman, manager of the Rex and Ritz Theatres in the above named town. He secured sixteen horses and hired sixteen riders, three of them ladies. Through a tie-up with the local high school he was enabled to secure the use of the school band which he used to lead off the procession.

In the group of photographs we are showing, you will notice a covered wagon that was also used in the parade. This wagon attracted plenty of attention, particularly as Seminole, was, we believe, a town on the original wagon trail. The parade was started on the Saturday of the picture's opening and through the co-operation of the local police all traffic was stopped. The procession marched through the main streets of the town on their way to the theatre. Arriving at the house, they stopped while the band played a few numbers. As a novelty, a trick horse did several stunts. The photos will give you a little idea of the parade and you will also see the unique window displays Wellman turned out by featuring a board on which was attached a number of relics of the "Old West." The campaign went over very well and the house, as a result came in for plenty of extra business and publicity.

As this is Wellman's first contribution, since he has just joined the Club, we feel that he is going to be a very active member. So let's hear from you again real soon Roy, and you might include your photo and a little dope about yourself along with your next contribution.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

ANALYZING THE TRAILER!

FROM FRANK WHITBECK'S "HERE'S HOW"

Suppose you said, to a national advertiser, "Get me up a trailer of 400 feet or better that I can use on my screen. You can put some scenes of your factory in it . . . pictures of your completed product . . . prices, where your merchandise can be purchased. In other words . . . give me a pictorial sales argument that will run about 5 minutes."

Would the national advertiser grab that opportunity . . . would he put the keenest minds in his organization to work on that trailer; would he plan and scheme and think about the sales argument that trailer would contain? You can bet he would . . . and he'd pay you a handsome sum for the showing of such a trailer.

We pay thousands of dollars a year for advertising that isn't one-tenth as good as our own screen advertising, and yet—how many of us ever give a second thought to the trailers on our screen advertising our coming attractions?

Consider this—the advance trailer for a coming attraction can be a power for good . . . or, through your own carelessness, lack of thought or downright ignorance—it can do you even more—harm!

The trailer for your next attraction deserves the best place you can give it in your program . . . next to the feature attraction. That place is just ahead of the current feature . . . when your audience is seated—in a mood for entertainment . . . when they will read—and remember.

If you put it on after the feature . . . what happens?

The entertainment your audience paid their admission price for . . . the feature picture . . . is over—they are either on their way out of the theatre or their interest has dropped down because they know the other attractions on the bill are of secondary importance. Position for your trailer is, therefore, of great importance.

The trailers supplied by the trailer companies are, in their opinion, the best sales argument for the attracting of patronage. They do not always fulfill that purpose. The trailer maker, the workman actually engaged in the making of that trailer, has no understanding, nor appreciation, of your particular operation, Podunk, Mud Flats and Strawberry Point are considered of the same intelligence and importance as New York, Chicago or Los Angeles. The one trailer, the same appeal for the blase theatre-goers of the metropolis is expected to be equally attractive to the more provincial movie lover of the small town.

In the first place—the ideas for most trailers come from the Los Angeles studio press agent. They write the copy, pick the scenes and ship to their New York director of advertising. Here the copy is either given an Okay or it is re-made to the New York idea or turned over to the trailer company.

Those trailers that do not follow this routine are handled about like this — the representative of the trailer company secures different scenes of the production from the studio; these are sent to his office in New York, and then they, the trailer people, make up the sales argument from the press material that is furnished by the studio press department.

There are two styles of trailers . . . the silent and the talking or sound.

The first sort . . . one or two scenes—some high-pressure sales talk, credit to the company, the director and the cast. Many have scenes taken from the talking version; they are grotesque because the lips of the players move and yet the theatre is in dead silence. Others are actually superior to the talking trailers.

We have found that the chief cause for complaint with the talking trailers is their extreme length and the number of scenes that are used. The smart theatre-goer gets too much of an idea of what the picture is all about merely through watching the trailer.

Can you cut these trailers? Yes why not? If it is your idea that the trailer is not good and that it can be improved by cutting and your operator can re-assemble it without harm or damage . . . then—by all means cut it.

A check of the Los Angeles Division shows that out of 14 neighborhood theatres, 10 of them favor silent trailers, 2 are using talking trailers and the other 2 can not make up their minds which is the best.

Silent trailers are best for certain pictures. For instance,—the first talking picture that Lon Chaney will make. You will not want to give away the voice of Chaney in a talking trailer—that is your one big selling argument—that is the one thing that your patrons will pay their money for. Keep Chaney silent . . . until he flashes on your screen. Keep silent any actor of reputation that may come from the legitimate stage to make their first talking picture. Keep silent the voice of John McCormack, until your audience has paid their admission to hear McCormack sing.

The following paragraph concerns those theatres with more than one change of program each week—

Do not use more than one advance trailer during any one performance. By this I mean . . . on your Monday or Tuesday change use the trailer advertising the program on Wednesday and Thursday. If you give your audience too much—if you tell them too much . . . they'll remember nothing.

One trailer at a time . . . remember your patron paid good money to be entertained.

"Hallelujah" Went Over Big Due To H. Lashley's Work

If you recall, we told you about the showmanlike manner Earl Willey sold "Hallelujah" in Savannah, Ga. This picture, due to the many segregated sections in the Southern cities, had to be handled with care, for according to the opinions offered us by a number of Southern showmen it was a bit unusual for the South. But realizing the entertainment value of the production they set about to find ways in which to sell it. Their first and most important move was to run a preview on the picture and secure testimonials to be used in newspaper ads. And that's exactly what H. T. Lashley, manager of the Victory Theatre in Salisbury, N. C., did.

Lashley ran a preview of the film and invited negro ministers, negro college heads, prominent white people and newspaper men to attend. After the showing, the enthusiastic testimonials were used in the newspaper ads and house organ. Three thousand special heralds were sent to the colored sections of the city and to those in nearby towns. The herald plugged the "First Colored Cast In All History" and the special midnight show. The midnight show was held on the Friday preceding the Monday opening and was the means of securing some valuable word-of-mouth publicity over the week-end, especially in view of the fact that an unusually large crowd attended the theatre.

From the photo we are showing you'll get an idea of the special front Lashley made up for the picture. The display was made to represent a negro cabin. A bale of cotton was placed on the side-walk and a negro singer engaged to sit on it and croon tunes from the picture. This stunt, coupled with others Lashley used, enabled him to sell his public completely on the film and prove that no matter what a showman bucks up against in the way of local conditions, he'll always find a way out.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

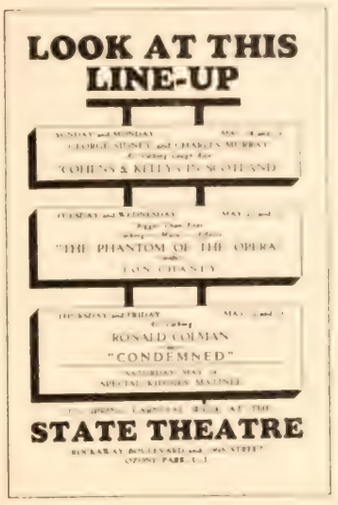
This Is What Bill Connors Is Giving Them At St. Helena

We had a hunch that Bill Conner, manager of the St. Helena Theatre in Chehalis, Washington, was pulling off a couple of stunts, because we hadn't heard from him in quite some time. Sure enough, Bill was busy and as we know from past experience when he's busy there's bound to be some good showmanship displayed.

Feeling that the town needed a taste of high powered showmanship, he decided to stage a public wedding. After securing those two absolutely necessary persons, the bride and groom, he set to work to put the stunt over in a big way. He promoted gifts from all of the prominent merchants and in this manner picked up over eight hundred dollars worth of merchandise that included among it furniture, clothes, rings, and even the marriage license. Special pictures and stories were given the affair by the local newspapers and a couple of weeks of valuable advance publicity was secured. He also promoted a couple of double truck ads in the newspapers.

On the night of the wedding, which was held on the stage of the theatre, a unique stage setting was used. The staff artist, Cyril Sims, designed and built a huge Bible as a background with a beaver board cut-out of a wedding ring in front. This was mounted on a set of steps, cornered by a lighted plaster candle. A local farm organization called the "Grange," furnished a drill team of twenty men and women and they constituted a colorful stage ensemble. After the wedding the bride and groom were "wined and dined" and sent off on their honeymoon via air express. The photos, which are running in conjunction with this article, will give you some idea of the gifts received and also give you a peek at the bride and groom just before starting off. Incidentally, the smiling fellow in the derby is the promoter de luxe, Bill Connor, and from the looks of things Bill is having a very happy time, and from the way he handled the entire arrangement he should be happy. As he himself says, "The only thing lacking was a few hundred seats."

Don't think Bill stopped working when the wedding was finished. That was just another day's work to him. He recently promoted a Chehalis Community Spring Opening that went across to big success. Every merchant in town co-operated with him. Ten stores had fashion shows in their windows, and all of the other stores had some kind of stunt to attract attention to the special week.



A fashion show was lined up by Bill for the theatre and was put on as a finale to the week. On the night of the show a large banner was hung under the electric sign with floodlights playing upon it. He tied up with the local band master and secured an eighteen-piece boys' "pep" band. The boys stood atop the marquee. At nine o'clock a bomb was set off, the banner was unfurled and the band began to play. As a result the people on the crowded streets, celebrating the last night, flocked over to the theatre. After each number a "ballyhoo" was given from the marquee by a barker. The stunt clicked so well that almost everybody in front of the theatre marched up to the box office and laid down their dough.

For his Easter campaign he worked in his kiddie angle and received a lot of publicity by instituting a Mickey Mouse Matinee. The kids were very enthusiastic about it and their laughs and chortles of merriment resounded throughout the theatre. Before starting the show Bill gave them a little talk, the Chief of Police, the Mayor and a couple of more local celebrities said a few words, and a few of the kids gave recitations. The youngsters then joined in community yells and singing.

Immediately after the matinee the kids were taken to a vacant field near the theatre and participated in an Easter egg hunt. About eight hundred kids scrambled through that field for the colored "hen" fruit," which was donated by a local association. The papers played the stunt up in their pages and in addition to this Bill secured plenty of good-will from lots of sources, especially the youngsters' parents. So, with all these things to look after, it is small wonder that Bill didn't write, but we'll excuse him this time if he promises to be sending us in these showmanlike gags more often, because when a fellow pulls off stuff the way Bill does it's a cinch that the rest of the Club wants to know about it, and if it will fit their purpose they are going to make good use of any angle they can grab ahold of.

A LITTLE DIFFERENT!

Observing the mass of circulars, heralds, circus flyers and throwaways that are being used in so many neighborhoods, we often wonder whether they are really worth the money and effort to make them up and distribute.

Perhaps (and this is harping back to our arguments of some months ago) if you would try something a little different, the results would be far more noticeable. As witness the reproduction of a 6 by 9 inch circular turned out by the State Theatre in Ozone Park, L. I., N. Y.

First, keep in mind that this thetre had been using a wide variety of material for distribution and throwaway purposes. Second, they had never attempted to work out any form of a herald that was out of the ordinary.

Naturally, the result was never really effective. Then they happened across, what appeared like, an unusually fine line-up of pictures and the special circular was brought into play. The cost was $10 for five thousand, printed on good coated stock and handled as follows: 1,500 in the theatre's regular mailing list, 1,000 distributed to the children at several of the local schools and the balance, 2,500, deposited, in a well-laid-out campaign, through house-to-house distribution.

Try putting the same "pep" and originality into your circulars and heralds as you do into your newspaper advertising or any other part of your exploitation and publicity work. It will be well worth the effort and time as well as the cost and the returns will be far greater than "just another circular" which gradually becomes a nuisance wherever received. If you can inject something "different" into your advertising of this nature you will create interest as well as added business.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

"DOUBLE TRUCK ADS"

Theatres located in communities where tie-ups with the newspaper open the door to double truck merchant advertising should try to inject some novelty into such advertising tie-ups, otherwise there is a grave danger of killing this great angle.

Running a straight co-operative group of ads in conjunction with the picture you are plugging is not sufficient to make it a valuable tie-up for all concerned.

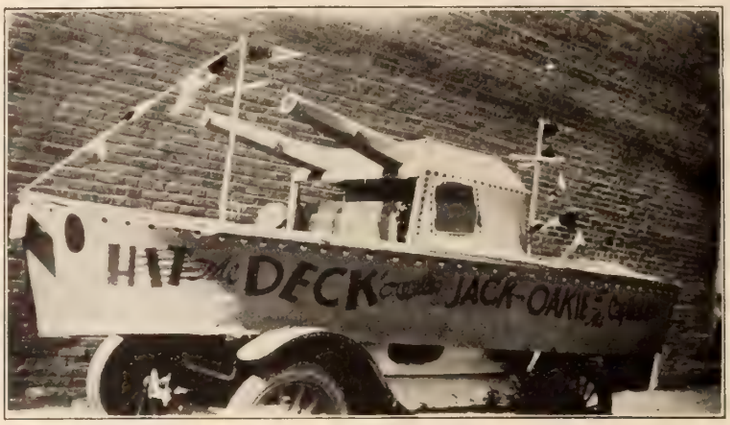
You must work out something novel and different if you want them to ride along with you on future double truck ads.

There are, of course, many ways to inject such novelty. The prize angle, in conjunction with the newspaper, or the advertisers is one. Dressing each and every ad to tie in with the product being advertised as well as the picture is another. Splitting up the stars faces so that it is necessary to cut out all the pieces and paste them together (with free passes for the first fifty) is still another.

The title of the picture may suggest some such angles. Or scrambled words, scattered throughout the various ads might be a good slant.

We could go on for the rest of the page airing our thoughts in this connection, but the most vital point is the necessity for novelty, which means making every prospective advertiser anxious to get into the next co-op page you start to promote.

And, in closing, don't forget that the picture, the play dates and your theatre are not to be treated as step-children on those double trucks.



Pete Egan's Live-wire Activities Include Hockey Team

It has been some time since we recounted Pete Egan's doings but we found that our regional chairman for Western Canada has been busy as they make them the last couple of weeks with the Capitol Theatre in Regina, Sask., Canada, to look after and his local hockey team to be handled through a championship playoff.

Pete, besides managing the theatre, is president of the local Pats Club, the Dominion Junior Hockey Champions, and by a coincidence the team that Pete's charges played against is under the presidency of Jimmy Lynch, the manager of the Runnymeade Theatre in Toronto. Through his team's winning the championship, Pete was enabled to secure a lot of publicity for the house by having motion pictures taken of the team and projected at the theatre. Another angle he worked was by having the team, when they arrived from the championship play-off, parade down the streets and stop at the theatre where they were greeted by the Premier of the Province and the Mayor of the city. The newspapers gave it a big play and you can bet that the house was mentioned plenty.

A stunt that Pete used during the hockey season was having four sandwich men go around the rink between periods with signs advertising the show at the Capitol. In this manner over six thousand persons were reached almost by direct contact and all for a cost of six dollars. Incidentally that photo we are showing is one of Pete's well known street ballyhoos. This one was used to plug the picture "Hit the Deck," and as you will note it certainly has selling points. Anyone seeing this sort of ballyhoo on the streets was bound to look at it.

Pete also is doing some radio broadcasting direct from the theatre. From 10:00 A.M. to 10:30 A.M. sacred music is played on the organ and broadcast over the air. At noon a popular concert is put on and later on in the day a few of the theme songs are played. The variety of the program has made it appeal to all classes of music lovers and Pete has secured some good results by using it.

Oak, Pete, we want to hand you our compliments too, both for your work in helping the Pats to the championship and your showmanship.

Max Cooper Says That Honesty Is The Best Policy

No matter where you go you'll find showmanship in evidence and when a showman has a picture or an attraction that he wants to put over to good receipts you'll generally find that he clicks by using stunts that sell.

One of the managers on the Fox Met. Circuit, Max Cooper, of the Corona Theatre in Corona, L. I., N. Y., a charter member of the Club had always been an opponent of misrepresentation in newspaper ads or any other form of medium of that sort to sell his shows So when he read in the Motion Picture News that "Party Girl" was handed an unfavorable slip in Chicago and children were not permitted to see it, he decided to do something about the picture because it was booked into his house.

Rather than risk having any adverse comments he made up a special trailer which said, "WE DO NOT RECOMMEND "PARTY GIRL" TO CHILDREN ON ACCOUNT OF THE SENSATIONAL EXPOSURE OF THE PARTY GIRL WHOOPEE RACKET." The trailer was run for some time before playdate and made such an impression on the older members of the community that by the time the picture opened the advance interest that had been aroused was tremendous. And despite the fact that on the playdates both days happened to be very hot, business was a knock-out, necessitating a lobby delay and standing room the entire two days.

This example which Cooper so kindly passes along is but one of the many encountered by showmen throughout the country, who, rather than risk the good-will of the house, tell the truth concerning pictures that do not appeal to children, and often find themselves with record breaking days on their hands. Why, we don't know. The public is pretty hard to figure out and if you tell them that a thing isn't fit for kids they're bound to flock in. However that's one of the freak things of a showman's life and for that reason, since it brings in biz. why worry about it.

Sig. Solomon Got Plenty Of Goods Free From Dealers

With the aid of several merchants, S. S. Solomon stocked his treasure chest with merchandise to the value of $301.50 in connection with the advertising of "The Locked Door" playing at the Paramount Theatre, Youngstown, O.

Several hundreds of cards containing a key were given an effective distribution. The card carried copy saying that if this key opened the treasure chest in the Paramount lobby, it would entitle the possessor to its contents—merchandise worth $301.50.

The card also listed the merchants, their gifts and the value of each. And then at the bottom of the card appeared copy, "The doors of the Paramount Theatre will be wide open starting Saturday April 12th to see and hear THE LOCKED DOOR."

The list of valuables consisted of:

Slumber Chair	$57.50
Gold wrist watch	25.00
Ladies wardrobe, dress, stockings, lingerie, etc.	50.00
Vacuum Cleaner	47.50
Tenor guitar, pearl inlay	25.00
Pair of Ladies' Shoes	14.00
Ladies' Hat	15.00
DeLuxe box candy	7.50
Beauty Treatment, Facial, Scalp, etc.	15.00
Two tires and tubes	35.00
Stetson Hat	10.00
	$301.50

The value of the merchandise was in itself enough of an attraction to warrant people coming to the lobby and try their keys. And invariably, they purchased tickets to see the picture, too.

Garden Tie-Up Proved Effective For Tod. Browning

As usual "Tod" Browning's latest stunt was a success. This gag consisted of a tie-up with the Farm and Garden Department of the Boston Post and a number of the Massachusetts city's florists in connection with a "Spring Flower Show" held at the Metropolitan Theatre in which house "Tod," as his fellow-members are well aware, is the director of exploitation.

Through his newspaper tie-up, he was enabled to secure a total of seven full pages of publicity with special stories, photos of the show and tie-up advertising with the florists and the flower-growers. In conjunction with the Spring Flower Show he promoted a "Tournament of Roses." A girl was selected to represent "The Rose of New England." She was awarded an eight-day expense tour to Havana, accompanied by her mother, and with all expenses paid. The Boston Post co-operated on the contest. The tour was obtained free, through a tie-up "Tod" engineered with the steamship company and the newspaper came through with publicity and stories on the contest.

To give you an idea of how beautiful the lounge room looked when decorated with plants and flowers we are reproducing a photo showing a section of the display. The flower tie-up was especially timely as it broke about Mother's Day and enabled the florists as well as the theatre to benefit. The entire campaign was, as we stated in the opening sentence, a complete success and much of it was due to the showmanlike way "Tod" handles the publicity and exploitation for the house.

Incidentally, it might interest you to know that as a coming plug on "The Big Pond" he put his well known selling copy to use again and framed copy that enabled him to tie-up with a manufacturer of cheming gum and secure samples which were distributed in pay envelopes at the theatre. The copy on the pay envelopes read: "Maurice Chevalier in 'The Big Pond' at the Metropolitan next week wins the girl with the aid of chewing gum! See 'The Big Pond' and learn the secret. Chew (Stikko) gum and further your own romance." This angle of using appropriate copy enabled him to make the tie-up.

GRADUATION TIME!

There is none too much time left to engineer and execute those Graduation tie-ups and gags which all live-wire showmen take advantage of at this time of the year.

If you have been keeping a scrap book of the Club pages, reference to the issues of last year will reveal some mighty interesting and profitable stuff.

As we recall, while pounding this on the typewriter, Johnny Scanlon's Congratulation Card in the issue of May 18th, 1929, and how the other boys jumped at the opportunity to cash in on it. Look it up, it will "click" anywhere.

Then, perhaps, the limited seating capacity of your local school auditorium makes it necessary for the Graduation Exercises to be held elsewhere. Why not YOUR theatre? It will cost you mighty little and what a whale of goodwill and attention you attract to your theatre.

A letter of congratulation as published in last week's issue of the Club pages under the heading of "Timely—And How!" It will be a foundation for the suggestion at any rate. Look it over, it came from Harry Marchand in Mobile, Ala.

A little thought will bring to mind a dozen practical stunts that tie right in with the Graduation Ceremonies in your local grammer and high school. Get busy while there is still time.

"TREASURE HUNT"

Always a popular gag, especially if handled right, the "Treasure Hunt" is again ripe for live-wire showmen to grab plenty of free publicity for their theatre.

Frank Boucher engineered one recently down in Hagerstown, Md., and it brought more good returns than even he hoped for.

The local merchants, if solicited along the right channels, will gladly donate the gifts. Make them help on the plans for the "Hunt." See that the hunt ends up in or near the theatre. The various caches need not, necessarily, contain the gifts, just leave a letter instead making it compulsary for the finders to present the letters in the theatre on a specified night. In this way you can attract added interest and b.o. receipt for the night on which the gifts will be presented, admitting the winners free, of course.

There are a hundred and one good sidelights and slants to the "Treasure Hunt" idea, and if you only give it serious thought you will soon find many ways of working it out to everybody's satisfaction. Don't overlook the grammer schools and the high schools for special or separate "Hunts." Even the school authorities will co-operate if approached with the right kind of suggestions.

Bridge Matinees One of the Mediums Used By Matt Press

Anyone looking for a man to answer to the title of active showman would, if he were in Hope, Arkansas, be referred immediately to Matt Press, manager of the Saenger Theatre.

There doesn't seem to be a moment when he is not taking advantage of some angle to get a lot of good-will or publicity for his house. For instance, he promoted a bridge party not so long ago that swelled the box office receipts considerably.

Sixty tables were placed on the stage of the theatre and to these the ladies of Hope, after paying the full admission price, wended their way. And with sixty tables being filled it stands to reason that the matinee was bound to be good. At the conclusion of the bridge games the players witnessed a showing of the feature picture.

Merchants in Hope and a nearby town kicked in with enough prizes so that someone at each table was sure of winning one. And since the party was sponsored by a prominent ladies club, Press had no trouble in securing numerous tie-ups on the event. The local merchants displayed cards in their windows playing up the bridge party and the week's atttractions at the theatre. Even the score sheets and tally cards were supplied Press by the local merchants as they more than felt that the splendid publicity they derived from the scheme, repaid them in no small measure.

Press shows that he has the interests of the house at heart by permitting the use of his pet bulldog "Publixity" for a ballyhoo on some attractions. The dog is especially talented and one of his best tricks is carrying a pipe in his mouth. A special blanket plugging the picture and theatre is placed on his back and he roams about town, looking for all the world like something that stepped out of "Alice in Wonderland." The dog, since he is seen frequently on the streets, always comes in for a fair amount of attention and this all tends towards helping get a few more dollars into the box-office.

When he played "Gold Diggers of Broadway" a while back Press gave the town a treat in the form of a number of gold bricks which he distributed as a herald on the film. The blocks, measuring 2x4 inches, were cut from wooden salvage stock, gilded and labeled. The label read, "You won't fall for this BUT you will fall for "GOLD DIGGERS OF BROADWAY." The bricks were sent to nearby villages accompanied by the Boys' Band of Hope, which by the way, is an organization founded by Press, who organized all of the musical and dramatic talent in the town and occasionally grants them performances on the stage of the Saenger. A lot of laughs greeted the distribution of the "Gold Bricks," but true to the saying "he laughs last who laughs best," Press chortled with joy when he saw them line up at the box-office during the picture's run.

Okay Matt, with things like these being engineered by you all the time it is no wonder that the town would point you out as a real showman. Keep up the good work and remember all of your fellow members are waiting to see what else you are doing, to sell them.

Charles S. Bassin Was "Ticketed" For Wrecked Airplane

A stunt that hit the front pages of the local newspapers was engineered successfully by Charles S. Bassin, manager of the State Theatre in Portland, Maine.

When he played "Young Eagles," Bassin arranged to transport a folding wing plane down the main street to the theatre, and just as the plane reached the front of the house one of the wheels on the landing gear came off and it was impossible to move the plane for several hours. The stunt, of course, was pre-arranged by Bassin, since he knew that the police department would not permit the plane to be parked in front of the theatre, especially as the plane carried a three-foot banner plugging the picture.

From the photo we are showing with this article, you'll get an idea of how the newspapers worked in the story. The cop in the picture is handing out a ticket to Bassin. The tagging was covered by both newspapers in the town and pictures and stories broke on it. As long as the plane remained in front of the theatre, traffic was blocked and this created a lot of comment from the public with the result that the theatre and picture came in for a big play.

Since newspaper story planting is a risky thing and often results in the shoe being on the other foot, we must hand Bassin a compliment for the showmanlike way he put the picture across and we hope that we will hear more of this live showman's work.

GUY KENIMER'S BACK ON THE JOB

We guess almost everybody remembers Guy Kenimer when he was city manager for Publix down in Tampa, Florida. And no doubt you all recollect the great things he accomplished in that position.

Guy was hitting along on all six when suddenly we lost track of him and now he turns up as one of the live wires on the E. J. Sparks circuit, handling the Palace Theatre in Jacksonville, Fla., as well as supervising four other houses on the circuit. Having known him for a good while, we happen to know what a fine showman he is and in order that the members who have not met him may get a line on his work we are passing along the campaign he engineered successfuly on "The Cuckoos."

Following along the lines suggested in our Exploitation Review of "The Cuckoos," which appeared in a recent issue, Guy decided that cuckoo clocks were absolutely essential to his merchandising campaign on the picture. So he set out to get them. By being wide-awake he got a break that enabled him to crash the local papers for plenty of publicity and indeed, in one paper he was represented for almost a week. He noticed on the sporting page of one of the newspapers that Schmeling, the German boxer had landed in America, on the same day as the picture opened, with a half-dozen cuckoo clocks in his baggage. Kenimer shot out a wire to the boxer requesting one of the clocks, as an entry in a contest he planned to promote, in which he intended to give awards for the three best examples of unique design and history in this special sort of clock.

The local newspaper took care of all the wires and as the answers came back they would insert a story relative to the pursuit of the clock, in their columns. Imagine their surprise when the fighter's manager demanded five hundred dollars for one of the clocks. This gave Kenimer a good break—so good that the papers kidded the five hundred dollar request until the day the picture opened, at the same time carrying entry blanks for all of the residents who wished to enter clocks. The stunt went over with a bang and the photo we are showing will give you a view of the winners. Kenimer, himself, may be seen on the left, holding one of the prize exhibits, a baby cuckoo clock. The Mayor of the city is the second man from the left of Kenimer and he acted as one of the judges.

This "Cuckoo Clock Gag" was only one of the things that went into the selling of the picture. Plenty of other stunts were also put into play. One of the first moves was the distribution of a novelty herald, which bore copy, "Blow on the spot and see if it will turn blue—if not—see "The CUCKOOS." The heralds were placed in luncheonettes, restaurants, hotels, drug stores and at the theatre and did a lot to work up interest in the film.

For a street ballyhoo, an ancient Ford, bannered with copy advertising the picture was pressed into service. A man and woman were hired to enact the role of a couple of cuckoos and at street corners they would stop the car, get out and commence hollering at each other with the result that traffic jams were the order of the day for the three days the stunt was used. The flivver may be partly seen in the photo we are running with this article. Another ballyhoo was the use of one hundred and fifty boys, who paraded about the streets blowing on cuckoo whistles. On the morning of the picture's opening they marched about the downtown business and shopping sections, coo-coo-ing as they went. After three hours of this they marched back to the house and were admitted free to the theatre.

Kenimer got in a valuable radio plug by having the announcer state over the air, at the time the show started that "It is now Cuckoo Time at the Palace Theatre." This was preceded by the blowing of a cuckoo whistle. Some of the other special stunts used, included a "Cuckoo Sundae" featured at leading downtown restaurants and luncheonettes; a "Cuckoo Sandwich" also featured in the most patronized dining places; and last but not least, a "Cuckoo Dance." The special dance was given at the leading dance pavillion on the last night of the picture's run. A parade of decorated cars, containing patrons of the dance establishment, was the means used for letting the town know about it. Awards were given for the most original and most cuckoo dances. All that the stunt cost the theatre, was eight passes, and for these the dance hall advertised the contest, in the paper for three days as well as plugging it over the radio.

Incidentally, Kenimer used a novel advance plug on the picture by supplying his ushers with ribbons which were worn across the front of their sheets and carried copy stating that the next week was "Cuckoo Week." And in the lobby he had a Victrola ballyhoo, playing a special cuckoo record. So, is it any wonder, in view of all these angles that he didn't go "cuckoo" when he looked at the receipts. And if he does the same on every picture (and we have a hunch that he will), something tells us he is going to throw a bottle of red ink out of the window. Listen, Guy, now that you're letting the rest of the world know about the Sparks enterprises, we hope that your future work will be right up here on these pages, because that's the only way you can square yourself with us and the rest of the Club for remaining in hiding these past few months. Oke?

SUMMER AND THE KIDS!

Won't be long before the schools close for the summer (won't the kids be sorry? ?), and, of course, that means all the youngsters are again eligible for patronage in the theatres.

What are YOU doing to attract them to YOUR house?

How about a "Rainy Afternoon Club"?

Get the slant? Kiddies meet at the theatre every rainy afternoon. Admit them for a special reduced rate. Have some song slides always on hand for just this emergency. Keep a supply of inexpensive novelties. A few thousand of them won't cost you more than a couple of dollars. If you don't know where to get 'em, shoot us a line and we'll slip you all the dope.

Make it a corking good time, and then watch them flock to your house every time it rains and keeps them out of the parks and playgrounds.

Just a suggestion. But maybe it's not so bad?

What do you think? Perhaps you have a suggestion of your own along these lines. Send it on, and we'll let the rest of the gang into the secret.

John J. Scanlon Is Now At Warner; HouseNameChange

This little article is intended to report the re-opening of the Strand Theatre in Lynn, Mass., which house is managed by John J. Scanlon, as the Warner Theatre.

Scanlon has been very busy with the new opening and that's why we haven't heard from him for a little while but now that the house is all set he promises to get right back in the active fold again and when he's active there's certainly going to be some showmanship uncovered. He did some good work on the opening of the house that had the town talking.

He tied-up with the local newspaper and the merchants and promoted two double truck ads which went into a special section of the newspaper. A little novelty was injected into the ads of the merchants and the theatre ads by inserting a slug showing the upright sign on the Warner house. The slug served to keep the new name fresh before the residents of Lynn and began the process of institutionalizing the name. On his advertising campaign Scanlon turned out some hand-drawn ads that for novelty in lay-out were very effective, especially so was the one he used on the opening night.

Since he has always been one of our real active members we know that we can count on him to continue the good work he is doing down at the Warner and remember to pass along his stunts to his fellow members. We want to wish him luck, and tell him that our pages are always open to tell the rest of the world what he is doing to pack them into his house.

Heinie Johnson Is House Artist As Well As Exploiteer

In the past we have recorded a good many activities of our Texas members and now with the acquisition of another showman from that State it appears to us that we will present more accounts than ever, since Heinie Johnson, exploitation man for the R & R Theatres in Big Spring, Texas, has enrolled in the Club.

To give you an idea of his activities about the theatre, we are reproducing below a number of the fronts he created for the various attractions, and, like so many other managers and exploitation men, this exploiteer certainly knows his paints. The front on "The Virginian" was done with an eye toward out-door effects and to that extent trees and foliage were painted with the panels being transparent through the medium of a light concealed in the center. Cut-out letters stood in bold relief against the green background.

The "Hot for Paris" front was a corker and attracted plenty of attention. Miniature cut-outs of dancing girls, done in natural colors, formed the foreground for the red and white lamps used as atmosphere for the picture. Cut-out letters, electrically lighted constituted a very effective flash, while the thermometer, used as a gag, created a lot of comment. The other two photos on "The Love Parade" and "Sally" show the excellent work turned out on those pictures. In "The Love Parade" a special effect was achieved by having a sun-burst effect flashing around the head of the star in the picture, and proved a good attention getter.

We want to thank Johnson for passing these along to us so that we could show the kind of work being turned out down in Texas. And incidentally, we want to take this opportunity, since this is his first contribution, forwarded with his application, of welcoming him into the Club and we feel sure that we'll hear more of his work in the near future.

C. W. Peterson Gave Away Candy Kisses As "Big Party" Ad

Two novel stunts were used by C. W. Peterson for the engagement of THE BIG PARTY at the State Theatre, Cedar Rapids. 15 pounds of home-made candy kisses were promoted and distributed in printed packages to advertise this Fox film. The copy on the candy bags read, "Here's a kiss in advance from Sue Carol. She wants to see you at THE BIG PARTY at the State Theatre now."

For the Saturday engagement of THE BIG PARTY, Peterson arranged a marble matinee to attract children, figuring that each child would be accompanied by one or more adults. A bag of marbles was given to each child who attended the theatre Saturday afternoon, and this resulted in announcements by the playground supervisors of the public schools and a story in the News. Announcements were carried on the screen and in the theatre ad.

Whitacre Cashed In On This Stunt—How About You?

In line with our special stories on the necessity of taking advantage of the Graduation Exercises and Commencement Days which will be held shortly in your town, we would like to pass along another idea that will do much towards securing good-will and publicity for your house via this angle.

The card we are reproducing, which measured four by two and one quarter inches, printed in black on white, was used successfully by C. C. Whitacre, manager of the Romina Theatre in Forest City, N. C.

Immediately after the Commencement exercises at the local high school he invited the Senior Class to be his guests at the theatre, for a party entirely for them. He secured a supply of paper hats, confetti, serpentine, etc., and handed it out as the Seniors came in. Through a tie-up with a local soda shop he was enabled to secure drinks for the occasion. The house was turned over entirely to the Seniors. Upon leaving the house, after the showing of the films, they were presented with the special card which entitled them to admission to the theatre once during the next two weeks.

The good-will derived from this stunt was of great value and it will be more than seen at Whitacre's box-office in the future. This stunt of his is a "natural" for you to use. If you feel that local conditions will not permit you to procure free drinks, candy, confetti, etc., or arrange a special showing at the house, TRY SENDING THESE CARDS TO THE TEACHERS IN CHARGE OF THE GRADUATING CLASSES FOR DISTRIBUTION AMONG THE STUDENTS! This measure alone should let, and will let, your house in for some of the finest publicity and good-will you have ever received. And while you're about it, it wouldn't hurt to hand the faculty a couple of tickets, either.

There's many ways in which you can work this angle to good advantage, and though we could sit down and hand you a detailed list of tie-ups, such as having the local photographer on hand to snap a picture of the entire class, for insertion into the newspaper (providing you invited the class in a group), etc., we feel that a little showmanlike thinking on the subject will be productive of some slants that will more than put it across.

Hendricks Keeps Eyes Trained On Showmen'sCalendar

A showman who keeps an eagle eye trained upon our "Showman's Calendar" is William A. Hendricks, managing director of the Capitol and Olympic Theatres in Steubenville, Ohio, and whenever he comes across anything that looks like a good shot for his town, he uses it. All of which is by way of saying that he cashed in on "Music Week."

As his houses are not permitted to show pictures on Sunday, he decided to get a lot of good-will, and to that extent he arranged to present a band concert on Sunday afternoon and another one on Sunday night. In order not to conflict with the church services on Sunday evening, Hendricks arranged to present the concert after the service and if you've seen the layout of ads you'll see that he has put in a notice to that effect. The special musical prologues ran for the whole week and included jazz bands as well as orchestras. The Sunday evening concerts were free. The stunt did a lot to boost up good-will for Hendrick's houses and there's no question but that valuable publicity was secured. So you see it pays to keep your eye on the "Showman's Calendar" because as the name implies, it's there for "showmen" to take advantage of.

Hendricks pulled a novel stunt recently that has them talking yet in Steubenville. He was slated to act as master of ceremonies at the weekly Kiwanis meeting but was called to Pittsburgh. However, rather than disappoint the members, he arranged to broadcast via telephone and radio from Pittsburgh. And what a hit it made with the members! We want to thank Hendricks for the active interest he is showing in us and we know that it will be continued. And incidentally, he wishes H. W., the originator of the Confederate Soldier Gag, in our laugh-of-the-week, to know that the mailman who figured so prominently in the story might have been mistaken for a Tory.

HELLO, READING, PA.

Blowing myself to a much needed bit of relaxation, plus golf (some day I'll break a hundred and then go into a coma), I stole away to the hills of Pennsylvania, and since these hills were but a short distance from Reading it was only natural that I would run in and see some of the boys.

Well, I got as far as renewing old friendships with Harry Stearn and "Nephew" Fleet Robinson at the Capitol Theatre and then stayed on to see the show. It is certainly a pleasure to say that Stearn is demonstrating some marvelous showmanship and ability in the operation of the W. & V. Theatres in this city, and if he don't make a great name for himself we'll eat out last year's hat. His front and lobby are on a par with the best houses on Times Square or the Loop and everything was in tip-top shape from front to back.

Planned to spend Saturday visiting the rest of the gang, but a tough sunburn, plus a plain everyday bellyache, kept me under Mrs. Chick's personal supervision for the balance of my stay up there. So this will have to serve, for the present, as a sort of greeting to all our friends in Reading, including of course, Paul Glase, Lew Carrol, Ray Nowitsky, Morton Shankman and Bobby Suits. "Chick"

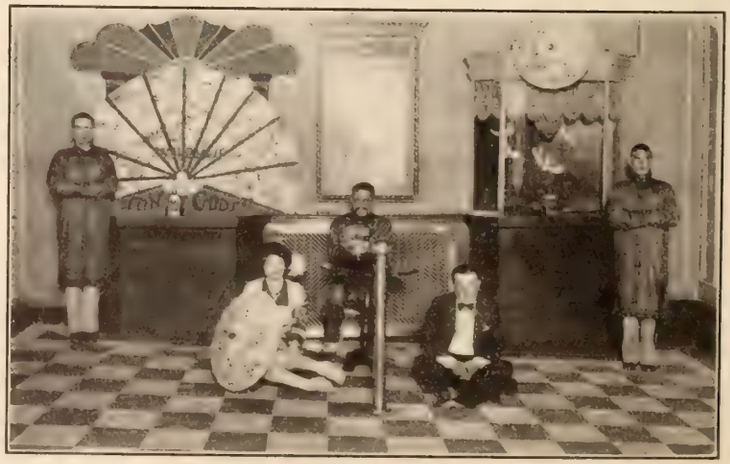
Tampa Trio Pass Along The Latest Accounts Of Work

The trio who put over "Vagabond King" in Tampa are at it again. Harry Weiss, City Manager for Publix in Tampa, Fla., Paul Short, manager of the Tampa Theatre and Wally Allen, Publicity supervisor engineered an "Identification Contest" at the Tampa Theatre that gave the residents of the city a treat.

Shorts of two screen stars were shown at each change of program for three weeks, and patrons were supposed to identify them. The stunt was run for twelve weeks. The trio of showmen promoted a lot of gifts from a local jewelry establishment and presented them to persons guessing nearest right the correct identities of the stars.



The gifts were placed on display and made a considerable flash, especially the fifty-six pieces of silver and the wrist watches that formed part of the "promotions." Heralds and contest cards were given out at the jewelry store, and they paid for the printing of all advertising matter on the contest. The special heralds were made-up in a showmanlike manner. In addition to guessing the identities of the stars, contestants were also required to answer the questions, "Why is the Tampa Theatre your favorite amusement center?" and "What does the 'Pirate Girl' in the Tampa Theatre lobby represent?" All answers were sent at the conclusion of the contest, the participants being requested to hold the answer blanks until then.

The jewelry company was more than pleased with the results of the contest and consequently were open for propositions on their other stores located in prominent Southern cities. Of course, the house came in for plenty of publicity and the trio of live-wires who engineered this gag again proved their right to the title of showmen. In conclusion we'd like to state that if you're in one of those communities where the residents are rabid movie fans a stunt of this sort is just made to order for you, as any merchant should be glad to tie-up with you on it. So hop to it if you think it'll fit your case.

Hall And Harting Used Live Models To Sell Picture

Live lobby displays are new in the South and decidedly unique in the smaller communities, as talented persons are difficult to secure for this form of public entertainment.

It remained for W. Hall, manager of the Saenger Theatre, and Frank Harting, Dist. Publicity Dir., to surmount this obstacle to their plans by personal effort and ingenuity. The fact that Frank Harting possessed the talent of Lon Chaney was an undisclosed secret, which was divulged only to demonstrate that a live lobby display could be put over in a town the size of Pine Bluff, Ark.

Mr. Harting can also qualify as a scenic artist in an emergency, as he donned the artist's smock and knocked out the oriental lobby display which was used as a background for the scene above, which shows the Publicity Director in the role of a Chinese Mandarin, extolling in Chinese the merits of the Richard Barthelmess latest production, "Son of the Gods."

Earle Oscar Has Given Athens Some Fine Showmanship

In a recent issue we gave you a line on the way Earle F. Oscar, manager of the Ritz Theatre in Athens, Ala., sells his shows, and reproduced some photos of window displays he created. To-day we'll tell you how he keeps them talking about his theatre.

When he played "The Flying Fleet" he secured a number of the red, white and blue envelopes used for air mail purposes. In the envelope he inserted a plug for the picture in the form of a herald measuring five by three and one-half inches. The copy was well made up and was fashioned about the catch-line "The 'Flying Fleet' is Flying Your Way." The front of the envelope was addressed to "Mr. Athenian, Athens, Ala., Via Air Mail." When the envelopes were distributed they evoked a great deal of comment from the patrons of the theatre.

Another gag Oscar used to good advantage was a special herald in the form of a subpoena which requested that the reader be present at the theatre to witness "Marriage By Contract" and decide whether trial marriage cheapened women. The copy carried the required punch and the novelty of the herald did a lot to sell the picture. We would like to state at this time (perhaps you've already noticed it), that while these gags are not so new we are passing them along because we know that they can be used on any picture. So if you come across one that strikes your fancy, file it away until such time as you can use it to good advantage.

An angle that he finds of great value in the town is a personal letter and whenever he plays a picture that merits such a form of contact, Oscar uses it and always to good results. For a novel stunt on "The Love Doctor" he made up a lot of capsules containing a miniature herald plugging the picture that proved very effective. A midget advertising mat was imprinted on a small square piece of paper and inserted into the capsule.

We want to thank Oscar again for passing these stunts along to us for, as we said before, they can be used on a good many pictures and we are sure that some of our members will find a spot in their show selling campaigns for them, particularly as no great cost is involved in their use. At present Oscar is rather busy installing sound but we know that when he is all set with his new policy that we will be in receipt of a lot of ideas on how he put across the opening. So let's hear from you real soon, Earle.

McDonald Created A Herald That Set The Town Laughing

Here's one that clicked as an institutional plug. Read it over and see whether it would be of help to you. The stunt is the creation of Teddy McDonald, publicity director for the Rivoli Theatre in West Haven, Conn.

He made up a card measuring six by four inches. The card was folded to resemble a four-page booklet. The first page carried copy, "Why John Doe Doesn't Go To The Rivoli Theatre." Upon opening the card the two center pages greeted you with "He Is Dead" (In big black type; "He Is" on one line, "Dead" on the other line). The back page of the booklet was devoted to the time of shows and the prices.

McDonald's gag made quite a hit with the residents of the town and from what we are given to understand New Haven thought so much of it that a couple of showmen in that town used it to plug their houses. The card was printed in black and white throughout, with a heavy black border on the center page. So if you think you want to use this stunt as an institutional plug for your house the cost is small and it wouldn't be a bad idea to use.

Incidentally, the originator of the idea, Teddy McDonald is a twenty-two-year-old publicity director and very popular with the patrons of the Rivoli. He started in the show business as an usher at the Broadway Theatre in Springfield, Mass., about eight years ago and since then has worked in various theatres in the New England district. We want to thank William Brown, the manager of the Rivoli in West Haven for passing this idea along to us as we think it will meet with approval from the club members.

CLIFF CLICKS WITH PUBLIX!

You all no doubt remember Cliff Gill, that hustling showman who handled the publicity and exploitation for the Fox Metropolitan Circuit's New Jersey division not so long ago. And if you remember that much, you certainly recall the work he turned out as some of the most outstanding bits of showmanship ever displayed on that side of the river.

It is our pleasure at this time to announce that Cliff is now connected with the Publix outfit and sports the title of advertising manager for the district around central Minnesota. From the reports drifting into Club headquarters, he is making a wonderful success of it and threatens even to surpass the work he accomplished in New York. We understand he is working with a group of managers that, to quote his own words, are "wide-awake and every one deserving of mention in the columns of the Managers' Round Table Club."

That's oke with us Cliff, and if you say they're peppy, why they simply must be. But in order that the rest of the Club can meet them more intimately they'll have to shoot us in a bunch of stuff as well as their photos. Being an active Club member yourself, it's up to you to act as contact man and keep them on the go. Then we'll probably be able to take in some of that marvelous fishing out your way.

Miss Nibler Shows Us, By This, That She Knows Her Biz.

Theresa Nibler used the night club effect in the lobby to emphasize the theme of "Roadhouse Nights," playing at the Electric Theatre, Springfield, Mo.

The lobby was equipped with chairs and tables and countless numbers of Coca Cola bottles.

With every purchase of a ticket, patrons were entitled to submit their tickets to the hostess of the night club and they in turn would receive a drink of Coca Cola.

The Coca Cola people furnished the drinks gratis in return for publicity they derived from the stunt. Coca Cola signs and banners about the lobby advertised the drink as well as giving credit to the beverage concern for their donation.

The stunt caused a lot of favorable comment which in turn helped to sell the picture to satisfactory receipts.

LATTA PROVES "THE GOLDEN RULE"

Despite the fact that running a large theatre is a man-sized job calling for practically all of his time, C. J. Latta, managing director of the W-B Roger Sherman Theatre in New Haven, Conn., demonstrated how a manager can think of the human side of life just as well. The publicity which resulted was, by no means, what he was aiming at. But he was entitled to every bit of the credit for what he put across. Mr. Latta is deserving of a vote of thanks for this piece of work and the New Haven Evening Register, the paper which published the following story can well be proud of its fine standing in Connecticut, for the marvelous manner in which it was presented to its readers.

BED-RIDDEN YOUTH HEARS TALKIE FOR FIRST TIME

(From New Haven Evening Register)

Roger Sherman and Phone Company Stage Show in Home

IF MAHOMET can't come to the mountain, the the mountain must come to Mahomet.

Fred Dahl, Jr., 11-year-old paralytic, who has been bed-ridden in his home at 221 Tyler Street, East Haven, for more than three years with spinal trouble, yesterday was given the thrill of his young life when he saw and heard his first talking picture.

But Fred didn't go to the theater; the theater came to him! Talk about your kings and emporers, with their command performance. Those boys didn't have a thing on Fred yesterday afternoon.

While an audience in the Roger Sherman sat and watched Joe E. Brown and Winnie Lightner in "Hold Everything," the Warner Brothers big comedy sensation of the year, Fred in his captive bed in East Haven saw and heard the big show exactly as it was being reproduced on the silver screen five miles away in the College Street movie palace.

It took a lot of money, time and thought to bring "Hold Everything" to Fred's home in East Haven. Incidentally, according to C. J. Latta, managing director of the Roger Sherman Theatre, it was the first time in the history of the industry that a "stunt" of this kind has ever been done.

Looked Impossible

Fred, who needs no introduction to New Haveners, for his pluck and courage in fighting a disease that has kept him an invalid nearly all the years of his life has made him legions of friends here and throughout the nation, had always expressed a desire to see a talking picture. But to do that he would have to be taken to a theater, and Fred can't be moved from his bed so much as an inch.

It looked, then, very much as if his wish would not be indulged, at least, not until he got on his feet again and was able to go himself. But as good luck would have it, Mr. Latta, manager of the Roger Sherman, heard about Fred's wish, and right then and there conceived the ingenious idea of taking a talkie to the lad's home in East Haven. Then the big, burning question arose like a giant interrogation mark on a blank page. How was it going to be done?

Provided you've got a screen, a projecting machine and a print it's easy enough to show a silent picture anywhere but when it comes to a "talkie," with its maze of sound appurtenances and what not, the shoe is on the other foot.

Latta did a lot of thinking. The idea was to show the picture in Fred's home with the old type silent portable projectors and take the sound over a telephone wire from the theater. He called on R. B. Bush, representative of the Southern New England Telephone Company, and Herbert W. Sundius, assistant engineer, and explained the plan to them. Both immediately offered their cooperation.

Next, L. Phillips, manager of the National Theatre Supply Company, was approached and he agreed to furnish the two projectors required. Frank Perry, Nickolis, Thomas Miller and A. Nelson Farzier, operators at the Roger Sherman, fell quickly into line and made a number of tests at the theater to make sure the plan could be carried out.

Finally, all arrangements having been completed, the several parties concerned went to work. The telephone company opened a direct telephone line between Fred's home and the projection booth at the Roger Sherman, making it possible for the operators to work in harmony. The telephone company also connected to the output of the Roger Sherman power amplifier with a repeating coil, thence to the input of the Exchange Building and Beacon office in East Haven. At the other end of the circuit an amplifier and loud speaker were installed to deliver the sound of the program. The circuits were then equalized so the voices would not be distorted.

With this hookup and two silent projectors set in place in Fred's room everything was in readiness to project the big show on a six-foot screen set up against the wall.

Fred, a few of his young friends, Mr. Latta, Mr. Bush and Mr. Sundias of the telephone company, Mr. Frazier and Mr. Miller, the two operators, Mr. Phillips of the Theatre Supply Company, and Fred's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dahl, were crowded into the young invalid's room, now transformed into a miniature motion picture theater. Shortly before two o'clock when the word "Let's go" came over the wire from the Roger Sherman, and the big show started, to the edification of the patient invalid to whom a cruel fate had denied the simple pleasure that millions in this broad land enjoy every day and night of the week.

For exactly an hour and 17 minutes, the time it took to unfold the story of "Hold Everything" in sound and natural color on the screen, Fred lay in his bed enraptured with the novelty of Joe E. Brown and Winnie Lightner and Georges Carpentier and a host of others talking from the screen like real live people.

"Gee, it's great!" he kept repeating. "It's got the silent picture beat a mile. I didn't think it could be done. Honestly, I didn't."

Fred nearly split his sides laughing over the antics and funny lines of Joe Brown and Winnie Lightner, while his eyes nearly popped out of his head when the musical numbers with their lilting airs came on, and a bevy of beautiful chorus girls gave Fred an idea of what a Broadway musical comedy looks like.

"When I get well I'm going to Hollywood," Fred then volunteered. "I wanted to be an aviator once; but I think now I want to be a movie actor."

When at length the show was over, and Mr. Latta and the operators and the telephone company were getting ready to leave, Fred told them they had given him the treat of his life but he thought they had gone to a lot of expense and trouble all on his account.

Maybe they did. But when a youngster in Fred's condition, who has been lying flat on his back for more than three years able to move only his hand and feet, without ever letting a word of complaint pass his lips, he deserves to have people go to a lot of trouble for him.

Rundell Gives The Town Many Novel Gags To Talk About

Step up and meet another showman who keeps his town pepped up on the latest methods of show-selling, John C. Rundell, manager of the Kaufman Theatre in Montpelier, Ohio.

As his first contribution he gives us a couple of angles on what he is doing to keep them coming to his house and it is from these that we were able to deduce that he is always active in his town.

One of his recent activities was an "Open Week" at that theatre. All of the patrons were invited to stop in at the projection room and see what made the "talkies" talk. This move made a decided hit with the residents of the town and a large number of them took advantage of the invitation. Another stunt that clicked well with them was the "Revival Week," engineered by Rundell, in which he "revived" the talking and sound pictures that had made a hit at the Kaufman since the house had been wired.

When he played "Young Eagles" he worked a stunt in his newspaper ad by inserting a personal endorsement. Since Montpelier is not a large town, it was only natural that the residents would pay attention to this unusual method. And so much did they think of Rundell's word that a house record was broken on the picture. And when a showman can stick a three line message in his ad and get results like that he certainly must stand well with his patrons.

Judging from this contribution we feel that with a start of this sort he is going to keep it up and from time to time let us know what he is doing to sell them in Montpelier. Right, John?

Geo. Laby Staged A Minstrel Parade As "Mammy" Boost

A corking stunt was engineered recently by George Laby, manager of the Olympia Theatre in Boston, Mass., that tied-in well with his picture "Mammy" and the Boston Marathon Race.

On Patriots' Day (A Massachusetts Holiday), every year, the Boston Marathon is staged. The marathon starts twenty miles out of the city and ends in Boston. Some fifteen minutes or so before the runners are due in, the police rope off and clear the streets so that nothing will molest the athletes. Thousands of people jamming the sidewalks make this move necessary.

Being aware of the above, Laby secured permission from the city authorities to stage a parade just prior to the conclusion of the race. A band was recruited from the local Veterans of Foreign Wars and a man was engaged to don a black face make-up and imitate Al Jolson. The man, leading the band, made the famous Jolson gestures and also the well-known kneeling pose. The rest of the band members and a group of ushers, as you will note from the photo were outfitted in Pilgrim uniforms and carried banners plugging the star, picture and theatre.

The stunt went over very well with the crowd of people awaiting the finish of the marathon and the house received plenty of publicity. We are glad to note that Laby is continuing the brand of showmanship that has characterized his work in the past and also that he is becoming very active again as we had been wondering what had happened to him. Let's hear from you more often in the future George, so that we can keep up with your doings.

Miller & Tschauder Are Credited 100% For Broadcast Angle

The Rivoli Theatre, Beatrice, was recently closed for redecorations. The opening picture was "Honey" and Manager Max Tschauder and District Advertising Manager Rowan Miller made arrangements to have Mitzi Green, who was making a vaudeville appearance in Omaha, personally greet the audience in Beatrice on the opening night through a little broadcast all their own.

The telephone company in Beatrice ran a line to the stage of the Rivoli Theatre and hooked it up with a Victor radio. A long distance call from Omaha to Beatrice was put through at 8:45, Mitzi Green in Omaha spoke to the audience in Beatrice and sang "Sing, You Sinners" for them.

The only cost for the stunt was the price of one long distance call between Omaha and Beatrice. Manager Tschauder reports that the surprise stunt was just the thing for his opening show and that it went over well with those assembled in the theatre. The novelty of the stunt caused the Beatrice Daily Sun to give it space in its news columns, all of which helped at the Box Office.

INITIATIVE

Tom Fortenberry of the Capitol Theatre, Monroe, La., used a very clever age-revealing numerical chart in merchandising the local engagement of "The Benson Murder Case." The chart met with such popular appeal that many called at the box office requesting additional copies. The outline of the chart is shown below:

You Can Reveal the Mystery of A Person's Age! . . . .

Ask the person to point to all the columns in which his age appears. As the person does so, you add together the figures at the top of each chosen column—the total sum is the age. For example, Bill's age is in columns 2, 3 and 4. The age is 14.

CAPITOL THEATRE

Frederick Got in a Theme Song Plug Giving Away Roses

Showmanship was certainly evident in this stunt that was engineered by C. Frederick, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Pittsfield, Mass.

He ascertained who was the most popular girl employed in the town's largest department store. With that knowledge known, he arranged to have a uniformed messenger deliver a bouquet of flowers to the girl just before quitting time, when there was a large assemblage of girls to watch the proceedings.

A card, purported to have come from Dennis King, was attached to the bouquet and carried copy to the effect that "Only a Rose" was just one of the lovely tunes to be heard in the picture. The card also plugged the theatre and playdates.

The bouquet in this instance was red roses because of their appropriateness to the Vagabond King.

The flowers came as a complete surprise to the honored girl as well as her co-workers. And naturally, all the girls crowded around her to learn the details—who was the donor, etc.

The stunt created lots of talk and you can bet that word-of-mouth reports travel rapidly, so it was no wonder that the stunt clicked well for Frederick. We are glad to see that this showman is continuing the same brand of live-wire work he is always turning out there, and we hope to hear more from him in the near future.

Harry McWilliams Turned Lobby Into Special Exhibit

The photo we are showing with this article is not a view of the interior of a merchant's store. It's the inner lobby of the Palace Theatre in Dallas, Texas, and is part of the monster tie-up arranged by Harry K. McWilliams, publicity director of the house.

The tie-up was arranged with the McKesson-Crowdus Drug Company of Dallas, a large chain organization. McWilliams submitted a plan whereby a drug and cosmetic show could be held in the inner lobby, for one week during the showing of "Ladies Love Brutes." In return for the space in the lobby the owner of the drug chain purchased an eight-page section in the Dallas Journal as the opening gun in the campaign. This excited a lot of interest in the city and the people flocked to the theatre to get a look at the unique arrangement.

A large part of the space bought by the chain dealer was used by McWilliams to plug the Palace Theatre, especially the cooling plant since it had begun to get warm about that time. And by looking at the sample we are reproducing of one of his ads, you will see the paramount importance he attaches to the cooling system. In addition to the newspaper space the chain store man paid for the printing and distribution of heralds, window streamers, and counter cards. All of the printed matter was distributed through and displayed at the eighty-seven stores run by the company in Dallas.

In addition to all of the above, the house came in for some radio publicity by having a couple of the merchants, who were represented in the lobby, plug it on their radio time. The entire cost of the advertising, the decorating, and the building of the booths was divided among all of the merchants represented. Free candy, cold drinks, perfume, face powder, etc., were distributed to the theatre patrons and there's no question about it, they certainly got more than their money's worth. And the house got publicity and good-will that proved to be of great benefit.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Glass Knows The Value Of Running Tin-Can Matinees

How many showmen are taking advantage of local "Clean Up and Paint Up Week" in their town? It is too late now to participate in National Clean-Up Week but it's never too late to have a little clean-up week of your own and stage a TIN CAN MATINEE.

Out in McCook, Nebraska, O. F. Glass, live-wire manager of the Fox Theatre, took advantage of National Clean Up and Paint Up Week to promote his tin can matinee. And did it go over! He tied up with the city, the local newspaper, Chamber of Commerce and schools. Then the fireworks began. The newspapers gave several front page stories announcing the show. The Chamber of Commerce ran ads in the paper and furnished two one-dollar bills to be given to the boy and girl bringing the largest number of tin cans. The school announced the contest in the classrooms.

The day dawned bright and clear, but despite the broad daylight stealthy forms were to be seen poking about midst rubbish bags and ashcans. Early risers in the town perceived these unusual signs of activity but displayed no trepidation, neither did they turn in police alarms, for they knew that it was the younger element of McCook already foraging for stray tin cans.

The kids were to be seen emerging from the dark, damp recesses of cellars, from the inner regions of ashcans, the contents of which were of doubtful origin; on the vacant lots they trampled, poking here and there, leaving no stone, no piles of rubbish, no rusted fenders from dilapidated, discarded Fords, unturned. A little foot could be seen being cautiously hoisted over a fence, closely followed by the other foot—then the innocent, mischievous face of a child, smiling grimly, seemingly bent on a mission of great import, would appear. The youngster would lower himself carefully into the backyard of "Old Maid Smiths," scan quickly the flower-covered surface of the immaculately kept backyard, then, disappointed or perhaps perceiving a slight movement of the snow white curtain adorning the kitchen window, would beat a hasty retreat back to the fence and clamber quickly over, mumbling in childish treble, "Nope."

Boys were admitted to the show for twenty tin cans and girls for ten. The largest number of cans brought by a single boy totaled 2,980, with the feminine representative, aided by a string of kids, submitting 1,720. The sum total of all the cans received was 39,000 and if you'll look at the photos closely you can see what a portion of them looked like. Three trucks were on hand to take them away. It is said that after the clean-up campaign all of the goats in the town were seen to go into a huddle and decide to hibernate until such time as tin cans could once more be found in McCook.

Of course, Glass received loads of publicity and good-will on this one and in view of that fact it wouldn't hurt anyone to try a stunt of this kind as it is more than certain to pay for itself sooner or later. But make sure you have enough trucks on hand to cart away the cans. We know of one instance where a showman, Adolph Pincus of Lyndhurst, N.J., had to have a truck made ten trips to cart away the cans.

An Organist Gives Us His Views On The "Solo" Problem

In the past we have run a number of boxes and special stories on making use of the organ. Too many showmen have decided that as long as they had sound pictures they didn't need the organ any longer, so forthwith they covered it and proceeded to forget about it. Not so good. We have found that the public, in most cases, likes a cleverly prepared organ solo. One that is put on in a manner that will liven interest. Such solos are put on weekly at the Drake Theatre in Oil City, Pa., by Gerald Gaddis, solo organist.

Not only at Gaddis' house are these solos put on well but in many houses throughout the country. We could relate stories of the novelties created by Paul Glase, C. M. Maxfield, Jack Marpole, Ken Hoel, Hal Kopplin, and many other Round Table showmen that would fill an entire edition. However, our purpose at this time is to let an organist himself tell you how his solos go over and the kind of work he puts into them. Below we present Gerald Gaddis's views on the subject, about which he says:

". . . I find lots of opportunities for an organist in a sound house. Solos, short subjects and radio work fill up my time. My solos I vary; sometimes a straight standard classic with no slides and played in a legitimate way, then a slide novelty I write myself is used occasionally. Now and then I employ a singer off-stage to good results. A few weeks ago I used a male plant in the audience who interrupted my playing and after some talk back and forth I finally invited him up on the organ platform to show how good he was. He then sang two numbers with some talk and comedy between us. It is an old idea, but always works if the element of surprise at the interruption is carried out and your plant can really sing. It went great here.

"I plug theme songs for coming pictures, making medleys of them, interwoven with a short classic of similar nature. I never try to do anything serious when we have a picture that draws the kids. Then I either use comedy stuff or community singing. The latter is not so hot in the smaller towns. I have a "mike" for audience use and it helps out a lot. During trailers if the sound is in tune with the organ I play along with them. Also any other spots where the organ is the same pitch as the film or disc I "horn in" usually to good results. I always play a few minutes before the matinee while they are coming in, and a chaser always. In short, an organist can find lots of things to do in a sound house if he wants to. I really take more interest in my work now than formerly when you had to play a lot of silent pictures and were worn out from actual fatigue.

"I hope all this will be of some interest to you and the rest of your peppy organization. Sound pictures are here to stay, and so are theatre organs. It is up to we organists to hit the ball harder than ever."

TRY THIS ON YOUR USHERS!—IT'S O. K.

Albertson Claims That This System Will Work Wonders

Perhaps you are one of those showmen located in a fairly large house that boasts a big usher staff and you want to give your patrons the best possible service, but you find it hard to be continually on the watch that your ushers, by some careless move, don't break down everything that you worked so hard to build up. If such be the case it would be well for you to look over this idea used by Jack Albertson, of the Indiana Theatre in Indiana Harbor, East Chicago, Ill.

Feeling that he was too busy to be always paying attention to his ushers Jack decided to put them on their honor. To that purpose he made up this set of ushers' instructions which we are reprinting below in hopes that it will be just what some of our members might be looking for.

USHER'S INSTRUCTIONS

The purpose of these instructions is to set before you the standards of action which will be of service to the patron, the theatre and your fellow employees.

1. Be on time. Do not chew gum and always be neat.
2. Be dignified in your behavior. No unnecessary talk.
3. Never give a short or "smart" answer. Don't have a grouch on.
4. Always stand erect—walk snappy
5. Never lose your temper—keep cool.
6. Never argue with a patron, if anything is beyond you, see your superior.
7. Remember—quietness must be always kept in house.
8. Never be discourteous, even to grouchy people.
9. Try to please and satisfy every patron as if you owned the theatre.
10. Remember—we sell good service as well as shows.
11. Always—"Yes Sir" or "Yes Madam," or "No Sir," etc. "This Way, Please," "Thank You, Kindly," etc., are other phrases you must use.
12. Mothers with noisy or crying babies must be politely asked to kindly step to the foyer till child becomes quiet. Use polite language.
13. Remember, improper talk and conduct on your part can drive people away from here, and the proper sort make them like to come here, because business is like friendship. It goes where it is best treated and stays where it is served.
14. Take your responsibilities seriously. We spent hundreds, yes thousands, of dollars to get people into this theatre, you, with a surly look or a sulky or cross word can drive them away never to come back.
15. Notify all roughnecks or hoodlums (as this is what a person who does not behave in a public place is) that the talking loud or over backs of seats, flirtations or making noise are not allowed here. Do this in a firm, but polite way. If not successful at first attempt, notify Chief or Manager at once.
16. No spooning, heads on each other's shoulders, etc., allowed in this Public Theatre. Anything of this nature must be referred to Chief or Manager as the situation must be handled with tact and care.
17. Always familiarize yourself with programs and schedules as much as possible, don't be afraid to ask questions of Chief or Manager.
18. Make an immediate effort to find lost articles.
19. At once ask a patron's preference as to seats and try to place them. if not possible, show them what seats are available and explain that they are the only good seats left, etc.
20. Be considerate to children, keep them quiet, but do not rough house them or be unduly cross with them, but they must be quiet and not run around from seat to seat. Do not allow children to play in aisles. If with parents call attention that child may be hurt, etc.
21. Report to Chief or Manager any complaint you may overhear or made to you by a patron, as to quality of show, comfort of theatre as to temperature, etc.
22. Remember that your success as a good usher is good basic business training for the business of life soon before you. Meeting people and knowing how to handle and talk to people properly is an asset of great worth to you, worth more in fact than the salary you receive, as you will find out and remember when you grow older.
23. Each member of our force is valuable to us only in proportion to his ability to serve our patrons.
24. We would regret such action, but repeated violation of these rules will mean dismissal.
25. In closing there are seven fundamentals that you as a member of the usher force in this theatre should remember:
    1. LOYALTY
    2. HONESTY
    3. COURTESY
    4. SERVICE
    5. EFFICIENCY
    6. CLEANLINESS
    7. RESPONSIBILITY.

USHER'S PLEDGE

I WILL TO THE VERY BEST OF MY ABILITY, TRY;

To be a gentleman.
To render 100% service.
To be courteous to PATRONS and to fellow employees.
To work willingly and cheerfully.
To be pleasant and wear a smile.
To be alert to anticipate PATRON'S desires and to surprise them with service and attention they do not expect.
To speak pleasantly, to say "yes sir" and "no sir," and "I thank you," and "please," in a pleasant way.
To obey our rules because I realize that rules are necessary in a business organization.
To interpret intelligently the policy of our organization.
To practice headwork and heartwork because I know that these virtues are indispensable to success.
To strengthen myself by study, observation and practice.
To keep my temper.
To avoid arguing with PATRONS.
To make every PATRON satisfied and happy.

Ushers Signature.....

We believe that when you hire your ushers, or if your chief usher hires them, it would be well to have either you or him talk to them and stress upon them the importance of their position and if, after you've told them about the work, they still feel that they would like the position then let them look over the application and sign it. Jack's method in case any usher breaks any of the rules is to reprimand him, give him back the pledge and allow him a few days off to think about his mistakes. And it has generally turned out that when the boy knew he was at fault he'd come back and ask for another chance, which was given him. There's the whole gag and if you think you can use it you're more than welcome to it.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Dollinger Making The Grade With Good Exploitation

We figured that when Fred Dollinger, was assigned to the position of manager at the Blenheim Theatre in the Bronx, N. Y., he would bring into play some of the stunts he has become known for of recent years. And sure enough he set out to treat the Bronx to some real showmanship.

Local conditions prohibiting him from doing things on what might be termed a dignified scale, and knowing that "flash" was his most valuable bet in bringing them to his house, he arranged a few gags for his lobby that had them talking. On "The Wide Open Spaces" he erected the contraption that we are showing in one of the photos. A box-like effect was achieved by spreading a drape over four boards. Upon looking in the holes marked "For Men Only" and "For Women Only," the inquisitive person was greeted with a blank wall to symbolize the wide-open spaces.

The other photo shows the street ballyhoo he arranged for "The Lost Zeppelin" by covering a car with "zep" balloons and on top of the car, placing a display to represent a wrecked zeppelin. On "Honey," a victrola, concealed behind a cut-out plugged the theme song of the picture. All of the stunts met with immediate favor with the patrons of the house and they were more than sold on the shows.

The young man whose picture we are reproducing at the top of this article is Leo LaFontaine, assistant manager of the house, who has been assisting Fred in planning and executing the campaigns. Breaking in with a showman of Fred's calibre is to us a pretty fortunate thing for Leo, as we know that when the "Prof" gets finished showing him the ins and outs of the industry, he can qualify as a full-fledged house manager. We want to welcome him into the Club and let him know that we look towards hearing lots more about what he is doing to help Fred sell them on the shows.

Put This One Away In Your Files For Future Reference

It's too bad that we didn't receive this gag in time to pass it along for "Mother's Day" as we feel that it would have been met with open arms. However, it pays to file stunts away and this one coming from the Dunlap Theatre in Clarksville, Ark., deserves a place in your files.

The cut was attractively colored in a gravure tone and by examining it closely you can get an idea of the good-will plug the theatre got with the local churches by adding the line "Attend Church On Mother's Day." It is not only on Mother's Day that your house organ should carry a special cover or some special notes. Use novelties on every holiday. We know of course what you do on Christmas, but how about the rest of the holidays? A nice red firecracker, against a background of white would draw attention to your house organ. Or a red, white, and blue lay-out. Of course, not everybody has these things available, but we believe a little ingenuity will show you how to get some novelty into your house organ.

The program we are talking about now, reaps benefits from and for the local dealers, inasmuch as they advertise in it weekly. And one of the first to sign up was the local drugstore and you can bet that their ad carried a plug for buying a box of candy. If, as so many small town showmen do, you solicit ads from the local merchants you will find that by presenting a program that has pep and keeps up with the times, that they will be more than anxious to be represented on your pages. And after all, when you stop to figure it out, it's well worth the little added expense you may go to in having to buy a couple of mats from a big city. A house organ is a very important part of your merchandising and should have plenty of pep, for how else can a house lock "alive"?

"The Stunt's The Thing"

Don't develop the wrong impression that the exploitation stunts described on these pages are married to the pictures with which they are used.

When we set forth the details or photographs on an exploitation stunt we do not give it the space because it is on that particular picture which is being exploited.

Rather, our idea is to set forth how the different members and readers are selling their pictures to the public with the distinct idea that you will take the exploitation idea and use it on any picture or pictures which you have booked into your theatre.

Please try to keep in mind the fact that the name of the picture in connection with the exploitation stunt is of very little importance. The chief idea which we are passing on to you is the exploitation idea itself.

Members will find it a very valuable and profitable pastime to see how many exploitation ideas they can take and convert for use on attractions playing their houses.

WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?

MORE NEW MEMBERS!

HEINIE JOHNSON really needs no introduction here as we have already shown you what he can do. However, since everybody must be represented here at some time and as there might be a couple of members unacquainted with him we'd like you to know that Heinie is the exploiter for the R. and R. theatre in Big Spring, Texas, and that's he's so handy with a paint brush that he does all the art work for the house. And it's darn good too, as recent photos we have reproduced have shown.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

R. W. VAN HOOK, manager of the Conway Theatre in Conway, Arkansas, is another showman who has already been introduced to the Club via a stunt or two. However "R. W." all must pass through these portals at some time during their membership in the Club. So now that you're represented you can keep tight ahead with those live-wire show slants that you are always engineering and thoughtfully shooting along to us.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HERMAN BAMBERGER is the manager of the Kentucky Theatre in Lexington, Ky. Located right in the heart of the South as Mr. Bamberger is, he probably intends to keep right in step with the rest of the Southern showman and the way to do that is to be very active. So right as a starter we would like to have one of his pictures along with his first contributions so that we can give him a real introduction.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. W. CROCKETT manages the Y. M. C. A. Theatre in Carney's Point, N. J. With such a local undertaking on his hands Mr. Crockett must be using some mighty fine slants to put his shows across and we'd like to get a look at them if he'll be kind enough to favor us with a few lines on his work. What do you say "J. W." Keep us posted will you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JULIUS LAMM is the manager of the Fox Theatre in Sheybogan, Mich. As we know that a small town offers more opportunities for real showmanship than any place else we feel that Lamm is ideally situated to turn out some good stuff. So listen Julius, how about giving us the low-down on your work, and you might also include a photo of yourself so that we can introduce you to the rest of the Club.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM J. RUSSELL is a student manager at the Codman Square Theatre in Dorchester, Mass. And as his present position is fitting him for enrollment in the Publix Managers' School we feel that in a little while we'll be reporting him as having his own house and all set to start packing them in, and we hope he'll keep us informed of his progress.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. H. MAHONEY manages the Strand Theatre in New Orleans, La., for the Publix Outfit. With so many of your brother members in the Club "W. H." who are being represented often on our pages, you too will want to keep right in step with them. And you know the best way to do this is to shoot us in some news of your merchandising so that we can pass it along and let the rest of the world see it.

C. B. WILLIS is the manager of the Strand Theatre in Meridian, Miss., out where showmanship is displayed often. And we know it is Mr. Willis because we've covered a great deal of territory in your state and seen some work turned out by the showmen there. In fact, it wouldn't surprise us to find out that we even passed through your town too. Why not give us a couple of photos of yourself and your work so that we can introduce you to the Club and pass along some examples of your showmanship?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. FORESTER manages the World Theatre in Kearney, Nebr. Our pages in the past have carried a number of accounts of what the showmen in Forester's town have been accomplishing and we're glad to enroll this showman as a member of the Club because we know it will mean that a few more good things will be forthcoming from his vicinity, for when friendly competition is aroused you're bound to see some great stuff.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN C. RUNDELL, Manager of the Kaufman Theatre in Montpelier, Ohio, really does not need an introduction of this sort since he has already had one on our regular pages, but it has been an iron clad rule that all members must at some time or another be presented here and now that he has been "properly" presented there's nothing to prevent him from sending us in some more of his ideas. Right, John?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

R. C. ROGERS manages the Senate Theatre in Detroit, Mich., and by his enrollment comes pretty close to making Detroit a hundred percent Round Table city. We want to welcome this showman into the Club and feel that he is going to be just as active as his fellow managers in the auto city. And you might send us in a photo so that we can run it with your story.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT C. FROST is handling exploitations for the Publix Theatres in Birmingham, Ala., and his enrollment boosts up our Southern bunch of showmen one more. Working with the other live-wires makes us think that Frost too is displaying that same kind of hustling that keeps his fellow managers on our pages often. Why not drop us a line or two, Frost, and let's know what you are doing to merchandise your shows.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

TED EMERSON is the Manager of the Strand Theatre in Des Moines, Iowa, and from what we know about this showman he has certainly displayed some fine examples of showmanship in his town. We'd like to have a photo of him and a little dope on his career to date

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MOE FARBER is the Assistant Manager of the Hollywood Theatre in New York City. With Bob Soffer handling the house, it seems to us as though Moe is going to get a "liberal" education in show merchandising for who doesn't know what Bob is doing down at this Manhattan Playhouse Group theatre. We predict that if Moe pays attention and listens carefully to Bob's teaching that in a little while he'll be running a house of his own.

Strange but True

IT seems almost incredible that sound and color, a combination usually associated with high cost in motion pictures, can be obtained without paying a premium price. Yet, Eastman Sonochrome Tinted Positive Films give faithful sound, atmospheric color, at a cost no higher than that of ordinary black and white.

THE GIANT THAT CAN'T BE BUDGED

THE MOUNTAIN symbolizes the great amusement industry. THE GIANT that hovers over all maintaining its position on the mountain top is METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER. Tugging at the colossal figure THE PYGMIES are those forces whose one ambition for the past six years has been to dislodge the Giant. But their efforts are futile for time only strengthens the Giant's hold on the mountain top.

Bringing You

"YOUR LUCKY STAR!"

THERE IS mighty good reason why exhibitors await with keenest interest an annual announcement from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Experience over six years of our existence has demonstrated to the trade that M-G-M has the goods.

It is pretty generally conceded that making great product is no accident. It takes organization and stability to make a habit of success. It takes resources and personnel to produce and present to the public fifty pictures of a high standard in one year.

M-G-M SPONSORSHIP of a product means that behind it is an organization, mighty, efficient and proven.

Allied to this organization are starring personalities under long term contracts, marquee names that mean money. As well as personalities groomed for the stardom of tomorrow. And directors and writers of importance.

M-G-M never rests on its laurels. It pushes forward ever. It builds for the future as it sweeps onward today. By this policy M-G-M has become a veritable Rock of Gibraltar of the industry.

SOON a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sales representative will come to you with a publication the like of which this industry has never seen. This book merits your careful attention. It is fittingly called "Your Lucky Star." It has a most important message for you and your theatre.

Read and rely on "Your Lucky Star."

"BEFORE I TALK ABOUT NEXT SEASON"

AS FAR as the public is concerned there's no such thing as "this season" or next "season."

THE PUBLIC demands good pictures no matter what time of the year it is. And the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio strings along with the public.

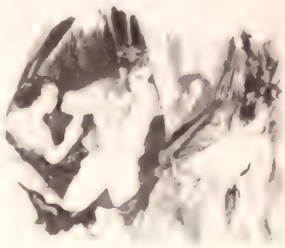
Our great showmen-producers in California aren't concerned with the seasonable arrangements for distribution but they are concerned with making each of their pictures a complete and splendid entertainment.

THAT accounts for the fact that while many other companies are concerned only with presenting an ambitious front for next year M-G-M goes merrily on giving you great product right now.

AT THE moment of going to press "Caught Short" is making America forget its troubles. And in gratitude America has proclaimed Marie Dressler-Polly Moran the greatest comedy team of many years. You'll hear more of those two gals. But meanwhile they're playing an extended run (3rd week now!) in Detroit. They've played two marvelous weeks in Los Angeles, breaking the all-time record of the State Theatre. Same story in Frisco and everywhere.

Greta Garbo in "Romance"

NORMA SHEARER in "The Divorcee" continues its amazing career, coming back to Frisco for a two week stand after doing so marvelously in its initial first run there.



In Boston it took the house record held for a long time by "The Big Parade." In Oklahoma City it broke all records and Midnight shows were added! Every engagement adds new laurels to a fine attraction.

MISS SHEARER follows through with another winner "Let Us Be Gay" of which Motion Picture News says: "From an audience standpoint it will be rated one of the best talker screen farces to date! It will enhance the popularity of Norma Shearer as a big name bet."

"THE BIG HOUSE" has set the West Coast on fire! By the time these lines appear M-G-M's thrilling romantic drama will have opened for an extended run at the Criterion, Los Angeles; the Warfield, San Francisco and elsewhere. Backed by a strong national campaign in the Hearst papers, with a 30-day serial paving the way, "The Big House" comes opportunely as a real life-saver of the warmer days.

to a showman's ears. Her second Talkie is "Romance" the famed stage love-drama.

MARION DAVIES sweeps in on a cyclone of national advertising and promotion with a grand comedy, "The Florodora Girl."

Ruth Chatterton heads a distinguished cast in "The Lady of Scandal" based on that most successful Broadway hit, "The High Road."

ALL of the foregoing—and more to be announced—means that between now and the new season Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is crashing through with pictures of power!

AND THEN 1930-1931 looms ahead with M-G-M geared for the most ambitious program of its entire history. And that's some history!

TRUE TALK ABOUT M-G-M'S GREAT STARS!

Marion Davies

M-G-M HAS been true to that slogan known to the entire world: "More Stars Than There Are in Heaven."

From the very beginning of M-G-M we've given theatres the big names for the house-front.

A STAR in electric lights in front of your theatre is half the battle. Your public delights in personalities. While other companies wavered in policy, M-G-M was consistently the "Star" outfit. And year after year, M-G-M has developed its million-dollar galaxy of popular stars, building up its star-names by putting them in great productions, by reaching into far parts of the world for new personalities to electrify the amusement world.

GORGEOUS GRETA GARBO has swept into a national acclaim accorded few people in all show history. The phrase "Greta Garbo Talks!"—was blazoned from thousands of theatres. And ticket-buyers came in droves!

Greta Garbo

William Haines

Already the word comes out of Hollywood that Miss Garbo's new Talking picture, "Romance" is destined to overshadow "Anna Christie" by far. There is no figure in all studioland whose screen activities are of such widespread interest. Long before a Greta Garbo attraction reaches the screen the magazines of the nation are heralding its approach, the public is breathless with anticipation!

IT'S NICE to have a Greta Garbo under contract to your theatre! In 1930-1931 the first of her three vehicles will be "Red Dust."

And now Lon Chaney Talks!

Lon Chaney

Norma Shearer

No question but he will duplicate the stir and excitement caused when you advertised Greta Garbo's first Talkie.

LON CHANEY TALKS!

Your public, is intently awaiting the initial Talking appearance of Lon Chaney in "The Unholy Three."

Lawrence Tibbett

AND it's an event! Chaney is a sensational Talk personality. His uniqueness as a screen figure is increased by an alluring, mystic quality of dialogue. Watch for next season's "The Bugle Sounds."

NO STAR has benefitted by the audible screen more than Norma Shearer. What work she does in "The Divorcee!" Naturally an increasing public will watch for what is to follow in months to come.

BILL HAINES has never made a flop in his entire career! That's a record for any star. Haines is down-to-earth, understandable. He appeals to the vast audience, and after all that's where the big money comes from.

Everybody liked "The Girl Said No" and Haines showed he could be serious-as well as comic in it! There's a happy chap to sell to the public. They like Bill Haines! They'll like him best in next season's "Remote Control."

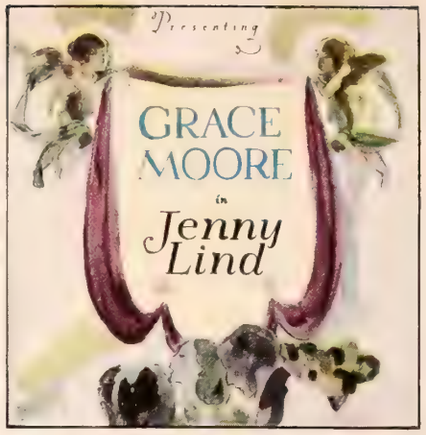
HITS! HITS! HITS!

WATCH MARION DAVIES! No other actress in pictures has swept forward to clinch the top positions more surely and steadily than merry Marion. Miss Davies hit the bull's-eye with "Marianne" and has been clicking regularly. "Florodora Girl" gives Marion a big opportunity for fun. Her next season's vehicles are celebrated stage successes including "Rosalie" and "The Five O'Clock Girl." Each Davies picture is backed by a national ad and publicity Cosmopolitan campaign.



Dressler-Moran

RAMON NOVARRO'S recent radio broadcast was a great success and its celebrated sponsors declared it was their most successful presentation. Novarro has a following as steady as anyone in pictures.

It is a known fact that those who have seen Novarro's first offering of the new season "Singer of Seville" predict that Novarro will top the starring procession.

Grace Moore

WATCH NOVARRO IN SINGER OF SEVILLE"

There's a production to make a note of and handsome Ramon Novarro by virtue of it becomes a name to reckon with in the amusement world!

Joan Crawford

JOAN CRAWFORD!

Few stars have ever crashed through with one box-office success after another as Joan Crawford has. "Our Dancing Daughters" "Our Modern Maidens," "Untamed," "Montana Moon," "Our Blushing Brides" —all great audience pictures. And now "Great Day" her biggest!

John Gilbert

JOHN GILBERT!

"Way For A Sailor" is a John Gilbert you've never seen before! M-G-M knows its business! We've given handsome Jack Gilbert a two-fisted narrative, brimming with action, breathless with story values that's going to line 'em up at your shop! You'll hear more about it later, but—leave it to M-G-M!

DRESSLER - MORAN!

The public made Marie Dressler-Polly Moran into a starring comedy team—and M-G-M is to give the public those happy-go-lucky gals in wow comedies. "Caught Short" is just the beginning of box-office history. Laughs bring business—no mistake!

There's nothing like a hilarious comedy to send word-of-mouth talk through a town that there's a show worth seeing.

Marie Dressler has had a solid year of success, singled out of every picture for praise and attention, oftentimes "stealing the show" according to critics. You've got a ready public for the next Dressler-Moran comedy!

AND it's important to remember that the company which builds money attractions like Dressler-Moran is ever on the job creating new box-office names. Every year M-G-M comes through with additional ones!

THE LION THAT LAUGHS UP HIS SLEEVE

Here is Leo, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Lion surrounded by his imitators! It seems that this "parrot fever" is everywhere. One company originates, the others copy. But while imitation is a sincere form of flattery it can only approximate, never approach the real, original thing. Leo's the real thing in pictures!

Construction activity never ceases at the famed M-G-M studios in Culver City, Cal. 69 acres of highly organized production. Sound stages, laboratories, mills, factories. The M-G-M studio is a model of perfection, a tribute to the glory of a towering industry.

Wait till you see Lawrence Tibbett in the production M-G-M is making for him next season. One of the year's most ambitious Talkies for Tibbett! The American public has never given such a welcome to a new type of star ever before and they're going to cheer him louder now. It's seldom that a singer of love songs looks the part. Tibbett's not only got the greatest voice on the screen, but he's he-man and regular, strong and romantic. "New Moon" is big enough without a Tibbett. Imagine its size with him.

INTRODUCING TWO NOTED STAGE STARS!

Again M-G-M acts fast (in your interests) and comes through with a pair of names that are going to mean big things in pictures. To M-G-M's roster of celebrities add the names of Jack Buchanan and Grace Moore to your list of what's electric-light!

Jack Buchanan

Anita Page

Conrad Nagel

Andre Luguet

Bessie Love

Charles Bickford

Jack Buchanan, shining light of the entertainment world, musical star of the $6.60 class, handsome lover of the stage—we've got him!

Grace Moore, foremost beauty, one of the greatest voices of the world, an alluring sensation in the Music Box Revue and thereafter operatic heroine—we're bringing you this gorgeous actress!

Stars! Stars! Stars! No one can give you names to equal the solid phalanx of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stars!

As in the very beginning, so now again in 1930-1931 depend each week on a shining light on your marquee, the beacon for business!

BUILDING A GREAT ROSTER OF STAR PERSONALITIES

THE designation "star" is given to those who are already on top!

How about those coming up so fast?

John Mack Brown

Lucille Powers

Duncan Renaldo

Catherine Moylan

Karl Dane

Dorothy McNulty

The "Star Maker"—that's M-G-M. Always grooming the appealing new faces, the personalities with sparkle.

You'll find more "stars-of-tomorrow" in M-G-M's vast company of players than in any other similar group, because we've made it our business to build them, subtly, intelligently, spotting them in proper roles, plugging them for your public.

Catherine Dale Owen

Robert Montgomery

Robert Montgomery, for instance! There's a comer at the box-office. The fan magazines and newspaper writers always give him a hand. He's got that certain something that points to stardom.

His popularity is reflected not only in tremendous fan mail at the studio, but in the fact that publications report incessant inquiries about him from their readers.

Montgomery delivered unforgettably romantic performances in "Untamed," "Their Own Desire" and "The Divorcee," just to mention a few. A chap to watch!

And when you scan the whole list of M-G-M featured personalities, many of whose pictures are shown in these pages, you realize what a wealth of popular players are under Leo's banner

Cliff Edwards. Charles Bickford. Kay Johnson. Anita Page. Bessie Love. Lawrence Gray. Charles King. Karl Dane. Those are all big names to your public, always welcomed in a cast.

Edward Nugent

HIS MASTER'S VOICE

Heaps of apologies to Victor Talking Machine

There is only one voice that Leo listens to—and that is the Voice of the Box-Office! The public be served is his idea, and that's why Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios deliver pictures that please with greater consistency than any other company.

Letitia Howard

Arnold Korff

Harriett Lake

J. C. Nugent

John Milyan

Nora Mae

Gilbert Roland

Ernest Torrence

John Mack Brown has been coming up fast. "Montana Moon" helped tremendously. Watch him in "Billy the Kid."

Not a season passes without really important star-contributions by M-G-M. In the past year we showed your public a grand comedy team, Marie Dressler and Polly Moran, as well as a new type of singing star, Lawrence Tibbett.

Next season watch particularly for Jack Buchanan. And likewise Grace Moore in "Jenny Lind." They're going to mean great things for you.

Watch for a shooting star named Dorothy Jordan. She's coming in support of Ramon Novarro in "The Singer of Seville."

Keep your eye on Gus Shy in "Good News." He's an important acquisition from the stage to the screen!

Sam Wood

Victor Seastrom

Karl Dane, Basil Rathbone, Raquel Torres, Roland Young. That's the type of name in M-G-M casts. M-G-M has personality-power that isn't duplicated anywhere else.

M-G-M won the highest honor the industry can give! Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences awards M-G-M one trophy for the years greatest picture, "The Broadway Melody."

DIRECTORS WHOSE NAMES ARE GUARANTEE OF SUCCESS!

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer directors represent the aristocracy of the directorial world!

That describes the men who direct the big productions at M-G-M's celebrated studio.

Fred Niblo

Names that are world-

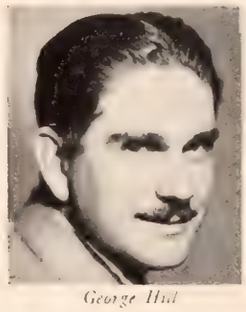
famous, because their entertainments have thrilled the soul of humanity.

Cecil B. De Mille, King Vidor, Lionel Barrymore, Clarence Brown, Sam Wood, George Hill, W. S. Van Dyke. Those names are backed by successful achievement in behalf of your theatre. Fred Niblo, Charles Riesner, Sidney Franklin, Mal St. Clair, Jack Conway, William De Mille, Robert Z. Leonard, Edward Sedgwick, M-G-M's staff of directors reads like a Who's Who in Filmdom.

Harry Beaumont

Charles Brabin

Jack Conway



Wm. DeMille

Sidney Franklin

Every director at the M-G-M studio is a proven producer of successful entertainment.

Jacques Feyder

Nick Grinde

George Hill

In every phase of production that's true of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer insistence on expertness! Filmdom's notables, the names that are recognized and respected!

M-G-M's Giant pictures can be entrusted only to such hands!

Robert Z. Leonard

Malcolm St. Clair

W. S. Van Dyke

NO WONDER THEY CHEERED!

This is the artist's conception of the scene he recently witnessed at the Drake Hotel, Chicago, during the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sales convention. The announcement had just been made of the line-up for next season that the boys were to present to exhibitors. No wonder they cheered!

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PRESENTS 50 "LUCKY STAR" HITS IN 1930-31

MARION DAVIES IN THE FIVE O'CLOCK GIRL

This play by Guy Bolton and Fred Thompson with a score by Kalmar and Ruby ran one year in New York and was a big hit on the road. It's just the thing for Marion Davies. Full of fun, frolic, songs and romance. They'll love Marion as the mannequin who poses as an heiress debutante. Here's a Big Time vehicle for a Big Time star! It will be widely promoted with a Cosmopolitan-size ad drive.

MARION DAVIES IN ROSALIE

Based on the Ziegfeld musical comedy by William Anthony McGuire and Guy Bolton with a score by the great George Gershwin and Sigmund Romberg. "Rosalie," adapted by Gene Markey, comes to talkies with a reputation that's country-wide! Imagine Marion Davies as Princess of a mythical kingdom to which comes a handsome American Trans-Atlantic flyer. He's bashful—but she's not! The result is grand. This one gets that million-dollar promotion, Cosmopolitan-sponsored.

There will be three Marion Davies productions

JOAN CRAWFORD IN GREAT DAY

This elaborate musical drama of the river country of Louisiana was six months in road tryouts before reaching Broadway and represented a fortune in theatrical investment. Vincent Youmans, composer of "Hit the Deck," and many other successes wrote the score, admittedly his greatest, containing such positive numbers as "More Than You Know," "Without A Song," "Great Day," and "Happy Because I'm In Love." Based on the play by William Cary Duncan, John Wells, Vincent Youmans. Lyrics by William Rose and Edward Eliscu. Adapted for the screen by James Montgomery. Directed by Harry Pollard.

The second JOAN CRAWFORD picture will be HER FORTUNE by James Montgomery.

There will be four Joan Crawford Pictures

GRETA GARBO IN RED DUST

The most unusual part she has ever played! On a Chinese rubber plantation—her past in Paris forgotten — gorgeous Greta Garbo gives the talking screen a performance such as you've never witnessed! This stage play by Wilson Collison has the power of "Sadie Thompson." It's going to be one of the year's greatest!

There will be three Garbo Pictures

WILLIAM HAINES IN REMOTE CONTROL

Remote Control—a rollicking romantic melodrama! Broadway gasped at the stage play. The Talking picture takes you into a radio broadcasting room with Bill Haines as announcer! Just his style! Bill unknowingly thwarts the Ghost Gang operating by radio. And of course there's a girl in the story. She's his! Based on the play by Clyde North, Albert C. Fuller, Jack T. Nelson. Directed by Malcolm St. Clair.

There will be 4 William Haines pictures

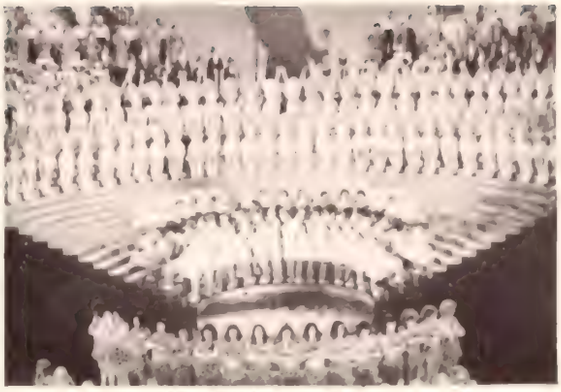
LON CHANEY TALKS IN THE BUGLE SOUNDS

A powerful story of the Foreign Legion, "The Bugle Sounds" by Major Zinovi Pechkoff, Chaney plays the part of a hard-bitten sergeant, cruel, ruthless—until Love enters his life! Much of

Cecil B. DeMille

King Vidor

Lionel Barrymore



Clarence Brown

Trader Horn, the most colorful character of our time, is now in his wonder book on the screen!

"Mutiny Ahead" is Cecil B. DeMille's answer to a public request for a modern, moving, dramatic spectacle. It's his most ambitious film!

"Mutiny Ahead" [illegible] Lives of [illegible] Love [illegible] Sea [illegible]

"The Bugle Sounds" was photographed in actual locations in Africa while the famed Foreign Legion was under fighting orders. George Hill who directed Chaney in "Tell it to the Marines" does it again. That means a big picture.

JOHN GILBERT IN WAY FOR A SAILOR

M-G-M knows its business! We have a world of confidence that the great Gilbert public will react to this rugged story with an enthusiasm expressed in receipts. Sam Wood, director of box-office hits is making it. Laurence Stallings of "Big Parade," "What Price Glory," "Cock-eyed World" fame wrote the dialogue from the thrilling book by Albert Richard Wetjen. Gilbert's role is powerful. Salt of the sea, adventurer in far ports, fighter and romancer, he runs the gamut of human experience in one of the most absorbing narratives you've ever been gripped by!

There will be two John Gilbert Pictures

TWO NORMA SHEARER PICTURES

No star of the talking screen has delivered with the consistency of Miss Shearer. Her four talking pictures "The Trial of Mary Dugan," "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," "Their Own Desire" and "The Divorcee" have all been perfect performances. "The Divorcee" at present is breaking records everywhere. Also watch for "Let Us Be Gay." You can rely on the two 1930-31 Norma Shearer pictures.

RAMON NOVARRO IN THE SINGER OF SEVILLE

A production already finished, already previewed and already talked about in Hollywood as one of the biggest pictures in all the history of pictures! What a cast! Dorothy Jordan, Renee Adoree, Nance O'Neil, Ernest Torrence. Directed by Charles Brabin. Story by Dorothy Farnum. Dialogue by John Colton. In the story Novarro as a young Spanish singer loves a convent lass. She's torn from his arms and with broken heart he sings to a great fame. Jealous rivals harm him and with his life in the balance the kind nuns send back the girl he loves. Novarro surpasses everything he's ever done. This picture is in the bag!

RAMON NOVARRO IN The SONG OF INDIA

(Three Novarro Pictures)

A sure-fire box office title Based on the famous melody, "Song of India." The Story by Achmed Abdullah is ideally suited to Ramon Novarro. India — quaint, bizarre, strange, exotic streets, heavily veiled women, snake-charmers, fakirs — rajahs and ranees . . . An epic of this land of mystery and romance. An unparalleled musical score incorporating not only the "Song of India," but the exotic and well known "Pale Hands," "Less Than the Dust," and "The Temple Bells." And through these songs is woven the story of a young Prince, of his Ranee and of a white woman — the story of an undying love and of a passion that burns like fire and dies out like a rocket.

MARIE DRESSLER AND POLLY MORAN IN RAZZLE-DAZZLE

Consistent with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's policy of star-making, the team of Marie Dressler and Polly Moran is destined to provide the kind of comedy that the screen public demands in well-prescribed portions. Coming on top of "Caught Short" the new riotous talkie "Razzle-Dazzle" brings this mad duet to new heights of merriment. You will make a great deal of money on these well-promoted laugh-clocked comedies.

There will be 2 Marie Dressler-Polly Moran Pictures

YOUR "LUCKY SEVENTH!"

Happy Birthday Leo! 1930-1931 is your "Lucky Seventh" Year! You've jogged this old business out of its complacency from the minute you crashed into it! Everybody keeps one eye peeled on Leo. They know you're up to something all the time. And this time it looks like you've topped the field by a wider edge than usual. Some product, kid! "Lucky Seventh" for M-G-M exhibitors!

LAWRENCE TIBBETT AND GRACE MOORE IN NEW MOON

Lawrence Tibbett having been popularized by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will appear in the theatrical success of a decade, none other than "New Moon," the Schwab and Mandel, Oscar Hammerstein, 2nd, Sigmund Romberg triumph. Supporting him in a stellar capacity will be Grace Moore of the golden voice whose performance in Irving Berlin's "Music Box Revue" brought her operatic recognition. Imagine Tibbett and Moore singing "Lover Come Back To Me"! "New Moon" is a vehicle for which every producer has put in a bid. It, in itself, is as great a title as one could hope for. Bolstered with such star talent and backed by M-G-M enterprise it will prove an outstanding attraction of the season. Director Jack Conway. Dialogue by Charles MacArthur. Adaptation by Sylvia Thalberg and Frank Butler.

There will be two Lawrence Tibbett Pictures

4 COSMOPOLITAN PRODUCTIONS

The first production will be

GRACE MOORE IN JENNY LIND

With Reginald Denny! Following the already-assured success of "The New Moon" Grace Moore will appear in a pet creation of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios. And with it a new star appears on the horizon—Grace Moore. It is none other than the drama of the Swedish Nightingale "Jenny Lind." A story of her great love for a penniless musician, their trials, rise to fame, visit to America, reception by P. T. Barnum and all the episodes of an exciting career. Directed by Sidney Franklin. Scenario by Hans Kraly and Claudine West. Dialogue by John Meehan. Original music by Herbert Stothart, Arthur Freed and Harry Woods. This is the first of four Cosmopolitan productions, which, as you know, are backed heavily by Hearst promotion.

There will be three more Cosmopolitan Productions

CECIL B. DEMILLE'S MADAME SATAN

A wife, who is too good for her own good, masquerades as Madame Satan to win back her husband from a designing woman. Drama, comedy and the spectacular effects for which De Mille is famous, including a novelty in the way of a grand ball on a Zeppelin which is wrecked, forcing the revelers to seek safety in their parachutes, will make this one of the biggest pictures of the year. Jeanie MacPherson wrote it. And she knows box-office! The dialogue is by Gladys Unger. The music by Jack King and Herbert Stothart and the lyrics by Clifford Grey and Elsie Janis. Kay Johnson, Reginald Denny, Roland Young and Abe Lyman's band are outstanding in the large cast of this production.

BILLY THE KID

The one big, stirring, outdoor story of the great West, based on the real life of a notorious "bad man." As romantic as it is thrilling! With a love story of surpassing power. Directed by King Vidor and starring John Mack Brown, this Western is a stirring picturization of Walter Noble Burns' popular biography, "The Saga of Billy the Kid." Dialogue by Laurence Stallings, author of "The Big Parade," "What Price Glory" and "The Cock-Eyed World." Included in the cast are John Mack Brown, Wallace Beery, Karl Dane and Lucille Powers.

TRADER HORN

The great Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer expedition into the heart of Africa has returned and what an amazing picture they have brought back with them! Here is the picture that will be one of the very biggest sensations in years. The Ivory Coast of Africa . . . jungles Voodoo charms and witchcraft, and an orphaned white girl regarded as a goddess. A ruby worth a king's ransom, and escape from death by torture. Love's awakening for this lovely white girl and a splendid Englishman, and their thrilling escape from the fanatical natives and terrible jungle. Authentic! thrilling! Based on the book by Ethelreda Lewis. Directed by W. S. VanDyke with Harry Carey, Duncan Renaldo and Edwina Booth.

THE MARCH OF TIME

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer again proves its claim of being the biggest-leaguer in the entertainment industry, by offering "The March of Time" —an all-star production that means ALL STARS —and plenty of them! "The March of Time" promises to cap the most glamorous spectacle that has come out of filmland to date. Featured among others are: Weber and Fields, DeWolfe Hopper, Fay Templeton, Marie Dressler, Louis Mann, Josephine Sabel, Barney Fagan, William Collier, Sr., Ramon Novarro, Carlotta King, Benny Rubin, Dodge Sisters, Cliff Edwards, William Collier, Jr., Betty Healy, Albertina Rasch Ballet, Duncan Sisters, Clyde Cook, Gus Shy, Polly Moran, Karl Dane, Raquel Torres, and more! Directed by Charles F. Riesner.

GOOD NEWS

An all-star production of the Schwab & De Sylva musical that gave the nation such song hits as "The Varsity Drag," and "The Best Things in Life are Free." The daddy of all collegiate plays and pictures, and still holds the palm for youth, speed and customer appeal. The dance numbers surpass anything that has been done to date. The fastest picture ever screened. Based on a musical comedy by Lawrence Schwab, Lew Brown, Frank Mandel, B. G. De Sylva and Ray Henderson that ran over one year on Broadway and a hit in every city in the country. Bessie Love, Mary Lawlor, Gus Shy, Cliff Edwards, Dorothy McNulty, Stanley Smith and Lola Lane head the cast. Scenario, Frances Marion. Dialogue, Joe Farnham. Stage direction, Edgar J. McGregor. Screen direction, Nick Grinde.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA

The play by Rida Johnson Young. Victor Herbert's great success! With the music that only that composer could write! Including "Sweet Mystery of Life," "I'm Falling in Love With Someone" and "Italian Street Song." Full of the atmosphere of old New Orleans when France ruled her; the thrill and romance of an outlaw pirate and a daring, strong-willed French girl, who knew what she wanted. Tender humor, devil-may-care adventure, and the lilting songs of America's best-loved composer.

THE MERRY WIDOW

Imagine "Merry Widow" music! Imagine Franz Lehar's intoxicating "Merry Widow Waltz" and "Velia" in Talkies! It's the best news yet to your public that this dashing romance is coming to the talking screen! A glamorous, breath-taking film will greet them. Based on that most beloved romantic operetta of all time. By Victor Leon, Leo Stein, Franz Lehar. As produced by Henry Savage. Watch for the great personalities who will bring this wonder picture to the screen. A Big one among Big Ones!

THE PASSION FLOWER

Kathleen Norris' best-selling novel is coming to the Talkies! Everybody's reading this absorbing book! M-G-M which brings audiences the latest and best in novels is making it into a soul-stirring Talkie. And what a story. The heiress who gives up wealth, social position for a husband's true love. But when the husband meets his "passion flower" her sacrifice seems wasted. Then a gripping climax! You'll love this one! Adaptation and dialogue by Martin Flavin. Directed by William C. de Mille.

"TRADER HORN" IN TALKIES IS THE BIG NEWS OF 1930-1931

It's just one of the Diamonds in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Heaven!

THOSE THREE FRENCH GIRLS

(Charmaine, Diane and Marianne)

What a title! . . . What an angle! Three American youths, one a millionaire, the others paupers, leave a trail of glory throughout provincial France, as they proceed to Paris to make good for the three French girls they had met. An irate guardian seeks to subdue the young millionaire. They accuse him of being a lunatic and then complications! Something that will startle even Paris A laugh a minute. Full of mirth, gusto and hot-blooded romance. A great exploitation picture. By Dale Van Every and Arthur Field.

DOING THAT THING

Laughs and Music by Jimmy McHugh and Dorothy Fields who wrote "I Can't Give You Anything But Love, Baby" and the music of "The Blackbirds." What a plot! Boss brings shipping clerk to country club. Society adventuress thinks the boy's a millionaire and marries him. Tells him she took him for his money. He confesses he has no money. It's a happiness treat, full of laughs and studded with a flock of gay songs! Wait till they hear "Go Home and Tell Your Mother," "Doing That Thing," "Love Magician" and others!

TAMPICO

Joseph Hergesheimer and Bartlett Cormack paint the drama of the Oil Fields in this great play of theirs! Never such a narrative as overpowering as this romance of an oil baron in Mexico. He is the strong master of destinies and human souls. Strong — until a beautiful woman without principles crumbles his kingdom. The color, the romance, the intrigue of the oil fields have been re-created for you on the Talking Screen. Watch for "Tampico."

BALLYHOO

Beth Brown's best seller novel of circus life, "Ballyhoo." There have been circus pictures before, but never has the "behind-the-scenes" of circus life been exposed so frankly, so realistically, so thrillingly as in "Ballyhoo." Beth Brown told it all in a novel that reached thousands of excited readers. Now Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has been privileged to bring this romance of the "Big Top" to you on the Talking Screen.

THE WORLD'S ILLUSION

Jacob Wassermann, Europe's most gifted writer of soul themes comes at last to the Talking Screen. What did she seek this beautiful dancer, possessed of every wealth and luxury, adored by men? A burning, unquenchable restlessness in her soul sent her across the face of Europe into strange places and forbidden experiences! A great modern novel, best-seller on two continents, yields its powerful story to the screen!

THE CRISIS

Winston Churchill's Civil War Drama will be "The Birth of A Nation" of the Talkies! Look forward to one of the most dramatic and soul-searing productions of all your days of exhibiting pictures. The throbbing love story of the Southern girl and the Northern boy as told in Winston Churchill's immortal novel of Civil War days is to be one of the things they'll watch for on the talking screen this coming season. A truly Big One!

MONSIEUR LE FOX

Of all the dramas that have come out of the great, silent Northwest, there is none to compare with this exciting tale that hammers out thrills like a machine gun! A handsome, reckless payroll robber of the lawless north, an aristocratic white girl and a fair squaw of the North Woods are the central figures. And then — the relentless Northwest Mounted! Story by Willard Mack. Directed by Hal Roach. To be made in English, Spanish, French, German, Italian. Featured in English cast Gilbert Roland, Barbara Leonard, Arnold Korff. French cast Andre Luguet, Barbara Leonard, Arnold Korff. Spanish cast Gilbert Roland, Rosita Ballesteros, Pablo Alvares. German cast John Reinhardt, Barbara Leonard, Arnold Korff. Italian cast Franco Corsaro, Barbara Leonard, Paul Porcasi.

THE GREAT MEADOW

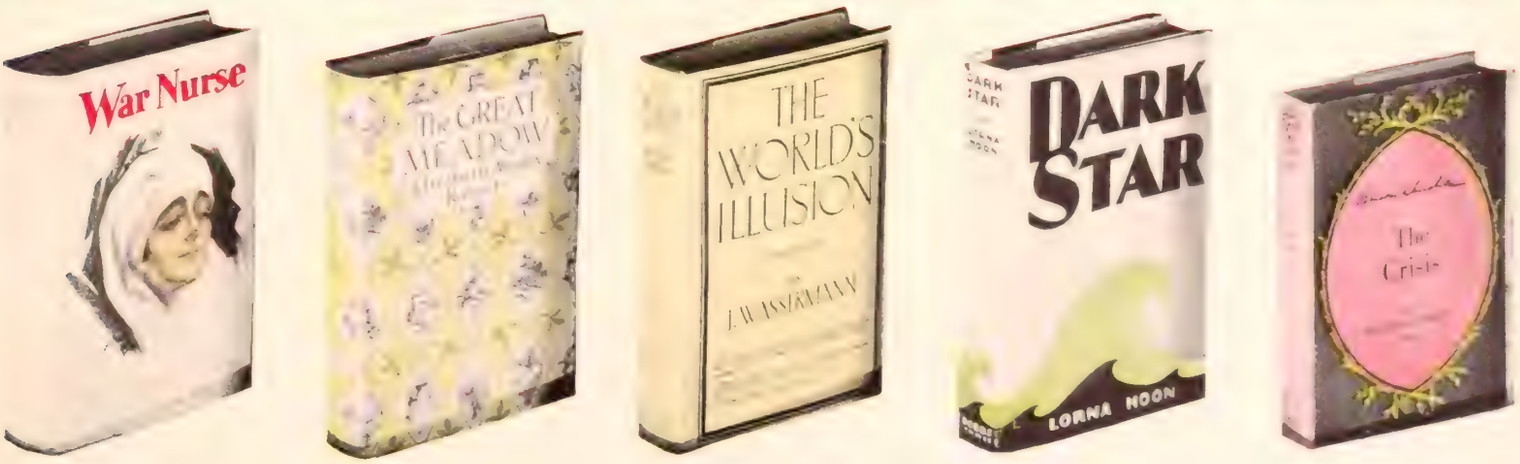
The book, now in its 100,000th, that is thrilling America. By Elizabeth Madox Roberts. There has appeared on the horizon of the book world a new romantic novel that is holding America spell-bound. A tale of frontier days, of a girl who braved Indians and unknown dangers! A story out of the bed-rock of America, out of its struggles, sacrifices and glories. It is to be the Epic Drama of the Talking Screen!

THE DARK STAR

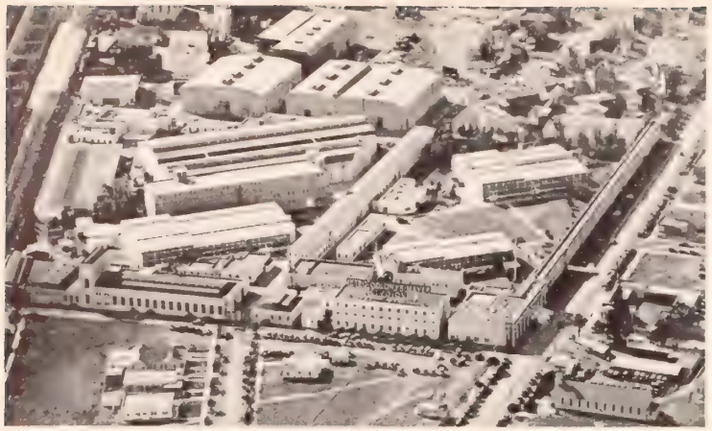
Lorna Moon's great novel. The book they're all talking about. Featuring Marie Dressler (what a role this talented and popular actress has!) Dorothy Jordan (the girl they'll remember in "The Singer of Seville") and Robert Montgomery (he's popular!) Directed by George Hill. Adaptation by Frances Marion and Marion Jackson. One of the tenderest love stories told in our time. The girl without a lover, suddenly whirled into a dramatic romance with a hero of her dreams! A great audience picture.

DANCE, FOOLS, DANCE

Here's the Great Talkie of Martin Flavin's stage play "Cross Roads"—What every Young Couple in Love should know! Here's the age-old problem written by the master playwright Martin Flavin in a drama as gripping as anything you've ever encountered on the screen or on the stage! The boy and girl of "Dance, Fools, Dance" solve their difficulties in a unique and daring way, and pass through the danger zone to happiness.



WAR NURSE



The true story of a woman who lived, loved and suffered on the Western Front. Now it has been told! The woman's side of the World War! The big story—hitherto only whispered —of the heroism, the romances, the passions of beauties under hell-fire! A famous authoress has written anonymously the whole story and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is the one to give it to you in a masterful talking picture.

DIXIE, THE DARK HORSE

M-G-M's going to make the prize of racing stories in talkies! Imagine the thrill of it, the hoof-beats, the color, the atmosphere of the track! And what a yarn is this! A colorful drama of the Old South when horse-racing, the sport of kings, quickened the pulses of fair ladies and sporting gentlemen. A great exploitation picture to be produced on a large scale with a cast of names that you can feature. Here's the Dark Horse that's going to be the flash gold-getter for next season!

A VAST PUBLIC FOR THESE BEST-SELLERS!

A visitor to the M G M studios today would see the World's Greatest Studios vastly increased in size and facilities. It is more than ever the Metropolis of the films.

The gigantic production activities of M-G-M are possible only in a studio of such fabulous resources and ever-growing facilities.

TOP-NOTCH WRITERS ON GREAT M-G-M STAFF

WHEN you take into consideration how M-G-M has combed the world for talents in every department you realize what a far-seeing, powerfully intrenched organization is behind the M-G-M product.

The men who write for our pictures are skilled craftsmen, men and women with brilliant records.

P. G. WODEHOUSE is a recent addition. He's doing a great story for Jack Buchanan. Wodehouse is a talent known the world over, a smart dramatist, a concocter of great stories, a writer of sparkling dialogue.

WILLARD MACK has a background of show experience that few can point to. He knows audiences.

LAURENCE STALLINGS, author of "The Big Parade", "What Price Glory", "The Cock Eyed World" is writing the dialogue for a powerful yarn for Jack Gilbert based on Wetgen's "Way For A Sailor."

JIM TULLY writes with a pen steeped in the heart's blood of folks in all walks of life. He's been a soldier-of-fortune and now is a best-selling author.

JOHN COLTON, creator of "Sadie Thompson", is one of the great living dramatists and raconteurs.

JEANIE MacPHERSON has written most of the great Cecil DeMille triumphs. "Madame Satan" is her most colorful and gripping story, produced by DeMille for next season!

Broadway's greatest playwrights have been brought to the Talkies by M-G-M. Charles MacArthur, co-author of "Broadway", Edwin Justus Mayer, author of "The Firebrand", Arthur Richman, Ernest Vadja, Samuel Shipman, William Hurlbut, Martin Flavin, John

M-G-M's NATION-WIDE HIT SONGS PLUG YOUR SHOW

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER has revolutionized the song business.

More hit songs have come from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures than all the pictures in the rest of the industry.

This is due to two factors—that the songs are great and that they are properly promoted.

WHENEVER you are told that there will be songs in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures you can rely on the fact that they will be great songs.

All you have to do is to look up the line of song writers under Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract. All that you have to do is to have your usual faith in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—on Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer performance.

AMONG THE great recent acquisitions by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer are Vincent Youmans, composer of "Hit The Deck","Wild Flower" and "Great Day".

He is doing Joan Crawford's next picture.

Jimmy McHugh and Dorothy Fields are the lyric writers for the sensational "Blackbirds" which ran over a year on Broadway which contains such hits as "I Can't Give You Anything But Love Baby" and "I Must Have That Man". They're writing for M-G-M now!

NOT TO MENTION the great operetta composer Herbert Stothart and popular song writers like Joe Myers (remember "California Here I Come") and Harry Woods ("When The Red, Red Robin Comes Along"—"A Little Kiss Each Morning A Little Kiss Each Night"); Clifford Grey who wrote the songs for Marilyn Miller in "Sally".

And of course not to mention the greatest popular musical genius of our time, the one and only Oscar Strauss, composer of "The Chocolate Soldier".

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER airs are in the air and on the air.

NO QUESTION but that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has raised the standard of short subjects throughout the industry!

M-G-M has always attached a feature importance to this part of your program that has resulted in shorts becoming a very definite factor in the building of receipts.

This coming season we step out as never before! Never such a diversity of subjects.

WE'VE ADDED some new elements to our program, a remarkable series of Talking Dog pictures, "Dogville Comedies" a unique cartoon series, "Flip The Frog", Burton Holmes Travel-Talkies and other diversified units.

THESE FACTORS added to Hal Roach Comedies, Laurel-Hardy," Our Gang", Charley Chase and "The Boy Friends" (a swell new idea!) means that M-G-M has planned a year of shorts unequalled in its history.

Together with M-G-M feature service, our short subject line-up makes a year of unmatchable shows!

"DOGVILLE COMEDIES" ARE LATEST BOX-OFFICE SMASH!

DOGVILLE COMEDIES from their very first long run test on a $2 Broadway road-show program this Spring clicked as no other novelty has clicked in years!

"Hot Dogs" played the Earl Carroll Theatre on Broadway and they raved! It moved to the Colony and every critic in town went into hysterics!

Seeing and hearing is believing! Don't take our word for it, but be sure at your first opportunity to preview these remarkable little laugh-getters yourself.

A whole stock company of amazing dogs has been gathered and they TALK!

Zion Myers and Jules White direct them. The first ones are "Hot Dogs", "College Hounds" and "Who Killed Rover?" Six in all.

HAL ROACH'S NEW SHOW-MAN IDEA "THE BOY FRIENDS"

David Sharpe

HAL ROACH has brought out more new ideas in short comedies than any one in pictures.

Every year that smart showman comes through with a swell notion that develops into a money-maker. He realizes that showmanship means keeping them coming with a different slant all the time.

Laurel-Hardy in "Hog Wild" (a Jack Hall Production) Coming Fall Release

HIS LAST prize was Laurel-Hardy and if all signs are correct he's doped out another fast one —"The Boy Friends."

Gale Mannon

Mary Dunn

You're going to hear plenty about this personable group of young men and young women. They're youngsters of the adolescent age, and their comedies are human happy audience stuff.

The first one is "Doctor's Orders". Eight in the series.

LAUREL-HARDY ARE SET FOR BIGGEST SEASON YET!

DIAMONDS in the comedy heavens! They're magnets for a nation that would rather laugh than eat!

LAUREL-HARDY get feature billing in the newspaper ads of America's de luxe theatres. They get it because they mean extra business.

HAL ROACH is prepared to give these grand comedians the greatest production impetus of their career in the new season. M-G-M continues to build their name value with specialized promotion attention and tie-ups of nation-wide value.

Laurel-Hardy gave your folks a heap of happiness this past year. "Blotto," "Brats," both of which played the Capitol, N. Y. and other big 1st runs are just two of a year of successes. "Haywire" is coming soon and its better than their best! Six Laurel-Hardys next season!

CHARLIE CHASE IN 8 HAL ROACH "CLASS" COMEDIES

NOTICE the regularity with which Charlie Chase clicks in his talking comedies!

He makes consistent successes, and as a result, he's built up a following that must be carefully considered in making up a program.

His fine comedies of the past season, "Whispering Whoopee," "All Teed Up," "The Real McCoy" and all the others have had the cumulative value of building Chase into a sure-fire draw!

His latest comedy is "Fast Work" and it's absolutely a scream! That'll help Chase more than ever for next season when he comes through with a flock of laughs for his fans.

HAIL! HAIL! "OUR GANG" IS SURE-FIRE ALWAYS!

THERE are only a few things in pictures that rate editorial mention. Occasionally some feature picture breaks into an editorial column.

Never a short subject—with the exception of "Our Gang" which has become a national institution. "Our Gang" is probably the widest known, the longest-advertised, the most completely established trade-mark in all picture business. Typical of America, they have become part of our nation, and are so regarded the world over.

Every theatre should make it a habit to show every "Our Gang" comedy. Not only because they're delightful entertainment but because America considers them a splendid representation of the best qualities that the motion picture can give.

Eight "Our Gangs" next season, and the stories lined up for them assure the most enjoyable subjects these kids have yet delivered!

M-G-M'S COLORTONE REVUES HAVE WON AUDIENCE FAVOR!

DIVERSITY of short subjects is vitally important for the well balanced program and M-G-M has given intelligent thought to the matter.

In the Colortone Revues you give them the necessary change of pace that makes for good showmanship.

These gorgeous little subjects, entirely in Technicolor, have established themselves with audiences. They've made a real success and they draw business!

M-G-M puts quality into these Revues that you see in the biggest musical features. Each one has name value among the entertainers, lavish handling of sets and good songs.

Colortone Revues like "Climbing the Golden Stairs," "Mexicana" and the others, featured names such as Charles King, Armida,

Gus Edwards, Benny Rubin and many more of importance. Sammy Lee gave them the same dance direction that made him famous with $6.60 Broadway musicals.

Once you play Colortone Revues you'll keep a spot open for others to follow. That's been the experience of all exhibitors.

THE PROMOTION IDEA BEHIND THE M-G-M LUCKY STAR PRODUCT 1930-31

ALLYHOO in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer manner means a type of promotional activity based on common sense and applied where it's to do the most good directly at your box-office.

No waste motions. Every effort, every expenditure has got to show results in stimulating attendance at your box-office.

The line-up of M-G-M product for the new season is of giant stature and the campaign behind it is geared to represent the Bigness of it.

WE'VE GOT a product that will make amusement history. And we're telling the public about it.

M-G-M stands squarely for selling pictures to the public at the spot where the picture plays.

THAT'S WHY we've got the most intensively organized press service in the entire industry, a service built along newspaper lines and recognized by all editors for quality and efficiency of co-operation.

We keep a large staff engaged solely in checking hundreds of newspapers, studying their needs, and giving them what they need. Our check-up reveals that M-G-M garners nation wide publicity space far beyond that of any other company.

IN THE national magazines you'll find that M-G-M stars and pictures lead in representation. Editors merely express the wishes of their readers.

M-G-M's edge in publicity space is the reflection of the supremacy of M-G-M stars and attractions with your public.

AS AN example of direct-to-the public selling there has never been a more successful campaign than the barrage of advertising behind Norma Shearer's "The Divorcee."

Full Page ads from National Campaign on "Divorcee"

CAREFULLY planned advertising, stressing story values, attractively presented—these full page newspaper smashes in prominent centers helped "The Divorcee" to break the many records it did!

THAT'S just the start. That campaign selectively presented is just the beginning. It's just a sample of the kind of localized promotion M-G-M plans for 1930-31.

MILLIONS OF DOLLARS IN NATIONAL HEARST AD DRIVES!

THE POWER of a national Cosmopolitan and Marion Davies campaign in the Hearst newspapers has proved itself time and again!

The sheer weight of full pages, half pages, quarter pages running a week in advance of opening and daily during the engagement is stupendous!

LITERALLY millions of dollars in space has been poured into these newspapers in cities scattered from coast-to-coast. And space used with showmanship wisdom, presenting the allurements of the entertainment in dramatic style. Cosmopolitan newspaper advertising is a model for the industry.

Currently these huge campaigns are helping to make "Caught Short" a sensational success. And they're telling the world about Marion Davies in "The Florodora Girl."

Soon the smashing advertisements on M-G-M's "The Big House" will break in Hearst newspapers heralding the arrival of one of the year's greatest hits.

SERIALS, publicity spreads, press stories—these, too, are part of the million dollar Hearst drives. You couldn't buy such campaigns for a fortune!

There will be the biggest campaign of all behind "Jenny Lind" next season, selling Grace Moore to the American public, telling about this great picture.

And each additional Cosmopolitan Production and Marion Davies picture will likewise be backed by these intensive advertising and publicity drives!

RADIO PLAYS BIG PART IN M-G-M's PROMOTION PROGRAM

OUTSTANDING was the 10-week Tasty Bread tie-up over the Columbia chain, coming from the M-G-M studios. These star-broadcasts were heavily advertised nationally by Tasty Bread.

LAWRENCE Tibbett sang over N. B. C. network in Atwater-Kent hours. Ramon Novarro sang over the Columbia network. These are just a few of many radio tie-ups.

AND don't forget that every week in the year M-G-M Radio Movie Clubs, the pioneers of this activity, continue to broadcast from 22 cities.

THE LIVING BILLBOARD on Broadway and in Los Angeles for "Hollywood Revue"; previews on ocean liners; Chamber of Commerce Goodwill tie-ups—these are just a sample of M-G-M live-wire exploitation.

M-G-M alone of all companies maintains a year-round exploitation force in the field cooperating with exhibitors.

Young America
HIMSELF

EDDIE QUILLAN is the personification of Young America himself. His breezy personality and carefree, spontaneous humor in THE SOPHOMORE made that production a comedy sensation that swamped the box offices with a flood of dollars. Hard-boiled critics and preview audiences acclaim NIGHT WORK an even more hilarious comedy than THE SOPHOMORE.

It is one long riot of laughs, zippy action, rollicking fun, with a wholesome sprinkling of heartthrobs. There are spectacular cabaret sequences with specialty dance numbers and corking song hits, and a snappy number sung by Eddie Quillan and Sally Starr. And through it all runs a story that is human and compelling in its naturalness.
